Megan Bradley and Jen Dow swam excellent 100 Fly races, recording times of 1:04.26 and 1:06.26 respectively. Danielle Sullivan (58.02) and Casey Bane (59.03) took 1-2 in the 100 Free, holding a three-point lead. The women extended the lead in the 100 Back as Meredith Bathgate got her second win and second school record with a time of 1:04.24. Erin Miller and Amy Peterson followed in third and fourth places, both in season best times. Megan Bradley and Amy Draper recorded season bests in the 500 Free, and Colleen Roberts and Robin Woollens did the same in the 100 Breast. The meet was tied at 94 going into the last event: the 400 Free Relay; an infamous event for the Sho'women. Yet the team of Danielle Sullivan (whose leadoff split of 57.4 broke her own school record in the 100 Free), Casey Bane, Jenn Voss, and Meredith Bathgate won the event, and therefore the meet, in a school record 3:54.48. This was the first time a W.C. relay had all four women split under 1:00. Coach Kim Lessard said, "It was a great win for the women's program. They really swam together as a team and everyone scored. I'm very proud of them."

The enthusiasm carried over to Tuesday night. Erin Miller said, "Since we swam so well Saturday, we were psyched for Widener and defeated them." This was the first time Washington had beaten Widener in four years.

Megan Bradley was a triple-winner; she won the 1000 Free. Jen Dow and Amy Peterson took third and fifth. Danielle Sullivan, Barbara Murphy, and Amy Draper took 1-2-4 in the 200 Free. Meredith Bathgate and Casey Bane swam 26.80 and 26.87 to place second and third in the 50 Free. Megan Bradley and Jen Dow both swam fantastic 200 Flys, placing first and second in 2:21 and 2:26 respectively. Danielle Sullivan (57.7), Casey Bane (58.9), and Barbara Murphy (59.3) swam fast 100 Freestyles, placing 2-3-4. Meredith Bathgate, Erin Miller, and Denise Hakanson took 2-4-5 in the 200 Back, and Megan Bradley, Amy Draper, and Amy Peterson placed 1-3-4 in the 500 Free. Colleen Roberts swam an impressive 2:45 to place second in the 200 Breast.

The potent W.C. team of Danielle Sullivan, Casey Bane, Jenn Voss, and Meredith Bathgate won the 200 Free relay to end the meet. The Sho'women hope to end the semester 6-0 as they travel to Elizabethtown this weekend. As Miller says, "We're looking forward to Saturday." Ω

Campus Christian Fellowship & Trinity Lutheran Church

Non-alcoholic
Super Bowl Party

Big Screen TV, Free Food & Drink, & Free Admission
4 p.m. in the Hynson Study Lounge
Everyone's welcome to come and check it out

Humphrey's Point Farm
on scenic Swan Creek near Rock Hall offers a full care event horse facility with a private atmosphere. We have two stalls available at reasonable rates. Also TB event horses for lease and for sale. Instruction, trailering.
639-2832

Robert Pennington Salon for Hairdressing
Presents...
Sandra & Dana
50% OFF
113 South Cross Street
778-9747

Smokeless Tobacco Cessation Program
When: Tuesdays, 7 p.m. to 8 p.m. for four sessions
Dates: January 31, February 7, February 14, February 21
Place: Classroom in the Lifetime Fitness Center
Program content will include: Effects of tobacco on oral and dental health presented by Dr. Bob Jones; Withdrawal; Quit Methods; Blood Pressure and carbon monoxide monitoring; Tips and tools to quit; Relaxation techniques; Relapse prevention; Free survival kit; Free oral screening for those who attend all sessions.
For more information please call the Health Service at Ext. 7261. Pre-registration is not required.

Women's basketball struggles to 5-9 record

Erika K. Ford

Washington women's basketball has struggled throughout the winter season, finally holding a 5-9 record midway through. Their Centennial record is 1-5.

The young team, consisting of five freshmen and four sophomores, is looking forward and keeping their eyes on victory.

"We're definitely a team that plays well together," Coach Lamar Cole said. "We're strong in size team-wise, and our strengths are inside, playing defense."

The Sho'women's latest match-up was away against Gettysburg (11-1, 5-1 Conference) last Saturday. Hosting Gettysburg won 85-63.

Last week, Washington's women also played away at Ursinus and Johns Hopkins, but came away without wins. Falling 86-70 to Hopkins, and 72-54 to Ursinus, the Sho'women struggled against top Conference leaders.

Heading back to campus two weeks before classes started, the basketball team played four games over winter break. A strong showing against Gallaudet, with 43% field goal shooting in the first half, led to a Washington victory (72-58).

Freshman Megan Miller and sophomore Shoni Taylor led the team in field goal attempts with 17. Taylor grabbed 19 points, while Miller and freshman Karen Sieger had 12. Sophomore LeeAnn Lezzer led all players with three three-pointers.

Coach Cole said, "The sophomores have stepped up in leadership role. And we're very good at out-rebounding our opponents."

Washington also made a strong showing against Wesley, coming away with a 59-46 win in early January. Taylor, Lezzer, Sieger, and freshman Kristen Snell led the Sho'women in scoring.

Over break, Washington also lost to Lebanon Valley, edged by nine points, 70-61, and to Dickinson, 77-52.

"Our weaknesses lie in our inability to take care of the ball. We've had too many turnovers at crucial times in the games," Coach Cole noted. "But we're still shooting for the playoffs."

In a late game on Wednesday, Sho'women basketball went up against Haverford in Hume. No score is available at this time.

Tomorrow the team travels to Swarthmore, and on Tuesday they host Bryn Mawr at 7:30 p.m. Ω

To any racquetball enthusiasts out there:

If you enjoy an exciting and challenging match of racquetball, sign up for the Washington College Racquetball Tournament. It will be held on Feb. 2, 3, and 6 at 7 p.m. Each match will consist of three games. The best two out of three wins. The entrance fee is only $2.00.

Send Blitzmail to Robin Ridgway or call x8639. We hope to see you out.

It is not necessary to have your own equipment. Racquets will be provided.

What a long trip it's been

The men's basketball team makes it to 5 and 1 in the Conference

Peggy Bunker

The men's basketball team has put in an extraordinary effort this season to play well and dominate. It did just this when it played in the home-based Wild Goose Classic. The Sho'men played tough in their first game against Wilmington, to go to the championship game against Rowan College which had defeated Cabrini, last year's defending Wild Goose champion, by a significant margin. Rowan is ranked fifth in the country and Washington played well against them in the final match. The Sho'men played well in the first half, matching points with Rowan. In the second half, Rowan hit a scoring spurt and Washington never recovered. Washington did place second in the tournament, Cabrini defeated Wilmington to take third, and Wilmington placed fourth.

The week of finals proved to be tough for the men in more ways than exams. The Sho'men took on Division I foe UMBC on their home court. UMBC was a tough team with a powerful defense, including a 7'2" center who blocked some key Washington shots early. Washington had very good shots and played well but just could not take the lead. The Sho'men started with the twin towers of Ken Lapp and Jerry Davis and the skilled Derek Cuff on defense. As guards, Adam Poe and Ben Harris were the top scorers along with freshman Matt King who came off the bench to score six.

Washington was down at the half 37-19, making only six out of 27 from the field and only one from the three-point range.

The second half was a little better for the Sho'men, but it was to UMBC's favor. Washington was nine for 28 from the field and three for seven from the three-point line. The game was not the best showing for the Sho'men, who shot 27% and 33% from the field and three-point line respectively. Washington shot a respectable 75% from the free-throw line and scored in the double digits with 19 points and was the only one of the Sho'men to get more than six points. Washington's 6'4" forward Jerry Davis and 6'6" center Ken Lapp were unable to score due to UMBC's powerhouse on defense. This was a Division I team and the final score was 71-45, marking UMBC's second win this season. Washington played well but just could not sink their shots.

The Moravian Tournament, held after New Year's, was the first game for the Sho'men after break. They played host to Moravian in the first game. Washington did not come out very strong. They held in though and were down by only three at the half. Then in the second half period, Washington faltered and trailed by 15. But with five minutes left in regulation, Washington picked up their level of play and tied the score. The Sho'men could not get a comfortable lead and Moravian came back to win it in the last two minutes. 69-66.

Ben Harris had a 16-point game, with four three-pointers. Adam Poe had 10 points, two of the shots coming from the three-point line. Derek Cuff was also in double digits with 15 points. Mark Awantang had an impressive game on the boards, grabbing five points, one block and one steal.

Washington went on to play Drew in the game for third place at the Tournament. The Sho'men came out strong for this match. At the half they were down by eight, 33-25. But the second half was all Sho'men as they caught and took the lead. Drew came within a few points of the lead and when they took the lead by one in the few remaining seconds, Ben Harris was fouled and made both free throws for the lead and the win: Harris had 19 points for the game and six rebounds, five of them defensive.

Ed Hicks and Mark Awantang each had six rebounds and combined for 10 points. Jerry Davis and Adam Poe combined for six rebounds and 12 points. Derek Cuff had the second-highest rebounds with five and 11 points. Cuff and Awantang each had one block as well, the only two for the Sho'men.

The Sho'men returned home for their next three games, all of which were victories.

The first of the three was against Gallaudet, a non-Conference but competitive Division III team. Washington started the game off slowly, but the Sho'men quickly got into their game to take the early lead. At the half the score was in Washington's favor 41-24.

The Sho'men did not let up in the second half. They scored 50 points to Gallaudet's 30, for the win of 91-57. The Sho'men shot 51% from the field compared to Gallaudet's 33%.

Edmund Hicks had his season high of four steals, as well as seven points. In the double digits, Derek Cuff had the most with 21 points, including three three-pointers. Cuff contributed defensively with five rebounds. Adam Poe made two from the three-point line and, combining free throw and shots from the field, had 19 points. Ben Harris played 24 minutes for 10 points and two rebounds. Edmund Hicks made nine points for the Sho'men.

Mark Awantang and Jerry Davis each had six rebounds and together nine points. Freshmen James Carpenter and Joseph Burke each made six points and Carpenter had four rebounds. Another impressive freshman, Brad Burkhart, had nine points including a three-pointer. Freshmen Joseph McDonald, Greg Metrinko, and Matt King played tough defense to help Washington in its win over Gallaudet.

Washington's hard work paid off when they took on Conference rival Dickinson, and they had worked to came together. They came out ready to play and dominated from the start.

Washington led by 10 at the half and outshot Dickinson 52%-29%. Washington's shot selection was good. They shot 28% from the three-point line.

The second half was an improvement for both teams. Washington shot 56% in the three-point region and 53% from the field line.

Four Sho'men were in double digits for scoring: Harris – 15, Hicks – 13, Poe – 16, and Cuff – 22. Cuff also had six rebounds. Poe led the team with seven rebounds. Awantang, Poe, Harris and Davis each had three rebounds. Bradd Burkhart had four rebounds and three points. Harris had a season high of eight assists against Dickinson. Cuff had a season high of five steals as well.

The Sho'men next hosted another Conference rival, Ursinus College. Ursinus is a very tough team, but in the end the Sho'men proved they were stronger. Washington took the lead in the last five minutes to win the game 69-66.

Jerry Davis came up big on defense with nine rebounds and one block. Ed Hicks was close behind with seven rebounds and the only other Washington block of the game. Ken Lapp played solid defense with some key defensive rebounds. Ben Harris and Derek Cuff each had six rebounds, 14 and eight points respectively. Adam Poe and Ed Hicks were the big scorers, Hicks scored 15 and Poe scored 20 for the Sho'men.

The game was left up to foul shots and possession as usual in a close game. Washington had to shut down Ursinus' strong outside shooting while keep the lane blocked. With 9.1 seconds left, Ursinus's smallest player – 5'6" Bernie, (Chris Hargett's pal) made a three-pointer that put them down by one. Washington got the ball back and Adam Poe was fouled. He sunk both foul shots to put Washington up by three. With the clock running out, Ursinus missed the tying three and Washington won their second Conference game in a row.

Johns Hopkins was Washington's next game, another Conference match. The Sho'men did not come out ready to play and the Blue Jays took an early lead. Washington came back to be ahead at the half by two.

Hopkins came back strong and so did Washington. But Hopkins got the early lead and Washington had to play catch up. The key to the game was in free throws. Washington was 11 out of 25 from the free-throw line and lost by three, 71-68.

Jerry Davis had a season high of 13 points and backed that up with an impressive ten 10 rebounds. Adam Poe had a season best of 11 rebounds. Cuff came up with 16 points, Harris with 14, and Ed Hicks with 13. The Sho'men played well once they got into their game, but could not pull off the win. The game was the second win of the season for Hopkins.

The Sho'men redeemed their top Conference status against Gettysburg at home this past week.

The game was all Gettysburg for the first five minutes as they took an early lead. Coach Finnegan made an unprecedented move and rotated all five starters in and got the freshmen men and one sophomore. Mark Awantang, James Carpenter, Bradd Burkhart, Matt King, and Joe McDonald came in and were energized. James Carpenter stole the ball, a season first and made the lay-up. He then made a jumper on the next trip down the court. James made another steal and passed off, to add to his season high. The points scored by the subs, and defense that they must have inspired the rest of the team. The starters were rotated back in and Washington began to rattle Gettysburg.

The players were then rotated in and out in different combinations to shake up Gettysburg. Bradd Burkhart hustled inside for a season high of eight rebounds and 11 points. Washington was down by two at the half.

After the half Ben Harris opened with a three-pointer to put the Sho'men up for the first time. Jerry Davis became very aggressive on defense with Ed Hicks as they had 12 and six rebounds respectively. Davis had a key block, one of his four, which got the team rolling again as they increased their lead.

In the remaining minutes they moved ahead by nine as Gettysburg tried to get the ball back by fouling. Adam Poe made nine out of his 10 free throws, many in these remaining minutes, to keep Washington ahead. Davis, Hicks and Harris were also put on the line to increase Washington's lead. Paul Kenny was rotated in and played solid defense in the final minutes to keep Washington's lead. The final score was 74-61.

Washington is now 5-1 in the Conference and at the top of their half of the Conference. Coach Finnegan reminded them that the next four Conference games are tough in themselves but also on the road. The Sho'men play home next in a double-header starting at 5:30 against Wesley. The Sho'men have a good chance of winning their Conference this season. Their last game on February 17 at home against P&M will be the hardest game. P&M is ranked #1 in Division III. Be sure not to miss the last games of the '94-'95 basketball season! Ω

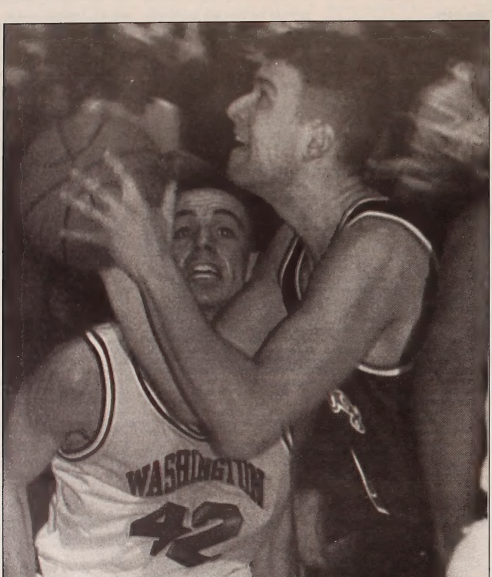

Photo by Kelly Youngblood

Derek Cuff prepares to spring into action.

Winners in The Elm's Cheer for Pizza contest at last week's swim meet are Erric Hetzer, Dave Kraft, Dave Czekaj and Kim Lessard. Thanks to the judges, Sam Emmit and Amy Osborne.

Scores

Women's Swimming

Washington 189
Bryn Mawr 71

Washington 103
Dickinson 86

Men's Swimming

Washington 145.5
Dickinson 54.5

Men's Basketball

Washington 45
UMBC 71

Washington 62
Moravian 66

Washington 57
Drew 56

Washington 91
Gallaudet 57

Washington 68
Hopkins 71

Washington 74
Dickinson 67

Washington 69
Ursinus 66

Washington 74
Gettysburg 61

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Friday, January 27	Saturday, January 28	Tuesday, January 31	Thursday, February 2
Tonight!	Women's basketball @ Swarthmore, 6 p.m.	Men's basketball vs. Wesley, 5:30 p.m.	Women's basketball @ Philadelphia Bible, 7 p.m.
Swimming @ St. Mary's, 6 p.m.	Men's basketball @ Swarthmore, 8 p.m.	Women's basketball vs. Bryn Mawr, 7:30 p.m.	Women's swimming vs Millersville, 6 p.m.

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number Fifteen

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Fireside chats at Lit. House

Gender Studies on a Monday afternoon

On Monday, January 30, the O'Neill Literary House was host to the semester's second installment of The Monday Series of lectures and panel discussions. Entitled "m., f., pl. : Gender Studies at Washington College," the discussion was open to the Washington College community. The panel consisted of members of the Faculty and Administration as well as members of the student body.

The discussion began with the introduction of each panel member and a brief description of an experience which inspired each to become involved in Gender Studies. Associate Professor of Anthropology Jeanette Sherbondy, Chair of the Gender Studies program, told of how, as she grew up, her father joked about the incompetency of women drivers. She was confused by this, as her mother was a fine driver. This disparity led her into exploring gender studies and related issues.

Music Professor Kathleen Mills, who has taught a course on "Women in Music" twice and taught a course this fall called "Music, Gender, and Society: The Mendelssohns and the Schumanns," followed with a description of a venture to purchase sheet music by female composers. She was greeted by the storekeeper with the challenge, "Name one." While in college, when she wanted to take more classes than were normally allowed. Told by her adviser that she should take them for audit, she did just that. It was not until later that she discovered that a male student had simply applied to the dean and been allowed special permission to take extra classes. This discrepancy was what got her interested in gender studies.

Assistant Dean Beverly Wolff, who was a student representative of the Women's Studies Advisory Committee at the University of Delaware and an instructor in the Women's Studies Interdisciplinary Program at U. of D., related that her inspiration took place in high school when she was a sports reporter for her school newspaper. She was not allowed to accompany the football team to an away game because she would have been the only female traveling with them. She was also excluded from a Student Government trip because she was the only female officer.

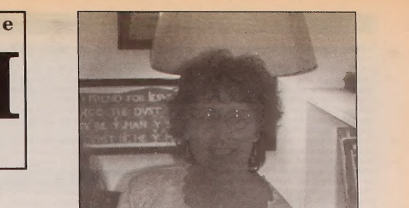

Photo by Kelly Youngblood

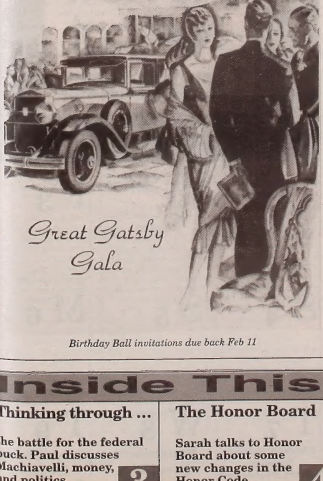

Dr. Jeanette Sherbondy, moderator of Monday's Gender Studies panel discussion

These experiences led to her interest in gender studies.

Philosophy and Religion Professor Kevin Brien, author of Marx, Reason, and the Art of Freedom, became interested in gender studies while writing his doctoral dissertation. He realized that he was leaving out an important

See "Gender" on 3

Preparations for Gatsby Gala indicate best Birthday Ball ever

Birthday Ball invitations due back Feb 11

William Denton III

With just over a week of preparation time remaining, the Washington College community has set its sights high for the annual Birthday Ball, which will take place Saturday, February 18 in the Cain Gymnasium. This year's Ball, the "Great Gatsby Gala," is fully Student Government Association-sponsored, unlike those in previous years. Last year's Ball was financed primarily by donations. According to SGA Treasurer Elizabeth Likens, the Birthday Ball will be "student-run from the start to the finish; start-up to breakdown ... and we're looking for help." Because of a basketball game scheduled to take place in the LFC on the night prior to the ball, set-up for the event will not begin until 10 p.m. on February 17. This leaves about 20 hours for the entire (rather extravagant) set-up to be organized. By a most unfortunate coincidence, February 17 is also Bid Night for all six on-campus Greek organizations, so, without the services of any fraternity and sorority members, there is an increased demand for help setting up for the festivities.

A formal dinner will take place prior to the Ball, from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. The Ball itself, which will begin at 9 p.m. and last until approximately 1 a.m., will feature performances by Doc Scantlin and his Imperial Palms Orchestra, Washington College's Jazz musicians (the students who performed at Jazz Night), the Dance Club, and the Riverside Players. The entertainment starts at 9 p.m., so stu-

See "Ball" on 4

First-Year Fantasy TAFFY sticks to it

Kate Meagher

TAFFY, the Task Force for the First-Year Experience and Distribution, has met several times this semester to continue developing plans for a new first-year program. Their most recent meeting took place Thursday, February 2.

TAFFY is reviewing many areas of the first year in which change seems desirable, such as the curriculum, teaching methods, living conditions, co-curricular and extra-curricular activities, and student life.

During the fall semester, TAFFY solicited and received input from members of the Washington College community. The task force will use these responses to create a first-year program that reflects the College's mission statement (found in the Washington College catalogue), the history of the College, and what is anticipated for its future.

Planning for course development will happen this summer if TAFFY receives the necessary grant money, said Assistant Dean Beverly Wolff. The courses will be in place for fall and first-year students will have the titles in time for adviser assignments.

According to Wolff, yesterday's meeting involved the discussion of forming "an outline for a working paper that would help the Faculty get a sense of the kind of first-year program that might be constructed."

The working paper "will help the Faculty and professional staff when they meet with TAFFY at the forum

See "TAFFY" on 5

Inside This Week's Elm

Thinking through ... the battle for the federal buck. Paul discusses Machiavelli, money, and politics. 3

The Honor Board
Sarah talks to Honor Board about some new changes in the Honor Code. 4

Dropped A Whole Degree
Ginsberg? In a music review column? Aaron tells us all about it. 7

We Get You Wilma!
Jeff & Kevin don't get you any discounts but they do manage to find Wilma. 9

How can anyone say there is nothing to do on campus?

I was talking with a friend from grade school last night for the first time in many years. She just graduated from Auburn University in Alabama. Her first question after finding out that I was attending a college almost half the size of my high school was "Are you insane? What is there to do at a college that size?" I just laughed, of course. That is the first question out of everyone's mouth when I mention the small size of Washington College and the surrounding town. Luckily, I have an answer for them.

Despite the common conception that nothing ever happens here at W.C. or in sleepy, little Chestertown, there is always plenty for me to do. I am not referring to the amount of work required for my classes, or even the time and energy expended by myself on The Elm, or in The Cove. Rather, I am referring to the two or three hours I attend every week, the poetry readings, the drama productions, the various organizations meetings, and, of course, the myriad social events. In fact, with all of the things going on around campus, I have to be a little selective with my time; I can't possibly attend every event that warrants my attention.

Everyone has a gripe about Washington College. One of the most often expressed dissatisfactions with the College is the lack of things to do. There are a few of us, on the other hand, who can't find enough time in our schedules for all of the events, social or otherwise, that we would like to attend. It would seem that the same students attend most of the functions. Those faces seen at the Monday Series lectures at the Literary House are often the same faces seen in the Hynson Lounge for the William James Forum lectures. Those who attend the numerous poetry readings also traipse down to Tawes to see the drama productions.

Now, I know boring. Grade school was boring. Chris, the friend whom I mentioned earlier, and I attended an all-girls boarding school in Jacksonville, Florida. The school was, if you can believe it, significantly smaller than Washington College, despite the inclusion of grades six through twelve. Try to picture this: about 500 girls from the ages of 11 to 18 living on a campus about half the size of ours with nothing more exciting than Friday night trips to the mall. Scott and Brian and a few of my other male friends might find the thought very exciting. I lived it. It was not fun. Chris agrees with me; it was not fun at all.

My High School was also beyond boring. The school was huge, big, bigger than big. There were more people in my graduating class than have ever attended a reading at the Lit. House. Despite this fact, there was never anything to do. Homecoming, prom, graduation. That was about it. Comparatively speaking, Washington College is a mecca of entertainment.

This coming week alone there are numerous things to keep us occupied. The William James Forum will be presenting The New Political Scenario, a lecture by former Maryland Governor Harry Hughes and John Moag '77 Tuesday night. Also on Tuesday, the W.C. Association of Life-Long Learning is sponsoring a trip to the Kreeger Museum in Washington, D.C. The freshman reading will be Wednesday night. On Thursday, the Cavani String Quartet will be performing in Tawes Theatre. There are also numerous sporting events to attend, as well as the film series.

On top of all the lectures, poetry readings, concerts and such, there are a plethora of campus organizations to get involved with: Hands Out, GALA, Campus Christian Fellowship, the Riverside Players, the Writers' Union, Amnesty International, Peer Educators, just to name a few. There are recreational sports to play or even just watch. There is a club or organization for just about everyone on campus.

If the activities on campus are not enough for you, there are plenty of things to do in town (shopping in all of the quaint stores, flying kites at the park, watching the boats float down the river) or in nearby cities. Washington, D.C. offers something for everyone; a multitude of museums, from art to natural history, every kind of store, restaurant, and bar, movie theaters, parks, drama productions, and lots of people to watch. Annapolis, Wilmington and even Dover provide additional entertainment possibilities.

In short, how can anyone say there is nothing to do on campus?

WRITER'S UNION T-Shirts ON SALE NOW for $10.00 to be donated to:

THE EDITH WHARTON CAT FUND

Contact Mr. Day or Marianne Culbertson to buy your T-Shirt NOW!

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink

News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Editor
Mindie J. Kaplan and Sarah Bell
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Erika Ford
Layout Editor
Brian Matheson

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Joshua T. Lawrence, IV
Office Manager
Steven Kim
Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and cruz do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BitsMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8585.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

To the Editor:

The Gender Studies debate:

Koon responds to Walker

I am writing in response to Ryan Walker's rambling polemic against Gender Studies at W.C. Yes, it is true that the English Department has two courses cross-listed under the Gender Studies minor. Even if we eliminate these, however, we find that the English department is offering a wide variety of courses. If Mr. Walker finds being an English major too limiting, he should take a good look at the much more limited selection of courses offered to students majoring in, say, one of the natural sciences.

I also take exception to Mr. Walker simply ruling out taking any Gender Studies courses on the basis of some nebulous ideological objection. I'm a Marxist, and I disagree with much of what I've been taught here at W.C. - but that doesn't prevent me from taking courses, and it doesn't prevent me from learning from professors I happen to disagree with. The whole idea of limiting one's course selection options based on a vague stereotype of what the content of the courses is to be runs counter to the spirit of the liberal arts. Gender Studies addresses an important aspect of the human condition, and it is a shame Mr. Walker has chosen not to avail himself of the opportunity to learn something of a subject of which he is so obviously ignorant.

In closing, I object to Mr. Walker's separation of the W.C. student body into "gender" and "non-gender" students. If he should take just a moment to peer inside his pants he will discover how wrong he is.

-Scott Koon

The William James Forum
presents
Former Maryland Governor
Harry Hughes
W.C. Alumnus
John Moag

The New Political Scenario

Hynson Lounge, 7:30 p.m.

This Week on Campus
February 3 - 9

Film Series
Bhaji on the Beach
Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon., 7:30 p.m.

Friday 3

Saturday 4

Sunday 5

Monday 6

Tuesday 7
The New Political Scenario,
Harry Hughes and John Moag '77, Hynson, 7:30 p.m.

Wednesday 8
Freshman Reading, Lit House, 8 p.m.

Thursday 9
Cavani String Quartet, Tawes Theatre, 8 p.m.

"If we tear the country in half, we can pick up the bigger half."
Pat Buchanan, in a memo to Richard Nixon

Such Machiavellian sentiments are not often expressed, either openly or privately, in politics. Nonetheless, they remain a powerful influence on political decision-making. This has been clearly illustrated in recent weeks, as the new Republican majority in Congress debates what federal programs to cut. Two institutions which have been recommended for defunding are the National Endowment for the Arts and the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

For the record, we are not talking here about eliminating PBS entirely. Federal funds account for forty percent of the annual budget of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, and about fourteen percent of PBS's budget. If those funds were taken away, public broadcasting would be wounded, but it would recover.

The NEA, however, would be eliminated. As you might have guessed, a great deal of pressure has been placed on the NEA to stop granting taxpayers' money to artists whose work most taxpayers find to be offensive, boring or repulsive. This is not nearly so easy as it sounds, as anyone knows who has actually examined the process by which public money has come into the hands of bizarre characters like Andres Serrano and the late Robert Mapplethorpe. According to Robert Hughes, "... Serrano had received a prize of $15,000 from the South-Eastern Center for Contemporary Art (SECCA) in Winston-Salem, NC. SECCA had received the money for this award – before its jury decided to give it to Serrano–from the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA). It came without strings, and nobody in the NEA had the least role in choosing Serrano as winner."1 As for the infamous Mapplethorpe retrospective, "The NEA support money for Mapplethorpe went to the Institute of Contemporary Art at the University of Pennsylvania, which had curated the exhibit in the first place."2 To make a long story short, a substantial portion of NEA grants are made to perfectly respectable cultural institutions, which sometimes choose to bestow them upon controversial artists. What is the Endowment supposed to say? "Please do not use this money in connection with any artist whose work might be deemed offensive"?

The issue is not whether our culture will survive. Art and music have flourished under much worse circumstances, and will certainly survive this epidemic of small-mindedness. (Digression: This year the budget calls for $285 million for the CPB and $168 million for the NEA. These programs combined cost the average taxpayer roughly the equivalent of one AriZona per year. By way of comparison, there is talk of a $25 billion increase in defense spending and an emergency $40 billion loan to the Mexican government.) Museums and orchestras would be badly hurt by the loss of the NEA, but, like public broadcasting, they would pull through. I do have a philosophical disagreement with the unspoken assumption that any aspect of our culture which can't be handled by the marketplace is not worth having, but that is not the real problem.

The real problem is the tone of the debate. House Speaker Newt Gingrich and others have been trying to make it sound as though the only people who watch public television or listen to NPR are "elites" and "elitists," as opposed to "ordinary people" who, we are to believe, watch nothing but football and listen to nothing but country music and Rush Limbaugh.

I, personally, happen to like a lot of what public broadcasting has to offer, and I think that having grown up in Chestertown pretty much disqualifies me from being a member of any "cultural elite." Nor am I alone in this. Several independent polls have shown that around 76% of the public opposes eliminating funds for public broadcasting. That's a pretty large "elite." It probably includes the millions of parents who daily entrust their pre-school children to Barney or the Sesame Street crew. For these people, it wouldn't be quite the same if these shows were interrupted by ads for the latest $75 plastic toy or psychedelically colored breakfast cereal. It may also be that the audience for television and radio that does not aim for the lowest common denominator in mind and spirit is larger than Gingrich would like to admit.

The tone of the debate is particularly disturbing in light of the fact that last week (too late, alas, for me to comment on it) the House of Representatives voted to pass the balanced budget amendment. There is now a real possibility that our government could be compelled to perform the Herculean feat of balancing the budget by fiscal year 2002. If this happens, funding for the CPB and the NEA will most likely disappear, either this year or later, out of sheer fiscal necessity. Congress will also have to cut spending on things like AIDS research, Medicare, highway maintenance, disaster relief, law enforcement, and much, much more. Just to top things off, taxes will also go up – again out of sheer necessity.

If this is what it will take to safeguard the nation's future, then so be it. Let it be understood, however, that we are no longer talking about "pork" for "lobbyists" representing "special interests." When you look at the most powerful, arrogant and high-handed lobbies, 'who do they represent? Doctors, veterans, teachers, farmers, retirees, small businesses-in short, the people who (as Clinton would say) "work hard and play by the rules" or enjoy "the quiet miracle of a normal life." I myself have lobbied Congress for a share of the budget (specifically, library funding). As Jonathan Rauch has said, "At some point one must throw up one's hands and concede that the hoary dichotomy between special interests and 'us' has become merely rhetoric."3

There are three possible ways for Americans to react to the fiscal regulations the balanced budget amendment will require. We could decide that we really didn't need the money that badly, and learn to live with smaller budgets. We could decide that balancing the budget isn't worth the cost, and demand that our "pork" be returned to us, even if it means repealing the new amendment. Or we could fight both and nail over the few scraps of federal money that remain, further disintegrating an already fragmented society in the process.

Which one of these is most likely? According to Rauch, if the amendment is passed "they (i.e. the lobbyists) will be forced to compete more fiercely for money."4 In such a hostile atmosphere, rhetoric will become all the more fierce and divisive. The "losers" may well abandon the political process in disgust, lowering an already dismal voter turnout level. When the "winners" realize that budgetary constraints prevent them from getting most of what they want, they too may opt out.

The government should still pursue a balanced budget as a goal. It should, however, do so wisely. It is not yet too late to oppose those forces and individuals bent on tearing the country apart in the hopes of getting the best pieces.

1Hughes, Robert, Culture of Complaint, New York: Warner Books, 1993, p.159-160.

2Ibid., p.162-163. (I found the Buchanan quote which begins this column on page 49 of this work.)

3Rauch, Jonathan, "The Hyperpluralism Trap," The New Republic, 6/6/94, p.25.

4Ibid., p.23. Ω

Thinking through the battle for the federal buck.

by Paul Briggs

The Faculty Speaks:

Jeanette E. Sherbondy, Associate Professor of Anthropology, Chair of Gender Studies

All of us acquire a gender identity. It's a primary aspect of our personal and social identity that begins with our earliest socialization from birth. Before we begin school, we already have a strong sense of our gender roles – the behavior that our culture considers appropriate – and of our social worth. Our gender identity can shape to the ways in which we learn to talk and walk, behave and think for our entire lives whether we are conscious of it or not.

An increased awareness of the influences of gender on human thought and behavior has led academics to research gender and to write books and many more have been integrating gender research and discussion of gender issues into their teaching.

We are fortunate to have at Washington College a number of faculty in the arts, humanities, sciences, and social sciences who are professionally active in the area of gender. Emilie Amt's interests are in the historical development of gendered behavior and ideology in Western Europe. She has recently published the book Women's Lives in Medieval Europe. Rachel Fink is a historian studying and teaching about issues of women in music since 1987 and she has performed many works by prominent women composers at Washington College. She's preparing an exciting new concert on February 17th of the music of Clara and Robert Schumann, Felix Mendelssohn, and his sister Fanny Hensel. Linda Brien is working on a new book: a synthesis of Marx, Nietsche, Buddhism/Zen Buddhism and some feminist philosophical thought. Amy Bentley recently published a translation into French of a work by the feminist literary scholar Susan Rubin Suleiman. Kevin McKillop and his students are studying the interrelationships between gender and racism. Mike Kerchner's research contributes to our understanding of the complex relationship between biological sexual traits and culturally constructed gender. According to a national survey in 1989-1990, the Washington College faculty conduct research and write on gender issues at a rate a little above the national average and our male faculty is much more active than the average male faculty.

Our faculty has been teaching courses dealing with gender for many years at Washington College. In 1987 interested students and faculty met to discuss the possibility of a Gender Studies program. Ever since, there have been about 6 courses offered a year on an average. However, we were one of the last colleges to establish a formal program. Thanks to student and faculty efforts last year, we now have a multidisciplinary minor in Gender Studies. Twenty-five faculty in more than ten departments are involved.

Alumna Lynn Chifford was the first to design her own Gender Studies minor and now there are three more declared minors under the new program that began this past fall.

The minor consists of two required courses: Gender in Western Civilization to 1600 that will be taught by Professor Amt for the first time next year and Sex, Gender, and Kinship, an anthropology course that I teach. The other four courses for the minor may be chosen from any of the regular or special topics courses that are either cross-listed as GEN (Gender Studies) or that have been approved on an individual basis. This semester there are 8 courses that can be applied to the minor. Some new exciting ones are in the planning stages for next year – a Gender Studies seminar on Multiculturalism and Gender that will be taught by nine or ten professors and a course on Women and Sport in which professors Tom Finnegan and Karen Dandurand will examine the relationship between the 19th century feminist movements and the development of women's sports.

Is Gender Studies just about women and feminism? NO! Every human being has gender and our program has a great deal of being inclusive: male gender, female gender, gender concerns of gays and lesbians, and the gender constructions of other cultures, such as the muxe of the Zapotec and the berdache of the Plains Indians. All cultures shape their gender roles and gender ideology differently and those constructs evolve constantly too – a fascinating and important human trait that is an academic concern. Ω aspect of study, that of gender studies. Brien was on sabbatical last year working on Zen Buddhism and some aspects of feminine theory.

"Gender," from 1

Rachael Fink, a W.C. senior and the first Gender Studies minor at Washington College, spoke of her mother's reverse discrimination toward men. Growing up with this attitude made Rachael aware of the importance of gender studies issues.

Taryn Venner, a W.C. sophomore and also a Gender Studies minor, first became interested in gender studies when she talked to Professor Fessler at the club fair in her freshman year. Taryn found Fessler's Gender Studies Reading Group and read some feminist theory and realized that the concepts she was learning were already familiar to her, thinking because of her high school education at an all-girls' school. She discovered that she could apply gender studies angles to her papers for all of her classes. It has always been important to her to recognize gender studies.

The panel was open for questions from those in attendance. Some joined in the discussion of personal experiences with gender studies issues, while a few others expressed some concern over the definition of gender studies and its purpose in the College's curriculum. Their questions were answered by those on the panel, all of whom argued for continued work in the Gender Studies program at Washington College.

The next Monday Series event, A Reading in Memory of Ralph Ellison (1914-1994) and in celebration of Black History Month, will be on February 13 in the Lit. House. Ω

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

In this, the second Student Government Association meeting of the spring semester, some personal changes were made. Inevitably, every year, there are a few senators who do not return for the second semester of their tenure; replacements for the absent senators (two) were confirmed in tuesday's meeting. Bob Brown was confirmed as the new senator from Middle Hall, replacing Mark Murphy, and Alicia Carbery was confirmed as a new senator from Minta Martin, replacing Amy Lutz. In addition, Christina Chiarchiaro has has been confirmed as the new President of the sophomore class, replacing Leticia Lyford-Pike.

Elections for next year's executive board are rapidly approaching. Four of the seven officers will graduate this semester, and the remaining three (Treasurer Elizabeth Likens, Honor Board Chair Dougie Beckwith, and Student Life Chair Rob Moran) will not occupy the same posts they occupy this year.

Petitions for the positions will become available in the Student Affairs Office starting February 15. An open forum will be held on February 27 at 7 p.m. in a to be determined location, in which the candidates will give campaign speeches. The elections are scheduled for March 1. See the complete deadline schedule below.

After being sworn-in at the SGA meeting of March 7, the elected officers will work in tandem with this year's officers until spring break, which begins on March 13, in order to train for their new posts. The new executives will take over the operation of the SGA after break.

Despite the presence of much planning and forethought, which began as early as the beginning of last semester, a commencement speaker has yet to be announced by the senior class. Rejection of both the prospective speakers and the college administration have crossed names like Tom Clancy and Jimmy Carter off the list. The senior class is still searching.

The junior class continues to plan for the Earth Day celebration, set for April 8. The event is still in its formative stage, and a musical performer is being sought for the festivities. The junior class is also planning for Casey Day. Once again this year, there are plans to plant trees in order to improve the appearance of the campus. Last year, trees were planted behind Kent House, and this year, more and more will be planted along Route 213, extending the line of trees along the street from in front of Minta Martin and Reid Hall down toward Queen Anne's and Caroline.

A draft of the budget for the spring semester was distributed at Tuesday's meeting. The budget will be voted on at the next meeting. Club funding appropriations will also take place during next Tuesday's session.

Two vacancies now exist on the Washington College Honor Board: Vice-Chairperson Audrey Fessler recently stepped down and there is also a spot open for a student alternate member. After the positions are filled, the Honor Board will plan an open Honor Code forum.

As always, student feedback is welcomed by the SGA. All students are encouraged to voice questions and comments by either contacting an executive or senator, BlitzMailing "Student Government Association," or contacting the SGA office at x. 8500. Ω

SGA Election Deadlines:

2/15 Petitions Available
2/21 Elm essays Due
2/22 Petitions Due
2/24 Elm out
2/27 Speeches
3/1 Elections

Changes in and reaction to W. C. Honor Code

Sarah Bell

The beginning of the 1994 school year marked the birth of Washington College's new honor code. 1995 is now upon us and with it has come some changes. Douglas Beckworth, this year's Honor Board Chair, comments on some of these changes and what went on last semester behind the closed doors of the Honor Board.

"There are no kegs allowed on campus, not even as furniture," said Beckworth. This was brought about by a party that was caught with kegs and the situation was then discussed with the Department of Public Safety and Student Affairs. As a result, this issue was integrated into the Honor Code. All RAs have been told that there are no kegs allowed on parties."

"As far as violations go, there were no academic violations last semester," said the Chair. "There was some property damage and alcohol and social conduct violations."

Audrey Fessler, the Vice Chair of the Honor Board, also agreed that there were few violations. "There was a very small number of hearings that were resolved to everyone's satisfaction," said Fessler. "There have been no appeals and in addition to the hearings we've met regularly every other week to talk about modification. The Honor Board seems to be working efficiently and members of the Board welcome personal feedback that can be talked about during the meetings."

If it's feedback they want, it's feedback they get. A few students were asked their opinions on this ethical code of conduct.

"I think that the principles are good and [it] is what the school needs but the current draft doesn't reflect the reality of Washington College," said Skip Gibson, a senior here at Washington College.

Sophomore Josh Lawrence's thoughts on the subject were along the same lines.

"The pledge is ineffective because if someone is willing to cheat on a test then they would be willing to cheat on the pledge," said Lawrence. "It is a good concept but I don't think it's effective here."

Freshman and newcomer to the Honor Code, Carolyn Fuss said, "I think it's important for this college to have a set of moral standards; however, I don't see students doing things because it would go against the Honor Code as much as it would go against their own personal values."

Courtney Chlolow, also new to the Honor Code system, said, "It doesn't bother me but I feel that it is kind of shameful that our college community necessitates a written honor code."

Beckworth felt that "because the students sign the Honor Code, they are more aware of it" yet he still feels that "there is work to be done on getting faculty and staff more aware of the code."

"The Honor Code is written out in everyone's handbook but if there are any questions, the students shouldn't hesitate to ask the Honor Board," Beckworth said. "They are there to try and make things as easy as possible."Ω

A veritable cornucopia oh financial aid opportunities for the 1995 - 96 school year

DE-DC-MD ASSOCIATION OF STUDENT FINANCIAL AID ADMINISTRATORS, INC.
AWARD: $1,000 scholarship for three students in area institutions

Criteria:
• Undergraduate students with at least second year standing and a cumulative GPA of at least 2.5, or
• Graduate students who have completed one year of their program and have cumulative GPA of at least 3.0
• Certified as possessing financial need as defined by Washington College

Scholarship Requirements:
• Recommendation from academic counselor or professor
• Complete application and required essay

Deadline:
Submit application, essay and recommendation to the financial aid office by February 8

GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTING SCHOLARSHIP
AWARD: $2,000

Criteria:
• Seniors enrolled in an accounting program.
• Superior academic record and have plans to pursue a career in state or local government or graduate studies in governmental accounting or public administration.
• Permanent Resident or Citizen of the US or Canada

To Apply:
• Complete application (available in Financial Aid Office) and submit to head of accounting dept.

Scholarship Requirements:
• Complete application form
• Statement of proposed career plan or graduate study plan
• Undergraduate transcripts
• Resume
• Dept. Chair's letter of recommendation

Deadline:
• February 20, 1995

PAUL DOUGLAS TEACHER SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM
AWARD: up to $5,000 per year

Criteria:
• This program is intended to attract highly able persons to the teaching profession.

Scholarship Requirements:
• Recipients are competitively selected on the basis of college GPA, SAT / ACT scores
• A writing sample
• Evidence of active participation in community, school or private agency involving teaching
• Awards are up to $5,000 per academic year with an obligation to teach two years for each year or portion of a year for which an award was made.

To Apply:
• Contact the Financial Aid Office

Deadline:
• Applications are accepted from February 1 through March 31.

ROTARY FOUNDATION AMBASSADORIAL (1996-97)
Award: up to $21,500

To Apply:
• Student must first apply through local Rotary Club

Criteria:
• Must have completed at least two years of coursework
• Must be a citizen in a country that has a Rotary Club

Deadline:
• Each Rotary Club has a different deadline starting as early as March

"Ball" from 1

dents (even those not attending the dinner) are encouraged to be prompt.

Years ago, the Birthday Ball had been a long-standing tradition here at W.C. It had historically been a major event on campus until recently, when progressively less effort came to be devoted to it year after year, causing it to die down. This trend reversed dramatically last year, when, under the student leadership of then-sophomore Carey Hargrove, one of the most successful events in the history of the school was held. Hargrove's family's business, Hargrove, Inc., will handle the decoration of the ball once again this year. Last year's ball is the new archetype, and the goal of the '95 Ball is to be as good, if not better, than last year's. According to SGA President Jamie Baker, "It's going to be a fabulous event. We're pushing it to be the best Ball ever. My hope is that it's going to be a tradition."

If you are interested in devoting some time to helping with what will surely be a memorable event, you are encouraged to contact an SGA executive or Senator, call the SGA office at x.8500, or send BlitzMail to "Student Government Association." Ω

Mac Classes!

Welcome to the beginning of another semester of Mac classes for everyone: faculty, staff and students.

Classes will be held in the Casey Computing Classroom on Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m. and on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 9 to 10 a.m. Schedule so far:
Week 2 (2/6-2/10): ClarisWorks 3.0
Week 3 (2/13-2/17): Word
Week 4 (2/20-2/24): Excel
Week 5 (2/27-3/3): Internet
Week 6 (3/6-3/10): Word (Repeat)

More schedule info will be upcoming.

Robert Pennington
Salon for Hairdressing
Presents...
50% OFF
Sandra & Dana
113 South Cross Street
778-9747

LOYOLA
Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

c.r.u.d.

creative ranting under duress.

by Colleen Glass

Post-midnight, and I stand amidst a wild assortment of dirty clothes, half-filled StorAlls, books, video game manuals, empty bottles of Mistic, Neosporin, a towel, unhung posters, several videocassette tapes ... Vader is strangling Admiral Ozzel in the background, and the highlighted text of Paradise Lost lies heavily in my head.

Strains of Front Line Assembly's Search and Destroy...

I look at my dittoed copy of La fuerza de la sangre and drop it, to join the semi-sentient pile on my floor. I examine my wallet, find my coat, and check my watch. The appliances are turned off, and the lock screeches to mark my passing.

The cornfields outside Chestertown, and I'm standing with my friends, holding a pair of binoculars. Amy says again, "You're looking for aliens?"

"That's right," says Steve, setting up the telescope. "You've got to admit, it's better than the Barbie and Ken doll sacrifices we had a couple weeks ago."

"If less violent," I say. I scan the road with my binoculars.

"OK," says Steve, "let's get started."

I gaze up at the stars as Catherine sends signals into the sky with a flashlight. She uses Morse code, and I'd love to know what she's actually sending. "Compared to Annapolis, the skies are really clear around here."

"Arizona's better," Steve tells me. "Stay around the ecliptic tonight—there've been a lot of sightings in that region. Especially Aries, Pisces, Cetus. My friend John saw two UFOs in Pisces last week."

I check out those constellations. Amy, whom we decided would bring the tape player, hits PLAY, and we listen to the first track of Music from the Galaxies. Karen, who also has a pair of binoculars, we set to general watch over the skies.

After half an hour, we get to talking about old sci-fi movies. "You realize, everybody in science fiction has a British accent, even the American actors. Doctor Who set the example." This from Steve.

"I don't know," I say, "Did Luke Skywalker have a British accent?" (I know the answer.)

"Nope," Amy informs me. "But a lot, maybe most, of the Rebels did, and all of the Imperial officers did. Your—you could hardly tell because of the voice distortion."

"Yeah," Steve says. His eye has been in the telescope the whole time, and he suddenly stops. "Dudes! Check this out! Just left of Gamma Pegasi!"

Our binocs become riveted to that spot. A small, silvery triangle-shape, moving left.

"What the hell is that?" I mutter. Catherine turns off the flashlight and readies her own binoculars.

"That," Steve proclaims, "is an alien spacecraft!"

We track the silver object well across the sky, into Monoceros, until it suddenly dives and disappears under the horizon. Our eyes hold watch for fifteen minutes, but it does not reappear.

I lower my binoculars first, with a sigh. "That was cool. After that, Steve-O, I'll be happy to call it a night."

"If you want," he says, sounding a bit disappointed. "I'm staying here for a while—it might reappear later on."

"OK." Amy, Karen and I go, while the other two hold vigil over the skies. I let myself back in to the dorm. La fuerza merely glares at me from its spot on the floor. "I guess that didn't help much at all," I tell it. Somehow, though, the story doesn't seem to think much of my observation. Ω

Campus Voices

Question by Phil McQuade

Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: What was your favorite commercial during the Super Bowl?

The two guys racing, but they had to stop at all the McDonald's on the way.

Julie Klein
Senior

The Budweiser frog one.It was just different.

Beth Moser
Freshman

I liked the Pepsi commercial with the dollar bill.

Eric Pikus
Junior

I was watching the game. I didn't really notice the commercials.

Marcelo Brutti
Sophomore

I loved the Budweiser Frog one.

Liz Likens
Junior

The one where the frogs go Bud-wy-zer and when the Pepsi guy and Coke guy were sitting around and switched drinks.

Elizabeth Moga
Sophomore

"TAFFY" from 1

scheduled for February 13," said Wolff. The forum will take place at 7:30 in the Sophie Kerr Room in Miller Library. In addition to the scheduled forum, TAFFY will conduct a forum for the student body, to take place in the near future.

"We talked particularly about whether we should make this a pilot program or a program that is introduced to all new first-year students," said Wolff.

The difficulties in balancing distribution with a pilot program are addressed in the minutes of TAFFY's January 23 meeting.

A working name for the first-year program was decided upon. Assistant Professor of Mathematics Louise Amick's suggestion of "Connecting to the Expanding World" was chosen.

Various members of the task force were given assignments to complete by the next TAFFY meeting, which is scheduled for the coming week.

Wolff and Dean of Student Affairs Maureen McIntire will look into the advising aspects of the new program; Chair of the Sociology Department Dr. Steven Cades and Director of Reader Services Jeff Chaffin will investigate the "skill components;" and Dean Joachim Scholz and Chair of the Department of Chemistry Frank Creegan will study the proposed program's impact on the curriculum of W.C.

All members of the W.C. community, including students, are encouraged to submit any suggestions to the members of TAFFY. The task force consists of Wolff, Amick, Cades, Scholz, Vice President for Admissions Kevin Coveney, McIntire, Chaffin, Creegan, Assistant Professor of Psychology Kevin McKillop, Chair of the Department of English Bennett Lamond, and two Washington College students: sophomore Catherine Langan and junior Siu-Yee Ng. Elm Mail addressed to TAFFY will be received by all members of the task force. Ω

TAFFY Minutes: January 23, 1995

This meeting of TAFFY opened with a continuation of the "Options Ahead" outline for a new first-year course. Members looked at ways of specifying the parts of the proposal. Central concerns had to do with numbers of students enrolled in new and traditional courses, the best ways to staff the new courses, the effect of staffing changes on departmental offerings, and the procedure for crediting new courses.

The numbers of students who might or might not enroll in traditional introductory courses will be affected by the enrollment in new courses. A new course might be limited to 18 first-year students; a traditional introductory course in a department might admit as many as 30 or more students. If a pilot program is initiated, we might expect six – eight sections. TAFFY will check with the Registrar to see the pattern of student enrollment in two-semester introductory courses over the past three years.

Staffing for the new courses could present several problems. Interested faculty could be freed to teach new courses as fewer introductory courses are needed. Some professors might come from Forms sections that were eliminated. When necessary, adjunct professors might be assigned to different departments, as the new courses are led by regular faculty. Concern was expressed that some departments might fear losing new majors and therefore choose not to participate in the new courses. TAFFY discussed the need to keep faculty involved and to prevent certain departments or members from being discouraged from participation. Team teaching and interdisciplinary courses might allow more faculty to be involved with the new courses.

TAFFY members began to discuss the general shape of the program. There might be a four-course general education requirement in the beginning. Until a new system is instituted, these new courses could count for distribution where they were applicable; courses would be labeled by division and credited accordingly. Because students in the pilot program would have two fewer requirements than traditional students would have, several suggestions were offered for dealing with the difference. The number of distribution requirements could be dropped from 12 to 10 for all first-years. Forms could count as a humanities distribution requirement, meaning that all new students not in the pilot would have two fewer choices: pilot students – two new pilot courses plus 10 / non-pilot students – two Forms courses plus 10. Ultimately there will be implications for other parts of the curriculum.

Dean Scholz summarized that we are leaning toward a thematic approach but are still uncertain of how to define it in a way that provides the largest opportunities. Ω

There's a Girl In Havana
A Musical Revue of Show Stoppers and 11 o'clock Songs

Directed by Jason Rubin
Musical Direction by Gary Clarke

Tawes Theater, Feb. 10 & 11, 8 p.m., Feb. 12 , 2 p.m.
Call x. 7832 for reservations. (Limited seating)

Earth Notes

BY Andrea Nolan

Recently I read a book by a bleeding-heart hypercritical feel-good pansy environmentalist which dug into my ulcer with as much as ferocity as Rush Limbaugh does on a good day (if he ever has good days). Regardless of their politics, people who deal in extremes have a way of getting underneath my skin and then just poke, poke, poking away. However, there is one ornery old bastard that in all his blustering and spitting, tree-spiking and bill-board chopping extremism, still remains the farthest thing from a bleeding-hearted pansy as one could get. I speak of course of Edward Abbey.

He is the man who when writing about the controlled tourism of National Parks commented, "let them take risks, for Godsake, let them get lost, sunburnt, disoriented, drowned, eaten by bears, buried alive in avalanches — that is the right and privilege of any free American." Right on! Before Cactus Ed died in 1989 he wrote 12 dozen books of both the fiction and non-fiction variety and lived life with a sort of defiant passion for which most of us only strive. However, this roamer of the Western deserts, writer of books, and godfather of eco-terrorism differentiated himself from the masses not by something he did, but by something he lacked — namely, political correctness. Tactful, Abbey was not. He threw beer cans into reservoirs, went through women like most men go through Kleenex, and behaved like an all-around fun-loving bastard. And, though both a misanthrope and an ardent "Leave-No-Trace" conservationist, I still can't help but love him.

I could provide quote after quote of pure, quintessential Abbeyness. But, despite how it may appear I am not writing to eulogize this man who died six years ago. Rather, I am extolling his lack of a party-line. Nothing is black and white, and yet people seem to believe that if you are a little of something, you must be all of everything. If you are an environmentalist, you also have to be a vegetarian, animal rights activist, and peace-loving hippie to boot. This is all a bunch of froofrah. Now, if you happen to be a vegetarian, bunny-loving, tree hugger then more power to you. Just make sure you're that way because you want to be, not because it is the politically correct thing to be. Go by what you believe and you won't be in fault. Abbey was not a man to waffle on issues; he knew what he wanted (or didn't want) for his desert home. In a world of big issues, where everyone has to pay homage to everyone else's problems Abbey dealt with the world one-on-one. If he didn't want a road bisecting a stretch of desert, he went and plucked out all the surveyor's stakes. Abbey didn't sit at home fretting about what the New York environmentalists or D.C. developers would think or do. If more people would say what they actually felt, and live by what they say, maybe we might get somewhere. Drop some of the pretenses and assumptions and it becomes a lot easier to hammer out some solutions.

Above everything else Abbey was a man who thought for himself, and answered to no one but himself. He was no hero. Rather he was a farting, hard-drinking, horny old coot who wrote about what he loved, tried to correct what he thought had gone wrong, and lived life as fully as he knew how. Try to stamp whatever label you want on him, he'll wiggle out of it. Environmentalism, as Abbey expressed it, reaches beyond mere trees and issues, and becomes a lifestyle not of non-conformity, but rather of conforming to whatever your own self dictates. Ω

WICOMICO CIVIC CENTER • WICOMICO CIVIC CENTER • WICOMICO CIVIC CENTER • WICOMICO CIVIC CENTER

FAR BEYOND DRIVEL

Wicomico Civic Center
Saturday, Feburary 25, 8 p.m.
General Admission • $20
Call to charge tickets: 410-548-4911
Tickets on sale at: Shore Music in Seaford, DE; T's Corner in Oak Hall, VA; and the Civic Center Box Office

WICOMICO • CIVIC • CENTER

Wibebottles float back to W.C.

Luther W. Dudich

There is an ancient Chinese proverb (some would say a curse) that goes: "May you live in interesting times." It would be safe to say that last Saturday night was an interesting time. On that night, Washington College once again played host to Boulder, Colorado's Winebottles. The response they received last semester was so enthusiastic, one of their booking agents actually called the school to play here again.

The nucleus of the band formed in 1990 in Philadelphia. They moved to Boulder (the home of the Samples and Big Head Todd and the Monsters) in 1991. Doug Murray reports that Boulder is a real hotbed for local music. Someday it could even become another Seattle in its own unique way. The original members of the band are Mr. Murray on guitar and vocals and Darren Taylor on guitar. Their current drummer, Young" Sam Young, was brought into the fold two years ago when he was 16. The line-up was completed by bassist Stewart Loche, who originally joined the band as a roadman, becoming bassist after his predecessor had an accident. This band has opened for the aforementioned Boulder bands, along with the Gin Blossoms, Cracker, The Spin Doctors (Whatever became of them, anyway?), and Duda, among others. For those who haven't heard it, their album Sober sounds a bit like the Samples. This is to say it is a nice piece of pop music would probably be the result if the Skatalites met Echo and the Bunnymen at R.E.M. guitarist Peter Buck's house.

When asked for some off-the-wall influences, two of the members named King Crimson guitarist Robert Fripp. For those unfamiliar with him, Fripp is one of those musicians whose audience consists solely of other musicians. There is a good reason for this: he often sounds like utter noise. This side of their band, which is absent from their recorded output, was glaringly evident in their sound Saturday night. It must be noted in their defense that there were severe technical problems that night, chief among them being electrical problems in The Cove that caused Mr. Murray's amplifier to periodically cut out. When this occurred, he would be forced to stop playing in an attempt to hear himself. Even given this, when they actually played cohesive songs they were quite enjoyable. During such songs as "My Government" and "Marijuana," they sounded quite good, with very nice vocal harmonies provided by bassist Loche.

The latter was a true crowd-pleaser, going on for at least 10 minutes and accompanied by a large group of dancers. This impromptu cabaret and the unabashedly incompetent use of goofy instruments (Harmonium? Slide whistle?) by Murray enhanced the cheesy tongue-in-cheek quality of the song as it appeared on the album, pushing this pseudo-Rastafarian rant over the edge into being a total comedy number.

However, during parts of the show, they seemed a bit more amateurish than they did when they were here last semester. A large portion of the sets seemed to be taken up by some very weird bits. The entire night had a surreal quality to it. Maybe it was the Pringles-like song beginnings and endings that went nowhere fast. Maybe it was the aforementioned stage full of dancers. It could possibly have been senior swimmer David Cola's shirtless dance in front of the stage, which seemed to occur in order to bail out fellow Senior swimmer Ty McCarthy, who somehow got pushed on-stage to the exhortations of the band and members of the audience to "get naked." It would appear everyone was in a strange mood. Getting back to the music, the fact that the band spent copious amounts of time telling jokes instead of actually playing songs proved at times irksome. All in all, they didn't sound as polished as they did during their previous gig. It must unfortunately be reported that their stab at a Billy Joel cover was the most laughably pathetic attempt at a cover this campus has seen since the Open Mike Night band's last gig. It was also about 10 times funnier, for anyone who realized what song it had once been. It must also be said that there was a vaguely recognizable Tom Petty song somewhere in the middle of the hilariously stupid "Hillbilly Boogie." The problems in the sound of the band themselves may be attributable to the fact that it was apparently the bassist's last gig, or the previously mentioned limitations with the sound system. For all these problems, however, it was still a very enjoyable time for everyone in attendance. They may not have delivered the straight-through coherent power-pop of their last gig here, but the audience did not seem to mind. In fact, the humorous elements made up for what they were missing in conventionality. All in all, it reminded me of a Replacements bootleg: Not the greatest sounding thing on earth, but full of solid poppy songwriting with somehow endearing rough edges sandwiched between dumb (in a good way) humorous bits. (I suspect that this time around the Winebottles may have had more than a little in common with the good old sloppy 'Mats.) Personally, I am looking forward to hearing their next album, which will be recorded this summer.

The Winebottles will next appear at the Theatre of the Living Arts in Philadelphia on Friday, Feb. 17. Ω

Send a Valentine's Day carnation to your friends, crushes, or significant others! Zeta Tau Alpha will begin carnation sales Wednesday, February 1. Carnations are $1, in white, pink, or red, and will be delivered on Valentine's Day, February 14.

WHERE they will be sold: Lunch and dinner in the dining hall, most times in The Cove, and in residence halls throughout the week. You have plenty of opportunities, don't miss out!

DISCOUNTS INCREASED HEAVILY
15% To 40% OFF
BAY TO BAY TRADERS
patagonia
Old Town Canoes & Kayaks
Comfort Walking Canes
Whole Earth Outback Felt Hats
JANSPORT
JACKROSS
Adonis
Columbia
UGG'S

Droppe A Whole d Degree

Aaron Pierce

Words to Live By ... A Master Speaks Out

I'll admit that I'm a little nervous about writing this week's review. The subject is one that is very close to my heart, and I want to do it justice. After all, if it weren't for the poet Allen Ginsberg, I probably wouldn't be writing this review at all. In fact, I wouldn't be here at Washington College in the first place. But the old man himself has put out a boxed set and it is, not surprisingly, superb. Holy Soul Jelly Roll: Poems and Songs, 1949-1993 is a collection of 52 recordings that span the career of this modern poetic force. It goes from scratchy renditions of such favorites as "The Green Automobile," and "America," to hard-to-find wonders like the 1981 recording of Ginsberg performing "Capitol Air" with The Clash. It is a magnificent retrospective worthy of its subject and his voluminous work.

So what else is there to say about it? Any fan of Ginsberg probably does not need any more encouraging than that. So I guess the only thing left to do is convince any non-fans of Ginsberg out there that having a four CD set of some of the most masterful spoken word recordings is worth the chunk of money that it demands (hey, it got it for my birthday). Well, if you're not familiar with Allen Ginsberg, you've probably been living under a rock. He's a poet, a songwriter, a singer, a leftist, a queer, a freak, and a whole lot of other things. And on top of all that, he's one hell of a performer.

Highlights on this album include almost an entire disc devoted to the songs of innocence and experience of William Blake. Ginsberg set these pieces to music so that we, the listeners, could hear them as they are supposed to sound. Perhaps the centerpiece of this collection is Ginsberg's live 1979 recording of "Nurse's Song" (from Songs of Innocence rather than Songs of Experience ... though that's on there too) done with Gregory Corso, Peter Orlovsky, and Steven Taylor. The four maniacs sing, yodel, and strum their way through an almost overwhelmingly joyous recording of the Blake classic. This is music to listen to on slow mornings, guaranteed to wake you up and send you out into the world humming. Other Blake tunes heard here include "Laughing Song" (with Don Cherry, for you fans of Avant-Garde Jazz), "The Sick Rose," and "The Lamb." Unfortunately, Ginsberg did not put out a recording of "The Tyger." Anyone who has heard him do it knows why this is a disappointment.

The four discs are vaguely chronological, spanning four decades of work. Some of the recordings from the first disc are a bit disappointing merely because of the low recording quality. However, it is a chance to hear a young Ginsberg, still somewhat inexperienced at public speaking. The reading is rough and rhythmical, displaying much of the youthful exuberance that marks Ginsberg's early work. The version of "Howl (For Carl Solomon)" is somewhat of a disappointment. There have been better recordings and better readings of this, Ginsberg's most well-known poem. However, the last thing I really need to hear nowadays is another reading of "Howl," so I wasn't too put off by its less-than-stellar recording quality. His voice remains thrilling, even if it is a bit hard to make out.

See "Ginsberg" on 8

The Computing Center • Macintosh PC • The Internet System • BBS • MUD • Dungeon • MUD • IP Address NewsWatcher • Telnet Fetch • FTP • CA alt.barney.dinosaur.die.die.die • Pacer Forum BlitzMail • LegendMud • Broadcast

Net Surfing

by Mindie Kaplan

With a new semester and plenty of new faces on campus, the Mac Classes are gearing up to inform both new and experienced Macintosh users about the programs Washington College has to offer. Classroom instruction will be held on the third floor of the CAC four times a week: Monday and Wednesday from 3:30 to 4:30 and from 8:45 a.m. to 10 a.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays. These classes are open to faculty, staff, and students. Jeff Chaffin, head of Readers' Services in the library, also announced his intention to hold one or two special evening classes specifically for students. The "student edition" of Mac Classes may follow the same topic as the morning classes, but will cover it from the student's point of view. Recreational as well as practical and scholastic uses of the programs WC offers will be covered. For example, Excel is more than just a number crunching program. While it can be useful as a data entry tool (and as a job skill), you can also balance your checkbook, keep track of your diet / workout schedule, or even how much money you're spending on Cove Burgers. It's also handy for drawing up class schedules, calculating your GPA, and may be the perfect high-tech replacement for the notorious "little black book." On the purely indulgent side of computing, classes will be held on the highly addictive MUDs and other interactive computer games. Who says you have to waste money to have fun?

The Mac Classes will begin with a week of instruction covering Macintosh Basics, an overview of the campus network (there's more out there than Bolo), and an overview of the Internet, desktop publishing packages such as Quark and PageMaker, as well as Cricketgraph and any other programs where people might have an interest.

In addition to the classroom instruction, the Computing Center and the Miller Library are working together to provide computer tutoring to individuals and roving group instruction. Private classes can be tailored to the needs of specific departments or classes. They will even host a miniclass in your dorm lounge, should your RA request it.

Of particular interest to graduating seniors (and those who hope to become graduating seniors) will be a special class on senior thesis presentation and setup. There are many multi-media tools on campus that will help give you the perfect thesis presentation and may be just that something extra you've been looking for to help you get honors. Don't forget about all the computer-driven research tools that will enable you to do a world-class thesis in less time than ever before.

Look for Mac Classes in the upcoming weeks and don't forget to BlitzMail Jeff Chaffin with any suggestions for things you'd like to see in the classes. Ω

Chew On This

Carol Thornton and Dawn Nordhoff

It has come to our attention that there are many students on campus who use smokeless tobacco. After several requests from students to help them kick the habit, we decided to try and assess the problem on campus. With the help of Athletic Trainer Mark Laursen, a survey was distributed to students on Great American Smoke Out Day. There were 124 surveys returned. While the final analysis is not complete we do know that 11% of the students who responded were current users of smokeless tobacco and another 5% had used smokeless tobacco in the previous 30 days.

Of particular interest is the fact that both users and non-users seem to be misinformed regarding the hazards of smokeless tobacco use. Snuff and chewing tobacco are both associated with a variety of serious adverse health effects. Smokeless tobacco contains higher levels of nicotine, is more addictive, and can adversely affect the reproductive and cardiovascular systems as well as cause gum disease and cancer. SMOKELESS TOBACCO IS NOT SAFER THAN SMOKING CIGARETTES!!

The Health Service, in conjunction with the Kent County Health Department, is sponsoring a cessation program for smokeless tobacco users. The program is aimed at educating students about the adverse health effects of smokeless tobacco as well as assisting students to quit. Free blood pressure and carbon monoxide evaluations will also be available. The program begins on Tuesday, January 31, 1995 and will be held in the seminar room in the Lifetime Fitness Center. The program will run for four weeks on Tuesdays from 7 p.m. - 8 p.m.

If you would like any additional information please call the Health Service at ext. 7261. Pre-registration is not necessary and smokers interested in quitting are also welcome. This is your chance to keep that New Year's Resolution! See you on Tuesday night!

Submit Now!

The Washington College Review is accepting submissions from NOW until February 15.

The Review publishes scholarly papers from all disciplines, including, this year, the Modern Language Department, as well as short stories and poems. Please send us your best academic work!

We would appreciate a brief biographical description and the name of any professor who may have helped you with your paper along with your submission.

You can submit to:

Prof. Sherbondy — Editor-in-Chief
Prof. A. Parcell — Humanities Editor
Prof. Munson — Natural Sciences Editor
Prof. Wagner — Creative Writing Editor
Prof. Premo — Social Science Editor
Erin Rowe — Student Editor

Andy's

Friday, February 3
Mookie, Tracy & Barry* A terrific swing trio. Guitar, pedal steel, keyboards
Saturday, February 4
John Van Dyke & Eddie Gates*, Classic folk-rock
Thursday, February 9
John Van Dyke*, Classic guitar, no cover

Shootout in the Student Center: Virtual Reality Comes to W.C.

Colleen Glass

I see my opponent across the street. Turning, I blast at the figure as fast I can depress the trigger. Jetting weirdly along the road, she fires in my direction. Trying to compensate, I turn.

A stray beam from my gun explodes a passing car. We both ignore the alien craft descending upon us, too intent on utterly destroying each other. Jarring angles as we fire away, gun-dueling in the heart of the dead city. Then the enemy scores another hit, and my eyesight fades to black.

This is the experience of Virtual Reality. Last weekend, GG Gregg Company from Ohio introduced Virtual Reality 2000 to Washington College in the Student Center. The display consisted of two machines, each contained a platform, helmet, and joystick for the player, and a large monitor which displayed the game to onlookers. Each student typically played for two sessions, lasting about six minutes in total. Two instructors aided students in putting on the helmet and learning the controls. Often they would advise or even turn a player to help them in learning Virtual Reality 2000. Onlookers could only see the virtual world from the screens. One inside the helmet, however, the player experiences the virtual city from a first-person viewpoint, as if they were actually standing on the pavement.

Each game was an intense gun-battle against computer-generated opponents and a rival human player. In addition, the player could also fly a hang glider, landing on a target-shaped platform for extra points. While the graphics were very geometric and unrealistic, the game's quick response to the directions of the players and the smooth movements within the game itself were enough to draw the players into the game world. Lines for the virtual experience were long – 30 to 40 minutes or so. Perhaps the fact that the monitor's display in line persisted indicates that the game was worth the wait. Ω

From "Ginsberg" on 7

The great joy of this set, however, is the last two disks. Included with such poetic classics as "Pull My Daisy" (written with the Papa of the Beat Generation, Mr. Jack Kerouac himself), are some of his lesser known song writing attempts. "Vomit Express," (recorded with Folk hero Bob Dylan and the poet Anne Waldman, among others), "Pacific High Studio Mantras (Oh Ah Hum Vajra Guru Padma Siddhi Hum)," CIA Dope Calypso," and the moving "Father Death Blues," are some of the best of the best that Allen has to offer. This is a set to be treasured if only for the experience of hearing these little-known wonders.

I could talk about the various recordings contained in this set ad nauseam. But for me to speak about Allen Ginsberg is like listening to the disciple instead of the prophet. Ginsberg is, without a doubt, one of the best poets ever to grace the world with his words. There are a ton of recordings contained in this set, and all of them are worth at least a listen. My earnest suggestion to you is to get ahold of this set, curl up with your favorite substance, and let the voice wash over you. It is truly a cathartic experience and one that you will thank me for. Ω

Washington College Staff Profile

Nancy Toy, Bursar for the College seems, at times, to live in the basement of the Buntagon. "I'm supposed to work from 8:30 to 4:30 with an hour for lunch," she said with a quirky smile as we settled down for our 5:30 interview. She expected to be in the office until 7 that night. Long hours and working in an office in desperate need of extra help doesn't faze Toy.

"I grew up in this area and [the College] was a part of my life," she explained. "It means something." Toy grew up with Washington College, having had an uncle who attended the school. She, herself, will be celebrating her 26th anniversary as bursar at the end of the month.

As bursar, Toy handles all student tuition accounts and all money that comes into the college from any other source except the bookstore. She loves to read, one of her favorite books being All I Really Needed to Know I Learned in Kindergarten.

"A man who loves dandelions can't be all wrong," she grinned. Another favorite is North and South, she explained saying, "I love the Civil War era." Her favorite author is James Michner.

Another love of Nancy Toy's is for travel. Her last adventure consisted of a cruise on a steamboat down the St. Lawrence Seaway. Her eyes glowed with pleasure as she recounted traveling through seven sets of locks, staying in Kingston, Ontario, and in Quebec City. She stayed in front of a castle during her trip and took a train back from Canada to conclude the venture. Next week, she plans to travel to New Orleans. She explained how she schedules her vacation time around the few slow periods at the College where her presence in the office is not absolutely necessary.

Toy has five children, two from her first marriage and three step-children from her husband's previous marriage. She spoke glowingly of her two grandchildren, Brian who is 20 months old and David who is 8 months old.

Before coming to Washington College, Toy worked at the Board of Education. She took the job intending to stay only six months. "I just stayed," she smiled and shrugged. "I love the people here. I love the traditions [of the College]. I like the basic things Washington College stood for."

HOROSCOPES

Aquarius (1/21-2/18) If you saw your shadow on Thursday that means you're in for six more weeks of depression. So go hibernate.
Pisces (2/19-3/20) "You're naked as a child, your innocence is gone; given away for nothing, and I hate what's left."
Aries (3/21-4/19) Leo figures prominently in the dark hours of this week. Your polar opposite strengthens that which is within you.
Taurus (4/20-5/20) You kept on keepin' on with those horns of yours and a medal you have won. The confidence inside you is now able to be overtly displayed.
Gemini (5/21-6/21) Now you know that those you love have taken a different path of their own accord. The time has come to construct a new bridge.
Cancer (6/22-7/22) Emotions on the fritz again? Try shifting those locks of luscious hair and make the move to go OUT with your friends this weekend.
Leo (7/23-8/22) Danger lurks outside your door, so stay in, eat pop-tarts and watch TV all weekend. The danger will get tired of lurking and leave Sunday evening.
Virgo (8/23-9/23) Stop doing the snow dance in your room. You did it the last two years and look what happened.
Libra (9/24-10/23) You really should see a doctor about that; it might get infected.
Scorpio (10/24-11/22) I must apologize for my last prediction, for now I see that you have grown in ways that you yourself did not expect.
Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) Stop treating your significant other like a kid sister/brother. Only when they are treated as an equal, will your relationship flourish.
Capricorn (12/22-1/20) "...the highest conceivable enjoyment lies in being loved; to be loved is higher than anything else in the world." Know that you are loved.
HOROSCOPES BY: Ember and Shade, from the flip side.

Announcing:
TREASON
Washington College's foreign language literary magazine. Please submit original works in a foreign language, translations of other works, or both.
Submit to Jodie Clark, Abby Moss, Prof. Smiley, Prof. Shivers, or Prof. Vahlbusch.
Deadline: February 19.

VALENTINES SPECIALS
12 LATEX BALLOONS
$5.99
$9.00 VALUE
4-18" MYLAR BALLOONS
$ 7.99
DISCOUNT VARIETY
Kent Plaza
Chestertown, MD
(410) 778-5068
PLEASE PLACE YOUR ORDER NOW
LOCAL DELIVERY AVAILABLE $ 5.00

laundry Park drycleaning
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

WE GET YOU DISCOUNTS!

Kevin and Jeff roam Chestertown in search of Wilma.

In the old days, when we were just discount rookies, a nice woman by the name of Wilma gave us an interview. This kind lady gave all Washington College students a 10% discount and thus inspired our discount crusade. Just before Christmas Break, we noticed that Wilma's Kitchen had closed down. This week, we set out on a very special mission: not only will we get you discounts, but we will get you Wilma as well. As we embarked on our search, we decided to investigate Scottie's Shoe Store to see if the wizened old man behind the counter had any information relevant to our search.

K: Could you please tell us your name?

HC: Howard Coal

K: Then who's Scottie?

HC: Scottie was my wife's first husband. It's her store.

K: Awesome. It seems you sell shoes here.

HC: Yes. She's had a shoe store here for 22 years.

K: Do you carry all brands or are there specific brands you carry?

HC: All kinds of brands.

K: Do you have Air Jordans and Shaq Attacks?

HC: No, nothing like that.

K: This is more of a casual shoe store. If someone was going to a party and needed a nice pair of shoes, they could get them here?

HC: Yeah.

K: They could pick up some shoes so they wouldn't have to go barefoot or whatever. By the way, we noticed that Wilma's is closed now.

HC: Yeah, Wilma's Kitchen closed the first of December.

K: Do you know where she went? I mean, was she abducted by aliens, or what?

HC: She retired.

K: Why?

HC: I don't know. She's a teacher down at Chesapeake College. I guess it got to be too much for her.

K: I'm Wilma's cousin Calvin, from the comic pages. Is she in town a lot?

HC: I've seen her once since she closed down and that's all.

K: I don't know what he's talking about. Do you offer any kind of student discount or anything?

HC: It's the same for everybody else. Right now we have a 20% off sale on shoes and boots and things.

K: But do you have any kind of student-only discount?

HC: No.

K: Jeff, it looks as though you could get some new shoes. What do you think? Any of these look good to you?

J: I just got new shoes, but shoes are good. They keep your feet from getting hurt. Sometimes. Unless they're not the right kind.

With that bright insight from Jeff, we left the premises to check out the Compleat Bookseller, where Kevin noticed that Jeff's shoes weren't the only thing Jeff needed replaced. The cashier was a wee bit microphone shy.

Little Indian: No.

K: What? You don't like the recording? You're afraid of microphones?

LI: I don't like them.

K: Why? Did you murder somebody a long time ago? Are you afraid that you might accidentally blurt out the location of the body while we're recording?

LI: How do I know you're not Connie Chung in disguise?

K: What do you think of Hillary Clinton?

LI: [no comment]

K: How do you get into running this store, and writing and reading and stuff?

LI: I'm just the Indian, not the chief. But I was working here...

K: Now, you're not actually an Indian by descent, are you?

LI: No, that was just a figure of speech.

K: Oh, like a metaphor.

LI: What would you like to know about what we have?

K: I noticed you have Cliff Notes, which I think would be a popular selection among college students. Do you have a pretty fair selection of Cliff Notes?

LI: Yes, we do. And we can get them all within three days.

K: Now those aren't an actual substitute for reading the work, are they?

LI: No. You know that. I was surprised to find them when I first came here. Not that I particularly want to be quoted for that, but I was surprised. I know when I was going to school, I had never used anything like that. I would have failed instantly. And my teacher would have known if I'd used them immediately, even if I'd look at her straight-faced and said "No."

K: Was she psychic or something?

LI: No, she was just a good teacher.

K: I think Jeff has a question.

J: You're selling this book here: "101 Ways A Cat Is Better Than A Man." Do you actually believe that?

LI: Now, wait a minute. What has this got to do with...

K: What are you doing, Jeff?

J: I don't know.

LI: Do I believe that? I think you'd have to take it on the individual case. You'd have to judge each individual against a cat. I have a cat. They're pretty super.

K: I noticed that you had "Buns Of Steel" over there, you know, the total body workout. I think Jeff could use that book. Would you recommend that to him? I mean, you can see the kid.

LI: I wouldn't know. I think he should ask someone at the Kent Wellness & Fitness Center.

K: Sir Mix-a-Lot sure wouldn't appreciate what you got back there, Jeff. Not that I'm looking or anything.

LI: Do you have any other questions?

K: Yes, as a matter of fact we do. Do you know Wilma, from Wilma's Kitchen? She's not over there anymore. I heard a rumor that she was called as a witness in the O.J. Simpson trial. Do you know where she is?

LI: O.J. who?

K: Simpson.

LI: Who?

K: White Ford Bronco. The Juice.

LI: Wilma's cousin misses Wilma's.

K: Where is she?

LI: I really don't know, actually. My lips are sealed. I can't tell you.

K: We'll stop searching.

We were frustrated, but felt as if Wilma could be around any corner. In hot pursuit, we left the Compleat Bookseller, hopped into Jeff's white Ford Bronco and drove to Wilma's former next door neighbor, The Yard Stick, to find some answers.

K: And your name is?

BL: Brenda Lions.

K: And this store is?

BL: The Yard Stick.

K: What do you sell?

BL: Fabrics, notions, yarn. A little bit of everything.

K: What's a notion?

BL: The things that go along with the fabric to make it into a garment or a quilt. It's just the extra little... things.

K: So this store is for people that want to sew, and make their own handicrafts and stuff?

BL: And cross-stitch, stuff like that.

K: Yeah, I know Jeff really likes to cross-stitch in his spare time.

J: Oh, yeah.

BL: Are you serious?

J: Actually, I have done some cross-stitching. Are those the ones with the plastic frame?

BL: Or the canvas.

J: Yeah. It was something like that.

BL: Well that's good.

K: I used to cross-stitch when I was a little kid, too.

J: Well, this wasn't when I was a little kid, this was just last year.

K: My dad told me it was unmanly to cross-stitch, so I had to stop.

BL: Some of the best designers are men.

K: Do you get a lot of students in here that want... I don't know... to re-upholster their couch or something?

BL: No, but they do make curtains and patch their jeans.

K: Patch their jeans? I have seen some kids with patches walking around, 'cause they can't really afford to get new pants. And speaking of that, do you offer any kind of student discount or anything? Maybe if some of them wanted to start cross-stitching?

BL: No.

K: Jeff, I'm sorry, but you may have to discontinue your cross-stitching efforts, unless you can earn some more money.

J: I guess so. I'll have to get a job.

K: Let's see, what else do you sell here? What's this over here. It says, "Udder Cream." WHAT IS UDDER CREAM?! Oh my God, it's like a cow. A cow with udders. Why would anyone want to rub that on themselves?

BL: To keep their hands soft.

K: Cows don't even have hands. We better tell that guy from Procolino's. He'll love this stuff! Hey, do you know where Wilma is, from Wilma's kitchen? Should we expect to see her on milk cartons or something? She's just gone.

BL: Yeah, she is gone. She's Shirley. Do you know Shirley?

K: Yeah. She was the very first column we ever did together, and now she's gone.

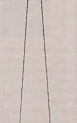
BL: She closed, but she's still teaching at Chesapeake College.

K: Do you know where we could contact her?

BL: No, but I know that she lives next door, upstairs.

K: She does?

BL: Yeah.



K: WE FOUND WILMA! Our quest is completed. We have succeeded once again and triumphed over adversity! Aren't you excited Jeff?

J: That's great Kevin, and I'm just as excited as you are, but I still don't like what you said about my butt. Ω on scenic Swan Creek near Rock Hall offers a full care event horse facility with a private atmosphere. We have two stalls available at reasonable rates. Also TB event horses for lease and for sale. Instruction, trailering.

Humphrey's Point Farm

639-2832

We Proudly Serve STARBUCKS COFFEE

Achieve a higher state of "Bean"

espressos • cappuccinos • lattes moos • mochaccinos • hazelnuss
creme caramel

baguettes • breads • croissants
pecan rolls • danish • bagels • muffins focaccia • espresso cheesecake
pizzelles • brownies
cookies • tarts

find a cozy spot and warm up at . . .

the Cellar
coffee bar & bakery

Take a Stroll down WINE ALLEY

FEBRUARY WINE SPECIALS

ROBERT PECOTA VINEYARDS

Featured Wines Of The Month

THE KISSING WINES FOR VALENTINES
1994 CAMAY BEAUJOLAIS $7.50/bottle
1994 SAUVIGNON BLANC $9.25/bottle

1992 MERLOT STEVEN ANDRE $16.50/bottle
1991 KARAS CABERNET SAUVIGNON $19.75/bottle

Bob recently purchased land in Talbot County. He loves the scenery and history of the Eastern Shore of Maryland. He will be spending as much time as possible in the area when he is not busy making spectacular wines in Calistoga, located in the Napa Valley next to Chateau Montelena.

Also available . . . etched I love you bottles of Sterling 1988 Cabernet Sauvignon for $25 a bottle.

NOW OPEN DOWNSTAIRS AT THE IMPERIAL HOTEL 778-5600

Men's Swimming: Still undefeated

Dave Kraft

The W.C. men's swimming program remained undefeated by defeating St. Mary's College 132-68, despite not scoring their last two events. There were 13 season-best times. The team of Peter Ward, Jason Campbell, Tim Parent, and Chris Freisheim won the 200 Medley Relay; Tyler McCarthy, Julien Gaudion, Perry Holland, and Ryu Kawai took second; and Scott Steinmuller and Tim Whittier swam season bests in the 200 IM and 200 Back, respectively. Dave Cola, Dan Woodall, and Dave Csekaj swept the 1000 Free; Cola and Woodall swam season bests. Drew Fritch won the 200 Free in a season-best time that moved him to second on W.C.'s all time list, as Erric Hetzer and Chris Freisheim completed the sweep. Parent won the 50 Free in 22.89, with Campbell third and Holland fourth. Ward, Rob Cronin, and Dave Kraft swept the 200 IM, Cronin and Kraft in season bests. Steinmuller, Parent, and Kawai swept the 100 Fly. Fritch swam a season best 50.92 in the 100 Free, and Ward, McCarthy, and Cronin swept the 100 Back. Cola, Woodall, and Hetzer swept the 500 Free, all in season bests. Campbell won the 100 Breast, as Gaudion and Kraft followed in season bests; Kraft's time moved him to fourth on the all-time list.

The men's team will be at home on Saturday to swim Conference-champion Gettysburg. Come see how the team stacks up against the champs. Ω

Photo by Kelly Youngblood

Robin Woollens thinks about the race while Liz Likens and Amy Draper discuss strategy

Sho'women first in Conference

Dave Kraft

The members of the Washington College women's swim team continued to shock their opponents as they rolled over St. Mary's College by the score of 139-66, raising their record to 9-0, and placing them first in the Centennial Conference. The team broke three school records and had 10 season best times.

The two individual records that were broken were both held by All-American Kasey Carroll. The first was the 200 Free, in which freshman Danielle Sullivan swam in 2:03.17, as usual, coming from behind to win. Freshman Megan Bradley then broke the 100 Fly record with a 1:03.02. To end the meet, the 200 Free Relay team of Sullivan, Casey Bane, Barbara Murphy, and Meredith Bathgate lowered the school mark to 1:46.30.

W.C.'s 200 Medley Relay teams dominated those of St. Mary's. Bathgate, Colleen Roberts, Bradley, and Jenn Voss took first, and Erin Miller, Darlene Schaub, Amy Draper, and Heather Beauchamp placed second. Jen Dow and Barbara Murphy shaved 15 and eight seconds off their respective times to place 1-2 in the 1000 Free, both in season bests, and moving them into fourth and fifth on the W.C. all-time list in that event. In addition to Sullivan's record-breaking 200, Colleen Roberts swam a season best. Bane, Schaub, and Voss placed 2-3-4 in the 50 Free. Bradley won the 200 IM in the first time she swam the event, and placed fifth on W.C.'s all-time list. Denise Hakanson and Miller placed second and third to complete the sweep. Bane, Murphy, and Liz Likens swept the 100 Free; Likens dropped several seconds for a season best. Bathgate won the 100 Back, with Miller and Hakanson third and fourth. Sullivan won the 500 Free in 5:40.02, placing her on the all-time list. Amy Draper swam a season best in that same event. Schaub stayed unbeaten in the 100 Breast, with Voss second and Likens fourth.

"Who would have believed from 2-9 to 9-0 in one season?" said Coach Kim Lessard, who is extremely optimistic about the women's team's progress. The team will face defending Conference champion Gettysburg at the Casey Swim Center on Saturday. Ω

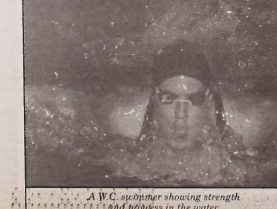

Photo by Kelly Youngblood

A W.C. swimmer showing strength and prowess in the water

Sho'women dunk three in a row

Erika K. Ford

Washington women's basketball solidly spanked Bryn Mawr Tuesday night 64-44.

Scoring 41 points in the second half, the Sho'women kept a solid lead over the Mawrters.

The team's three consecutive wins this week end a recent slump. The Sho'women now hold a 8-9 record, and stand 4-5 in the Centennial Conference.

Against Bryn Mawr, sophomore forward Allison Wentworth had 14 points and 11 rebounds. Sophomore Eboni Taylor grabbed 12 rebounds. Taylor leads the Sho'women in both scoring and rebounding, with 16.4 ppg and 12.1 rpg.

The team shot 83% from the free throw line in the first half, but was just 35% in overall field goals.

In last Saturday's game at Swarthmore, Washington captured a 55-43 win.

Freshman forwards Karen Sieger and Kristen Snell scored 36 of Washington's points. Sieger made eight of 14 field goals (57%) and was four for seven at the free-throw line with 20 points. Snell shot eight for 17 and added 16 points.

Wentworth grabbed seven rebounds, as did freshman guard / forward Megan Miller.

"We're young, and we don't have all of the experience that more established league teams have," Wentworth commented, "but we've worked hard through a long season."

Sophomore guard / forward LeeAnn Lezzer contributed nine points after acing five of seven free throws.

"One of our strengths this season," Lezzer said, "is that we have more even scoring than usual. A lot of players contribute."

Photo by Adam Fenster / Contributing Photographer

Karen Sieger concentrates hard while making a top-of-the-key jumper.

The Sho'women had an overall 37.5% field goal percentage, and a spectacular second half at the line, where they shot 80% (12-15). Sieger also had 10 steals.

"We showed a great team effort," Assistant Coach Geoff Lanier said. "Quality play helped us win."

In last Wednesday's game at home, Washington beat Haverford with another 55-43 victory. Center Eboni Taylor led the team with 16 points and 14 rebounds.

Last night the Sho'women traveled to play Philadelphia Bible, and tomorrow they'll face Muhlenberg in an away game.

On Tuesday, February 7, the team faces Ursinus at home. On Thursday, February 9, Washington will also take on Western Maryland at home. Both games start at 7:30 p.m. Ω

POW

Washington College's Player of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an athlete displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho men.

This week's POW goes to a deserving gal who's helped make W.C. women's swimming the surprising new powerhouse on the Eastern Shore. Senior co-captain Amy Draper has been a solid swimmer for four years at W.C., placing in the butterfly each year at Conference playoff meets. She hails from Felton, DE and majors in business. Draper, Minda Martin's all-time favorite second floor RA, was a member of a record-setting relay team last season. Miss Amy has also been on the All-American Academic team for three years while swimming. You might not believe it, but after so much time in the pool, she's got an actual Gill too.

Honorable mention this week goes to that infamous Benjamin T. Hinkle, who keeps leading men's swimming to victory.

Also, let's all lift our glasses this weekend to all the winter sports teams. These guys and gals run a little faster, push a little harder, and bust a gut to give Washington victories that not only signify their excellence, but all of ours.

February 7 and February 9 can be free pizza days for you and your friends!

Come cheer the loudest and best for the women's basketball team as they take on first Ursinus then Western Maryland. Take a study break, support women's athletics at W.C. and win PIZZA!

2 FREE LARGE PIZZAS!

Sho'men basketball bows to Swarthmore and Dickinson and defeats Wesley at home

A rough week for the Sho'men as they lose two on the road and win a non-Conference match at home.

by Busker

Washington took on Conference rival Haverford. Haverford is in Washington's half of the Conference, which means this was their first meeting of two.

The game was very close. Washington was down at the half 46-41. The Sho'men were impressive from the field with 45.9% shooting and 87% foul shooting.

The Sho'men outshot the Fords by ten in the second half but could not get ahead in the final minutes as they tied the score with three minutes left.

Adam Poe and Ben Harris each had 23 points, while no one else got into double digits. Jerry was the next leader with seven points. Derek Cuff, who usually scores into the double digits, had six points.

Harris, Lapp, and Awantang were perfect on the free-throw line. Derek Cuff and Jerry Davis contributed decisively with two blocks each. Harris also had three steals. Poe, Cuff, and Davis each had one steal.

Cuff and Davis also came up big defensively with seven and 10 rebounds respectively. Ed Hicks, Adam Poe, and Mark Awantang had 17 rebounds together.

Washington lost the game by four, 77-73, in the last three minutes to give Haverford their third win in the Conference.

When the Sho'men took on Swarthmore, it was a repeat of the Haverford game. The Sho'men were up at the half by four, 35-31. But their percentage from the field was still under 50%.

Washington needed to continue to dominate the second half. Swarthmore came out and outshot Washington, 47-36. Swarthmore went on to win the game 78-71, giving Washington their second upset on the road.

The top scorers in the game were Ben Harris with 20, Derek Cuff with 16, and Adam Poe with 14. Cuff also had two steals and three blocks. Jerry Davis continued to show his strength in the paint with three blocks. Adam Poe was the top rebounder of the game with five grabs.

Derek Cuff and Ben Harris each had three three-pointers, the only ones of the game. Ed Hicks and Adam Poe had four and six rebounds respectively.

The Sho'men had a tough time on the road.

"We were in both games 'til the end," Coach Finnegan told The Elm. "We had tied both with minutes remaining and at the end just missed too many shots."

The Sho'men had a turn for the better when they returned home and took on nearby Wesley College.

Washington came out strong, winning the tip-off and getting the quick lead with solid passes and good shot selection.

Ed Harris, Jerry Davis, Ben Harris, Derek Cuff, and Adam Poe were off to a good but slow start. Wesley had three players down low, all 6'6", and Washington did not let that stop them as they kept the lead the entire game.

Harris, Poe, and Cuff bypassed the Wesley defense by making three-pointers early on. Wesley seemed to score one point for Washington's every three.

Freshmen Bradd Burkhart, James Carpenter, and Matt King were all strong forces on the court as they forced turnovers and made points for the Sho'men, increasing the lead. Carpenter came up with one steal that resulted in a Sho'men basket.

As the Sho'men continued to score and the shot score down for the first half, Bradd Burkhart showed good offensive skill as he found Jerry Davis inside for two. As the Sho'men headed into the locker room they were ahead 38-29.

The second half was a continuation of the first as the Sho'men continued to dominate the boards and the score.

The same five started for Washington, as Ben Harris opened up with another three-pointer. Derek Cuff followed up with another three minutes later. Jerry Davis was fouled and made both free throws. Adam Poe followed with an inside jumper. Five minutes into the second half, Washington was ahead 56-36.

Ben Harris pulled an underarm lay-up and was fouled, making it a three-point play.

On the other end of the court, Ed Hicks was coming up with important rebounds to keep Wesley from scoring. Mark Awantang hustled down court and prevented a sneaky Wesley guy from making a breakaway lay-up by stripping him of the ball. Mark then hustled back and had a three-point play when he was fouled on a baseline jumper.

Greg Metrinko came in and played solid offense, passing the ball inside to Hicks, who made the lay-up.

Jerry continued to be big on the boards offensively and defensively as he coupled good rebounds with excellent shots inside.

Derek Cuff was tough offensively as he drove the lane for two, increasing W.C.'s lead to 12.

James Carpenter showed his moves as he drove the lane and put away a lay-up. As the clock wore down, Paul Kenny and Joe Burke came in to pressure the Wesley team. Kenny was fouled and increased the Washington lead by one.

Washington won the game by 20, 80-60.

Four Sho'men shot in the double digits. Jerry Davis had a personal high with 22 points; Ben Harris followed with 18; Adam Poe racked up 14; and Derek Cuff had 12. Davis also had 11 rebounds. Ed Hicks beat his personal best with nine rebounds. Ben Harris and Adam Poe each had four steals.

The Sho'men led the game the entire time. They face more Conference rivals on the road against Muhlenberg and Ursinus. Their next home game is against Conference rival Haverford, followed by a game against Swarthmore. Their last game is against number one in the country F&M.

All these games are crucial to get Washington to the Conference playoffs. Washington is currently second in their half of the Conference. Winning the rest of their games will ensure them a place in the top of the Conference. Be sure not to miss any of the home contests and try to go on the road with the team as well. We have all seen that crowd support can make the difference. Ω

Derek Cuff: "Push it out, push it out – way out."

PHOTO BY KELLY YOUNGBLOOD

The Super Bowl in review: No surprises but some great commercials

by Jen Pipkin

Well, if you're looking for an article on how I told you the Super Bowl was going to suck, you are not going to find it here. The Super Bowl was great. I mean it was so close even down to the last second. Okay, let's say that in the last two minutes of the game the entire 49er team came down with a case of diarrhea, and only one man was left and, trust me, it was not Jim Dukta. But anyway it turns out the guy left is that really annoying fat guy who painted half his belly red and his other half gold. Let me tell you the Niners kicked his butt and scored a TD before anybody knew what happened and got Steve Young some Milk of Magnesia to calm his stomach.

But as the rest of the real world knows, that did not happen and we saw a slaughter instead. Within the first minute and 24 seconds the 49ers scored the fastest touchdown in the Indiana with five. The game ended at 49 to 26, although the Chargers seemed to get lucky on their last two touchdowns.

The battle of the commercials seemed to be better than the game itself. In the first quarter the Frito Lay commercial won with the bald guy from Seinfeld ending up on the field with a parachute on. It was not real but it looked cool and at the end of that quarter the 49ers led with the score 14 to 7.

The second quarter had a really poor Budweiser commercial with three Frogs saying Bud—Wei—Ser. It was really stupid. But Nike kicked some serious butt when Deion Hopper came forward and gave a speech that was so touching that I cried. I was in a room full of guys and I cried. I mean he gave the Gettysburg Address of sports talk. He brought the game to us all, even those who don't like football. It was something that brought a nation together to remember the love of the game. He freed the little kid in all of us to think about the first time we hit a ball or caught a game or got the shot of a lifetime or finished that last mile. He opened our minds and hearts. "It was hard-core." I quote some people who were watching it.

McDonald's tried too hard with their cheese-ball guys who have been on all Fall. It has been okay but they could not touch the Nike's Dennis Hopper. At the end of the first half, the score was 28 to 10 in favor of the 49ers.

In the third quarter Pepsi tried to make fun of Coke but it was a feeble attempt. The commercial was kind of weak. During this commercial, Dave from Kent House said, "Hey isn't that a Schlitz commercial? Aren't those usually on at three o'clock in the morning?" Well Dave, I am not really sure about that, but if you say so, I agree. Coors Lite had a great commercial with an ugly dog, but I think we were still in awe of the half-time show with Tony Bennett and some Indiana Jones story about saving the Super Bowl trophy, and it ended with a really bad song from the Lion King, Elton John's "Can You feel the Love." Well I felt something , and let me tell you it wasn't love. It was more like an upset stomach from that monstrous thing they called entertainment. So after the half-time and third quarter it was all over. The 49ers led by a score of 42 to 18.

In the fourth quarter Jerry Rice caught the ball to surpass Super Bowl XX's five pass touchdowns and break his record even with a separated shoulder. Well, the score ended up being 49 to 26 and Wilson tried with a commercial that said, "The Right Equipment Makes the Difference." I think maybe somebody should have told the Chargers. Maybe that was what Deion was telling the offensive lineman when they exchanged words in the third quarter.

Well, that's the Super Bowl and I guess we'll see you all again next year at the Super Bowl. Or do I mean the NFC Championships? Ω

Photo by Kelly Vickerhoof

Jen Dow gets The Elm's up-close-and-personal photographer wet.

Just a reminder that IM indoor soccer is scheduled to begin next week. All of those interested in playing must sign up with me by this Friday. My ext. is 8922 or contact me through BlitzMail. Entry fee is one dollar per person. Remember that IFC points are at stake.

Scores

Men's Swimming

Washington 132
St. Mary's 68

Women's Swimming

Washington 139
St. Mary's 66

Men's Basketball

Washington 73
Haverford 77

Washington 71
Swarthmore 78

Washington 80
Wesley 60

Women's Basketball

Washington 55
Haverford 43

Washington 55
Swarthmore 43

Washington 64
Bryn Mawr 44

Where You Need To Be This Week!

As the winter sports are drawing to a close, do not miss your chance to see how Sho'men sports dominate. Do not miss the last home swim meet February 4 against Gettysburg at 1 p.m.! Do not miss the pizza games of the women's basketball; do not miss out on any more of their wins! Finally, the men's basketball team also enjoys the home crowd support and needs it as they continue to be in the top of the Conference. SUPPORT WAC SPORTS!!!

Saturday, February 4

Women's and Men's Basketball @ Muhlenberg, 1 p.m. and 3 p.m.

Swimming vs. Gettysburg, 1 p.m.

Tuesday, February 7

Women's Basketball vs. Ursinus, 7:30 p.m. (Pizza, Pizza)

Men's Basketball @ Ursinus, 7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, February 8

Swimming @ Swarthmore, 6:30 p.m.

Thursday, February 9

Women's Basketball vs. Western Maryland, 7:30 p.m. (Pizza, Pizza)

The Washington College

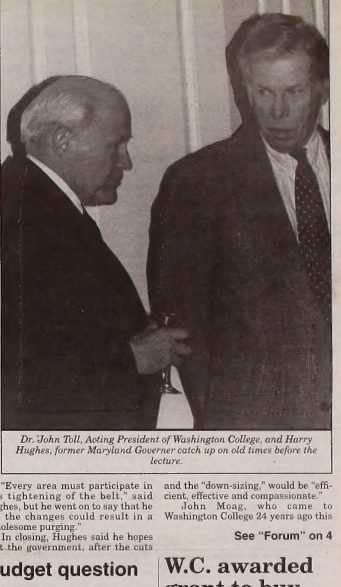
ELM

Volume 66, Number Sixteen

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Politics in the Forum

Huges, Moag discuss "The New Political Scenario"



Rachael Fink

Following time-honored tradition, the William James Forum brought two distinguished guests to Hynson Lounge Tuesday night. Former Maryland Governor and Chairman of the Democratic Party of Maryland Harry Hughes, and Chairman of the Stadium Authority in Baltimore and Secretary of the Washington College Board of Visitors and Governors John Moag ('77) came to Washington College to discuss the changes in "The New Political Scenario," in Maryland and nationally.

After a glowing introduction by Acting President Dr. John Toll, during which Toll referred to the two speakers as "two of the most effective members of state government that I know," Hughes returned the compliment indicating that he knew "no one who contributed as much" to education in Maryland as Toll.

Hughes, who began his speech by telling two amusing stories related to the ups and downs of speech delivering, focused most of his discussion on Maryland government and the effect that changes in Congress could have on local and state governments. He indicated that there has been a shift over the past several years in voting trends in Maryland. Hughes illustrated this point by relating a story from his years in public service. At one point in his career, Hughes was asked to run for governor on a tax-cutting platform. He declined the opportunity at that time but indicated that during the past election Paris Glendening was the only governor to win against an opponent running on a tax-cutting platform. Hughes indicated, that the tremendous growth in government and the "erosion of public confidence in government" has caused voters to re-think what they want from and expect from their government.

As for the change from a Democratic-controlled Congress to a Republican-controlled Congress, Hughes said that the change would have "a tremendous effect on state government." Federal budget cuts will effect the budgets of state governments, but at the same time, Hughes indicated that he hopes the changes will lead to a "realistic evaluation of government and its programs."

Dr. John Toll, Acting President of Washington College, and Harry Hughes, former Maryland Governer catch up on old times before the lecture.

"Every area must participate in this tightening of the belt," said Hughes, but he went on to say that he felt the changes could result in a "wholesome purging."

In closing, Hughes said he hopes that the government, after the cuts and the "down-sizing," would be "efficient, effective and compassionate."

John Moag, who came to Washington College 24 years ago this

See "Forum" on 4

Toll's first Faculty meeting addresses budget question

Acting president impressed with Washington College community members

Kate Meagher

During Monday's Faculty meeting, Dr. John Toll, acting president of Washington College outlined his goals for the school.

"I want to do everything I can to strengthen and advance the program and cause of Washington College," said Toll. He encouraged faculty members to let him know what their "basic priorities and understandings" of the College are in order to aid Toll in his efforts.

Toll has been "tremendously impressed" by the members of the W.C. community whom he has encountered thus far, "especially the students," and their "commitment to the values of Washington College."

"I understand that the Faculty and staff are the key to any institution," said Toll, "and many Faculty here are leaders in their disciplines and scholars committed to helping students to learn. This is something of which you [the Faculty] all should be extremely proud.

"It's with complete honesty that I go out and recruit students to come here." Toll has been traveling in an effort to recruit students to attend Washington College. He has spent this week in Baltimore, New Jersey, and New York, and will be in Florida this weekend to meet with prospective students.

Toll emphasized recruitment as "critical."

"You are the best salesmen," he told the Faculty. The goal for next year's entering class is 300 students. That would be a 10% increase over this year's freshman class.

"It's very important to let people know how good Washington College is," said the interim president. Though some may consider it bragging, Toll feels that it is imperative that the Faculty "spread the good word about all the fine work" that goes on at W.C.

"I think this is an outstanding college," said Toll. I want to be sure that Washington College becomes in every sense 'Maryland's First College.'"

Toll wishes to aid in efforts to "strengthen and clarify" the academic program and has shown "support and enthusiasm" for TAFFY (the Task Force for the First-Year Experience and Distribution) as well as the proposal of a minor in environmental science. Toll feels that it is "very important to think of innovations," while emphasizing "proper faculty review for changes in the academic program."

Top on Toll's list of priorities is that of achieving a balanced budget during this fiscal year. In an effort to achieve this balance, Toll increased the goal for the Annual Fund from $1.4 million to $2 million. This is over a 50% increase over last year's goal, and, as Toll admits, "That's not easy." So far, the Annual Fund is 58% ahead of last year's pace, with over $1.3 million raised already.

As to the prospect of a balanced budget, Toll is optimistic that with the combination of a large Annual Fund and some cuts in spending, "We can achieve it."

Dean Joachim Scholz followed Toll's remarks with a report of Faculty achievements which occurred since the last meeting. Rosette Roat and Frank Creegan received a $90,000 grant for a nuclear magnetic resonance spectrometer and Rosemary Ford received a $27,000 grant for an ultra centrifuge. Richard Striner had an art deco book reviewed in the Washington Times. Donald Munson was renamed Treasurer of the American Microscopical Foundation. Thanks went to J. Wright for his help in the redesigning of the faculty lounge in Bill Smith. Sean O Connor was thanked for his teaching workshops in January which, said Scholz, were "helpful and well-attended."

See "Faculty" on 4

W.C. awarded grant to buy NMR machine

Scott Koon

Washington College has been awarded a grant of $90,000 from the Keck Foundation to buy a nuclear magnetic resonance spectrometer. Dr. Rosette Roat, Chair of the Chemistry Department, estimates the instrument will cost about $175,000. The Keck Foundation grant will be matched dollar for dollar by the National Science Foundation. "We're trying to get the best instrument for the lowest cost," Dr. Roat said in an interview with The Elm. Dr. Roat spent this past Tuesday at Virginia Commonwealth University comparing two NMR machines there.

The nuclear magnetic resonance spectrometer, or NMR, will be useful for faculty research, student research and instruction. "The utility of this will be across our curriculum," Dr. Roat said. "It will be used even in General Chemistry. We're trying to get a machine which is user-friendly [The students] would definitely be able to use it in their sophomore year, for example in Organic Chemistry."

Nuclear magnetic resonance spectrometry uses a super conducting

See "NMR" on #

Inside This Week's Elm

Financial Aid Information — Scholarship opportunities abound. Descriptions and deadlines listed within. 4

Dropped A Whole Degree — Aaron Blake is back to testify to Testament's quality, even without Skolnick. 10

WGYD — Kevin and Jeff come through for W.C. students! A 15% discount for all, and a date with Juan Hernandez for one lucky applicant. 11

Freshman Reading — No wine for the kids, but the writing was enough to attract throngs. 6

"A journalist whose writing does not stir up either a duel or a lawsuit is a bad journalist"

- Hippolyte de Villenessant, Founder, Le Figaro, 1866

To the Editor:

This saying, inscribed on a slightly yellowed, curling piece of paper, occupies a prominent place on the Elm office walls. Put there by former Elm Editor-in-Chief Pat Attenasio, it serves both as a piece of advice and as a dare to be won by whomever holds the position of Editor-in-Chief.

Journalism is one part good reporting, one part good judgment, one part good writing, and one part huge responsibility. Journalism is not about conforming, confessing or confusing. It is about informing.

A good newspaper is at once easy to read, informative, thought-provoking and even, at times, inflammatory. A good newspaper presents all the sides of all the issues whenever possible. It is balanced, accurate, and unbiased. A good newspaper is not simply entertainment, but rather must balance entertainment with information.

As editor of The Elm, I spend a lot of time thinking about what our paper is and what I think it should be. I like to think of The Elm not just as a product produced for a fee, but also as a service the Elm staff provides for members of their audience. We try to fulfill this service by presenting timely, appropriate and informative articles about Washington College and the people that make up the Washington College community. By producing the best newspaper we can, we hope to inform the community about all aspects of Washington College and life on this campus.

As a service, the most important aspect of The Elm is not the paper, but the audience. I've spent lots of time considering our audience; students, faculty, staff, administrators, board members, alumni, and friends of Washington College. All of these people have spent considerable time, money and energy trying to make this institution one of which we can be proud. It is this audience that the Elm staff writes for and it is this audience that decides whether or not we are doing the job that we were hired to do. This relationship between the staff and the readers carries with it certain responsibilities for both parties concerned.

It is the responsibility of the Elm staff to provide accurate, interesting and unbiased information whenever possible. It is the responsibility of the audience to take this information, and the context in which it is presented, and make use of that information.

We, the members of the Elm staff, are charged with producing a newspaper that will appeal to the wide variety of people that make up the college community while at the same time informing the community about those things which directly affect the whole or members of the whole. As a result of the position of The Elm as the official College newspaper, we walk the fine line that separates journalism and public relations. To step too far to either side of this line is to undermine the nature of The Elm as a newspaper.

This focus on journalism is one of the most important things separating The Elm from the variety of other publications produced on campus. Although members of the staff do have literary aspirations, The Elm is not The Washington College Review. Although members of the staff do want to present Washington College as an institution of merit, The Elm is not The Washington College Magazine. Although members of the staff do want to provide an account of life at Washington College, The Elm is not The Pegasus. Each of these publications is unique and provides a unique service to the Washington College community but none of them can provide an all-inclusive look at Washington College.

The Elm, and particularly The Elm of the last semester, has recently received criticism from some members of its audience. Some claim that The Elm is giving Washington College an undo amount of negative publicity. The Elm staff is focusing too much energy and column inches on the controversies. We are not taking into account the impact of making public those controversies.

Freedom of speech and freedom of press are acknowledged by those raising objections to the coverage given to such issues as the "Fessler case" and the current financial situation of the College. They do believe, however, that these freedoms could be countered by a healthy regard for the impact of publicly raising these controversies.

The object of The Elm, as a newspaper, is to raise these issues before the public eye. We have a duty to present, for our audience, the issues that affect them. We have a duty to inform. The Elm is a newspaper, not a public relations publication. Our first responsibility is to our readership, many of whom rely on the paper for information regarding the various controversies that are ever-present and not necessarily unique to Washington College.

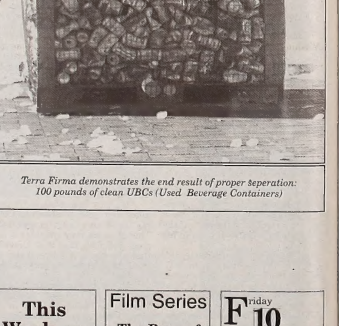
It has been asserted that presenting and discussing the issues that cause dissension at Washington College is detrimental to the reputation of this institution, that "bad publicity" is damaging Washington College. This argument, while sound on paper, does not survive contextualization within the wider world of academia in this changing atmosphere. Educational institutions across the nation are faced with the same or similar problems facing the Washington College community. Questions of tenure and budget deficits, as well as concerns for expanding curriculum are at the forefront of the minds of college students, professors, and administrators everywhere. If Washington College were to ignore the problems and not at least attempt to find amiable and workable solutions to these problems, the institution would swiftly fall behind and all of the energy expended to make the College one of the best in the nation would be reduced to empty gestures.

As editor of this paper, I firmly believe that myself and the members of the staff are doing the best possible job to produce the best possible paper for the Washington College community. I do recognize, however, that this belief is not held by all. The Elm is not the sole property of those who work to produce it. It is the property of the entire community and, therefore, community input is important to its survival, especially when issues of journalistic integrity versus public relations duties are raised. With this said, I would like to encourage all of the readers of The Elm to consider this question and provide the editorial staff with your opinions.

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink

News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Editor
Mindie J. Kaplan and Sarah Bell
Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Erika Ford
Layout Editor
Brian Matheson



Circulation Manager
Charles K. Buckner, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Joshua T. Lawrence, IV
Office Manager
Steven Kuo
Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and cr
Letters must be received by the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday nights at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8565.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

"Recycling Revitalization"

This past week was given the title "Recycling Week" by Terra Firma's Recycling Committee. The purpose was to revitalize the college's recycling habits by drawing attention to the fact that recycling does exist at Washington College. Our goal was to make people aware of our recycling efforts and generate support. The large box filled with aluminum cans which was placed in Martha Washington Square was the primary means of communicating the theme, "Please Participate and Separate; Washington College Recycles." In fact, numerous posters with that slogan were hung throughout dormitories and other campus buildings. Recycling guideline posters were replaced on dorm hallways along with bin labels that were worn or missing. Letters were sent to RAs to remind them of recycling procedures; they were asked to review the guidelines with hall residents. In addition, a new collection site has been approved for behind Minta Martin, which will facilitate bin emptying. Indoor bins are also currently under consideration for the quad dorms, and a proposal is now being reviewed by the SGA which would more closely regulate hallway recycling. Our goal is to make recycling easier and more efficient for everyone!

-Keith Morgan, Recycling Coordinator

Terra Firma demonstrates the end result of proper seperation: 100 pounds of clean UBCs (Used Beverage Containers)

This Week on Campus

Feb. 10 - 16

Film Series

The Boys of St. Vincent

Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon., 7:30 p.m.

Friday 10

The Girl From Havana,
musical revue of showstoppers
Tawes Theatre, 8 p.m.

Saturday 11

The Girl From Havana,
Tawes Theatre, 8 p.m.

Sunday 12

The Girl From Havana,
Tawes Theatre 2 p.m.

Monday 13

A Reading In Memory of Ralph Ellison,
Lit. House, 4:30 p.m.

Tuesday 14

Valentine's Day

Wednesday 15

Thursday 16

Thinking through ...

Title, title, title

by Paul Briggs

The United States may soon be involved in a trade war with China. At issue is the frequent violations of American copyright laws by Chinese black-market entrepreneurs, and the apparent reluctance of the government of Beijing to put serious effort into restraining these violations.

For some time, U.S. manufacturers have expressed concern about the illegal traffic in such items as pirated CDs and tapes, which jeopardizes the ability of legitimate merchants to serve the gigantic Chinese market. The United States government has been trying to persuade Beijing to take action. Recently, having decided that nothing else will work, the Clinton administration has announced that it will place export taxes on goods shipped to China. It is generally agreed that China will retaliate with similar measures.

It may be that the Chinese government really has been doing all it can. With an economy growing at 14% every year, China today is essentially a boom town of 1.3 billion whose mayor is at death's door. It suffers from large-scale versions of the problems common to all boom towns. Chief among these is a skyrocketing crime rate accompanied by loss of faith in the civil authorities and increased reliance on vigilanteism and private security. Likewise China, this year's According to the Far Eastern Economic Review:

> "Inflation is eroding real incomes as public enterprise threatens the iron rice bowl of lifetime employment. Urban renewal has uprooted an unprecedented number of city-dwellers. Corruption is unabashed, and vice flourishes as a way for the newly rich to flaunt their often ill-gotten gains. Looser household registration rules and lagging produce prices have sent up to 150 million peasants flooding into the cities as migrant laborers, creating a floating, restive urban underclass. . . Arbitrary tax levies, local warlordism and internecine feuds beset China's hinterland."[*]

Under these circumstances, there seems to be little chance that the authorities in Beijing will be able to effectively curb the traffic in bootlegged CDs. Nonetheless, it is unlikely that President Clinton will back down. He is already taking considerable criticism for his executive order authorizing a $20 billion loan to bail out the Mexican government, and he can scarcely afford to back down in front of China a second time.

The first time he did, you will recall, was over the issue of whether China should retain most-favored-nation (MFN) status (which, it turned out, was actually the norm for international trade relations) despite flagrant human rights abuses. During the campaign, Clinton excoriated Bush for "coddling" dictators like Deng Xiaoping and promised to link human rights with trade if elected. Not long before his death, Richard Nixon offered this warning about such efforts:

> "Today, China's economic power makes United States lectures about morality and human rights imprudent. Within a decade, it will make them irrelevant. Within two decades, it will make them laughable. By then the Chinese may threaten to withhold most-favored-nation status from the United States unless we do more to improve living conditions in Detroit, Harlem and South-Central Los Angeles."[†] (This sounds hard to imagine, until you remember that if China's per capita income rose to that of Taiwan, it would have nearly twice the GNP of the United States.)

Eventually, of course, Clinton found it necessary to put the human rights issue on the back burner and continue China's MFN status. The result of this is that our current policy has an uncertain moral basis: apparently, we will tolerate pro-democracy student demonstrators being mowed down in Tiananmen Square and political prisoners being used as slave labor, but not American rock stars being deprived of their royalties.

The real question, however, is: just how much influence do we really have over events in China? It is an article of faith among many Washington policymakers that the United States has the ability, through careful manipulation of carrots and sticks, to micromanage the politics of other nations, causing some factions to rise and others to fall. We may soon find out just how much truth there is in this.

[*] Lincoln Kaye, "Disorder Under Heaven", Far Eastern Economic Review, 6/9/94, p.22.

[†] Nixon, Richard, Beyond Peace, New York: Random House, 1994, p. 127-128. Ω

Peace Corps representative visits W.C.

Liberal arts majors solicited for employment overseas

Jen Ward

Sherlene McCarther, the recruiting officer for Washington College, spoke in the Commons Room of the CAC on Wednesday, February 7, to a group of about 15 students interested in the Peace Corps. After giving a brief overview of the organization, McCarther went on to discuss the advantages and opportunities both in and after joining the Peace Corps. "Liberal arts majors are needed," she said.

The Peace Corps was started in 1961 as a two-year volunteer program to service other nations in need of help. There are three fundamental goals of the organization: to transfer America's technical skills to other countries, to form a one-on-one relation with the host country, and to bring back and share experience and knowledge gained from other countries. People with vocational training or special skills, particularly in agriculture, are sent to one of over 100 foreign countries. There they undergo a "culture immersion" by completing eight to 12 weeks of language training, and live with local families where they work for two years.

According to McCarther, the Peace Corps, which has 5,900 volunteers currently overseas, is a guest of the served country and in no way aides any country without being asked; not only do countries invite the Corps, but they specify the number of Peace Corps members they need, what kind of assistance they need, and when the Peace Corps will leave. This is why there are no volunteers stationed in Mexico the Mexican government simply hasn't asked for assistance. McCarther also adds that, in the event of a political problem, the Peace Corps forces its volunteers to evacuate the country immediately. This happened to the volunteers in Haiti recently.

The Peace Corps offers several benefits. They will pay for the trip to and from the country, pay a monthly stipend (a bit more at first to help settle in), and offer medical care, life insurance, vacation, and emergency leave. And at the end of two years, they give a "readjustment allowance" of $5400 to cover the transit back to the US. More benefits upon completing an assignment in the Peace Corps include the "Hot Line," a list of job vacancies for only return-volunteers, non-competitive eligibility for civil service jobs, and financial assistance for graduate school.

Students, particularly ones who are majoring in History, Political Science, English, Sociology, Psychology, and Biology, might be particularly interested in the Master's International Program. The advertising brochure states that "as a Master's Internationalist, you can earn your master's degree by completing approximately one year of intensive on-campus study, then serving for two years in the Peace Corps in a related overseas assignment." So when you finish your assignment, not only do you have a master's, but two years of experience as well.

Applying to the Peace Corps can be tedious work. The application itself is 14 pages long, and processing time can range anywhere from nine months to a year. There is no deadline for applications, but one should apply a year before his or her availability date. Once the application has been accepted, one must give an interview to determine maturity, social sensitivity, and emotional stability. In addition, six references are required. There is no upper age limit, although you should be at least 21 to apply. Approximately one out of every eight applicants is accepted.

People wishing to join the Peace Corps should be flexible, have a sincere wish to help people, and a valuable skill to pass on. One must also consider what the Peace Corps can do for him or her: how will the time spent in the Corps enhance one's job or career path? Applications are available in the Career Center. For more information, call (800) 424-8580 or write to Peace Corps 1990 K St., N.W., Rm. 9320 Washington, D.C. 20526. Ω

Twigs 'n Teacups

This Month:
10% off everything except other sale items.
Clothes 30% off or more.
Bring or mention this ad.

April Ann Marshall
(410)778-1708
112 S. Cross Street

We Proudly Serve STARBUCKS COFFEE

Getting you through the "Daily Grind"

espressos • cappuccinos • lattes
moos • mochaccinos • hazelnuts
creme caramel

baquettes • breads • croissants
pecan rolls • danish • bagels • muffins
focaccia • espresso cheesecake
pizzelles • brownies
cookies • tarts

10% Discount with Student ID
Open Evenings

the Cellar
coffee bar & bakery

Take a Stroll down WINE ALLEY

FEBRUARY WINE SPECIALS

ROBERT PECOTA VINEYARDS

Featured Wines Of The Month

THE KISSING WINES FOR VALENTINES
1994 CAMAY BEAUJOLAIS $7.50/bottle
1994 SAUVIGNON BLANC $9.25/bottle
Save $2.00 per bottle

1992 MERLOT STEVEN ANDRE $16.50/bottle
1991 KARAS CABERNET SAUVIGNON $19.75/bottle

Bob recently purchased land in Talbot County. He loves the scenery and history of the Eastern Shore of Maryland. He will be spending as much time as possible in the area when he is not busy making spectacular wines in Calistoga, located in the Napa Valley next to Chateau Montelena.

Also available . . . etched I love you bottles of Sterling 1988 Cabernet Sauvignon for $25 a bottle.

NOW OPEN DOWNSTAIRS AT THE IMPERIAL HOTEL 778-5600

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

In recent weeks, the issue of Professor Audrey Fessler's dismissal has been relegated to the back burner; in Tuesday's Student Government Association Meeting, several senators and class presidents expressed their disapproval of this. The SGA is not willing to let this issue pass by.

Originally, the SGA prepared itself for extreme measures, such as a strike by the student body. Since then, the issue has been divided into specific and general tasks, and this division has seemingly weakened the passion once felt for the situation. At this point, it appears as if the students have all but forgotten the ordeal. This is certainly not the case.

Senior class president Tyler McCarthy, endorsing a return to the once powerful drive to have student voices heard, said "We're going to stick to everything we said we were going to do last semester. We predicted this was going to happen in the second semester when we started; we were told we'd forget about it, and the school is banking on it. If we do that, they're going to win." Given, the senate is conscious of its lack of efficacy in the administration's eyes pertaining to this particular issue, but there is much more optimism pertaining to the general pride of student involvement in the College's affairs. The "Fessler Case" is still is still viewed as a rare and powerful opportunity to get this point across.

SGA president Jamie Baker posed this question: "If we did really believe that we're not going to accomplish much, are we then justified in going for a fight that we know we're going to lose?" The responses from several people served as a resounding "yes." Said Max Walton, "The Student Government Association rarely, rarely, has stood up for a particular issue ... and it's issues like this where I believe firmly that you can't back down ... you have to stay in people's ear and not let them bypass you the next time ... you want to make it so that your respective body is heard every time it speaks. That way, everybody has an equal opportunity to become part of the process ... give up on this issue now, and we lose our respect as part of the process." Walton's drive to stick with the issue was echoed by McCarthy, Bob Brown, Mark Reyero, and Alicia Carberry, among others.

In somewhat routine business, the SGA budget which was distributed last week was passed without change this week. Club funding, which traditionally takes more than the duration of one meeting, passed without change in a matter of several minutes.

Just over a week remains until the annual Birthday Ball. Reservations must be made by tomorrow, February 11. In addition to the previously announced festivities, a breakfast will be held after the Ball, from 1 to 3 a.m. in the Student Center, which will be free of charge. The SGA still needs help setting up for the event. Anyone interested in helping is urged to come to the Cain Gymnasium after 10 p.m. tonight and / or during the day tomorrow.

The research performed by the Task Force for the First-Year Experience and Distribution is expected to result in, in the words of SGA Faculty Advisor Dr. Kevin McKillop, "major changes." The distribution system is in a position to undergo changes reducing it from 12 courses to eight. The required freshman English course, Forms of Literature and Composition, may very well be liquidated and replaced with a four-semester, more uniform course. Following their upcoming meeting with the faculty, TAFFY plans to hold a student forum in which to discuss the proposed changes. The direction of the forum is to be left up to the senate's decision, and, according to Dr. McKillop, "student input is definitely necessary."

An amendment to the SGA's constitution was brought to the floor by senator Corey Stottlemyer, who represents the Student Affairs Committee. The amendment proposes three new seats in the senate: one for a representative of the Inter-Fraternity Council, one for the Panhellic Council (sorority governing body), and a third for the Resident Assistants. The amendment was not voted upon Tuesday, however, due to some nebulous wording that would permit one senator to represent multiple groups. The proposal will be re-worded and voted on next week.

A letter concerning the progress of the Presidential Search Committee was circulated to the Faculty recently. There has been a high degree of interest in the position, resulting in approximately 700 letters and 170 nominations. During the next month and a half, the field will be narrowed, and the finalists will visit the campus in April. ☐

Financial Aid and Scholarship opportunities for Fall of '95

THE AMERICAN CHEMICAL SOCIETY.
The Minority Scholars Program
AWARD: For freshmen & sophomores up to $2,500. For juniors & seniors up to $5,000
Criteria:
• If you are African-American, Hispanic or American Indian,
• a citizen or permanent resident of the US,
• a High School senior, college freshman, sophomore, or junior intending to major in chemistry, biochemistry or chemical engineering
• enrolled full-time in an accredited college or university,
• and have demonstrated high achievement in Chemistry or science.
• have financial need for scholarship aid according to Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) guidelines.
To Apply
• Call toll free 1-800-227-5558 to get an application for this scholarship
Scholarship Requirements
• Letter of recommendation
• Family financial data
• Overall GPA of "B" or better
• Extracurricular activities and community service
• A commitment to the study of chemistry, biochemistry, or chemical engineering and careers in these fields.

ASBURY PARK PRESS JOURNALISM SCHOLARSHIP FOR MINORITY STUDENTS
AWARD: $2,000 for junior year, renewable for senior year
Criteria:
• College Junior
• Minority student interested in Journalism
• Minimum 2.5 GPA and 12 credits per semester
To Apply:
• Send cover letter addressing your interest in journalism
• Resume
• 4 to 6 writing or editing samples
• Send to: Lawrence Benjamin, Asst. Managing Editor
Asbury Park Press
3601 Hwy. 66, Box 1550
Neptune, NJ 07754-1551
Deadline:
• March 1, 1995
GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTING SCHOLARSHIP
AWARD: $2,000
Criteria:
• Seniors enrolled in an accounting program.
• Superior academic record and have plans to pursue a career in state or local government or graduate studies in governmental accounting or public administration.
• Permanent Resident or Citizen of the US or Canada
To Apply:
• Complete application (available in Financial Aid Office) and submit to head of accounting area.
Scholarship Requirements:
• Complete application form
• Statement of proposed career plan or graduate study plan
• Undergraduate transcripts
• Resume
• Dept. Chair's letter of recommendation
Deadline:
• February 20, 1995
PAUL DOUGLAS TEACHER SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM
AWARD: up to $5,000 per academic year
Criteria:
• This program is intended to attract highly able persons to the teaching profession.
Scholarship Requirements:
• Recipients are competitively selected on the basis of college GPA, SAT / ACT scores:
• A writing sample
• Evidence of active participation in community, school or private agency involving teaching
• Awards are up to $5,000 per academic year with an obligation to teach two years for each year or portion of a year for which an award was made.
To Apply:
• Contact the Financial Aid Office
Deadline:
• Applications are accepted from February 1 through March 31.
DE-DC-MD ASSOCIATION OF STUDENT FINANCIAL AID ADMINISTRATORS, INC.
AWARD: $1,000 scholarship for three students in mass relations
Criteria:
• Undergraduate students with at least second year standing and a cumulative GPA of at least 2.5, or
• Graduate students who have completed one year of their program and have cumulative GPA of at least 3.0
• Certified as possessing financial need as defined by Washington College
Scholarship Requirements:
• Recommendation from academic counselor or professor
• Complete application and required essay
Deadline:
Submit application, essay and recommendation to the financial aid office by February 1.
THE MARYLAND ASSOCIATION FOR THE EDUCATIONAL USES OF COMPUTERS MARIO AWARD: $500 scholarship
Criteria:
• Applicants must plan to be certified to teach in either elementary or secondary schools in the State of Maryland by July 1, 1996.
• Have a GPA of 3.2 or better
• Demonstrate an interest in using technology in teaching.
To Apply:
• Applications are available from the Financial Aid Office.
Deadline:
• Deadline for consideration is April 26, 1995.
ROTARY FOUNDATION AMBASSADORIA
Award: up to $21,500
To Apply:
• Student must first apply through local Rotary Club
Criteria:
• Must have completed at least two years of coursework at time of scholarship
• Must be a citizen in a country that has a Rotary Club
Deadline:
• Each Rotary Club has a different deadline starting as early as March 1995.
CIEE UNIVERSITY PROGRAMS. FINANCIAL AID FOR STUDY ABROAD
Award: variable
Criteria:
• For study abroad in CIEE-administered program in developing countries
• Undergraduate student
To Apply:
• Contact CIEE, ISS Department, 205 East 42nd Street, NY, NY 10017-5706. or Call (212)661-1414 ext. 1108. or EMAIL: isicgrants@ciee.org
Deadline: not listed
INTEREST FREE LOANS FROM CENTRAL SCHOLARSHIP BUREAU
FOR SPRING '95
To Apply:
• A resident of Baltimore city or Baltimore County
• Meet family income requirements
• Have applied for Financial Aid
• Accept a Subsidized Stafford Loan if offered
To Apply:
• Call or write to CSB office you receive your Financial Aid Award Package
• After Interview has been set up, send transcripts, copy of your Financial Aid Form, chronological list of school jobs and experiences, teacher references from your field of interest, reference from former employer, statement from your medical doctor.
Contact: CSB, 4001 Clarks Lane, Bristol House Apts. #108, Baltimore, MD 21215 (410) 358-8668 or FAX (410) 358-3217
MARY BENJAMIN ADELMAN RUBIN SCHOLARSHIP FUND
AWARD: $500 to $5,000
Criteria:
• Must a Woman in need of financial assistance and
• A Resident of Maryland
• At least a 3.0 GPA
To Apply:
• Obtain and complete and application form from CSB: Contact: CSB, 4001 Clarks Lane, Bristol House Apts, #108, Baltimore, MD 21215 (410) 358-8668 or FAX (410) 358-3217
• Enclose family and personal financial information and
• College transcripts
• Letters of reference
Deadline: March 1
THE CHRISTA MCAULIFFE SCHOLARSHIP FOUNDATION
AWARD: $1,000
Criteria:
• Maryland State residents
• Enrolled in accredited program leading to teacher certification in a Maryland college or university
• Financial need
• Proof of determination in teaching Requirements:
• Provide letters of recommendation
• Record of life experiences
• Agreement to teach one year in Maryland Public School for each grant received
To Apply:
• Complete application form and all requirements Available in the Financial Aid office
Deadline: March 1, 1995
NATIONAL ITALIAN AMERICAN FOUNDATION
• If you are of Italian decent there are several regional scholarships available.
• For a complete listing of scholarships contact:
Dr. Maria Lombardo, Education Director
The National Italian American Foundation
1860 19th Street, NW
Washington, DC 20009-5599
COMMUNITY SERVICE OPPORTUNITY
Anyone interested in becoming a member of the Maryland Youth Service Action Committee (MYSAC) should contact the Financial Aid Office for details. If you are committed to service others and are willing to commit yourself to a statewide youth service effort this is a wonderful chance.
Deadline: March 15, 1995

Robert Pennington
Salon for Hairdressing
Presents...
Sandra & Dana
113 South Cross Street
778-9747
LOYOLA
50% OFF
Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

c.r.u.d.

creative ranting under duress.

by Jen Ward

I'm rather pessimistic when it comes to love, or at least so I'm told.

Perhaps they've got a point. I've been known to get on my soap box for hours at a time, vehemently (and often incoherently) arguing that love doesn't even really exist—that it's merely a socially accepted figment of the collective imagination.

But then my roommate, who's rather sappy by nature, reminds me of Aristotle's (or was it Ben's?) "Everything in moderation," and reluctantly I agree that maybe I'm being too hasty. I mean, I "love" my cat, right? (Personally, I think we were made for each other — I feed her and she lays on my feet when it's cold. Very strong, very healthy relationship. We've been together ten years this month ...)

Anyway, in the spirit of the Valentine season, I shall concentrate my efforts and discuss only one aspect of this farce, the so called "romantic love."

You know, the kind of love that "just happens" when boy meets girl and they realize they have oh-so-much in common? They become inseparable. ("I don't know if I can make it through my 50-minute class without you!") eventually reaching the point where they call each other what I consider to be obscenities across campus ("Snookum-pookum, did you miss me?" "I thought of nothing else, Honeybunch"). Eventually they start kicking their respective roommates out every night between 6 and 7 p.m. (Ha—and you thought they were watching "Roseanne" ...)

You don't have to read the Bible to know that, inevitably, there's going to be trouble in paradise. But as a veteran of several unrequited "likes," I do have sympathy for failed romances. The thing, though, that I find offensive is that it turns into a circle: anarchy two weeks later, one or both of them is "in love" with new people yet again!

It is this "transformation in general attitude" resulting from the acquisition of a boyfriend / girlfriend that fascinates me. I've gathered research on this phenomenon from several "experts" in the field. And according to William Denton (Thank you very much, William. I'm sure it was really nothing ...) there's actually a name for it: Significant Other Piety. I'm told that, to a certain extent, SOP can actually be good for you. It's when you start to reek of it, when people at the Dining Hall can smell you coming with it from Bunting, that SOP becomes offensive. Excessive SOP causes your single friends — and even single people you don't know — to harbor a deep and intense resentment toward you.

This resentment reaches its peak around Valentine's Day. Frankly, I subscribe to the theory that a Hallmark CEO called a meeting one day, and ordered his staff to come up with a clever way to pay off his Christmas VISA bill. No one was too busy between New Year's and St. Patty's Day, so they played "Pin the Tack on February," threw in some heart-shaped cookies, and voilà! Do you know?! That CEO was able to afford that yacht Santa forgot ...

So Valentine's Day has evolved into an exhibition, a sort of mini-Olympics of SOP. The whole thing is pathetic, but hey, as long as I don't have to don my hip boots and wade through it, it's really none of my business how other people celebrate it. My dilemma? How can I resist the pukey mush-fest and avoid thinking about disappointing my significant other? Well, at least my cat won't be expecting a Valentine and chocolates from me ...Ω

Campus Voices

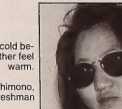
Question by Philip McQuade

Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: What turns you on most about cold weather?

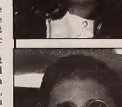
The many options of becoming warm.

'Topher Head, Senior



I can see that I am still breathing.

Carrie Kelly, Senior



Getting warmed up.

Annette Mack, Junior

I don't like the cold because I would rather feel warm.

Leslie Shimono, Freshman

I need to drink to stay warm and hope it snows.

Chris Wimer, Sophomore

When it's cold like this we have a cave day and just sit in and drink.

Mike Mullen, Freshman

Net Surfing

by Mindie Kaplan

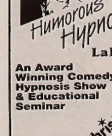
The Computing Center • Macintosh PC • The Internet • Telnet • Bulletin Board • NewsWatcher • Turbo Gopher • Mosaic • Netscape • Search • ASCII • alt.barney.die.die.die • Pacer • Forum • BlitzMail • LegendMud • Broadcast

There is a lot more to the Miller Library than books these days. The on-line card catalogue has expanded to include world-wide databases and yet has managed to remain personal enough that the main screen lists an option that allows students to suggest what books should be added to the ever-growing collection.

Best of all, half of your information gathering can be done at 3 a.m. from the comfort of your dorm room or lounge computer. The other half, of course, is picking the books up and carting the armloads back to your desk.

From the comfort of your room, you can browse the Miller Library holdings, find out when the library opens or closes, request books for the library to purchase, or view your circulation record. Each student's circulation record lists fines owed, items being held for the student, and what books have been checked out. There is also a "Gateway Option" that allows you to connect to other libraries and information-gathering services.

A nice feature of the Gateway system is that it combines Telnet and TurboGopher in one easy to use program. With a connection to the Miller Library in one window and a copy of Word or Claris in another, it becomes incredibly easy to cut and paste information rather than sitting at a cramped terminal in the library, hastily jotting down information on those easy-to-lose pieces of scrap paper. IBM compatible users can also access the library system by using the telnet function of their slip connection. Simply telnetting to "library" gets you there; the IP address is already programmed into the server. Macintosh users double-click on the "library" icon in the network folder.



Once you are inside the system, choose "connect to another library or database via internet" from the main menu to enter the Gateway. There you can find radio and television transcripts, have magazine articles faxed to your doorstep within 24 hours (or less), and search library catalogues across the country. The Miller Library is also trying to expand this system even more by investigating the possibility of adding commercial indexes which charge schools for the use of their services. The "UnCover Index" allows a student to use a Visa or Mastercard to order copies of articles. While the charge is typically about $6 to $10 an article (with fax charges at the library adding an additional .10 a page to the cost), you never have to worry about books not coming in before your paper is due (always a risk with interlibrary loan). Ordered articles arrive in 24 hours or less with certain articles available in as little as one hour.

The fax number at the library is 778-7288 and the articles will be held there until you arrive to pick them up. To use the UnCover Index, perform a search to locate the article(s) you want and type "M" to mark each desired article. Once you have found all the articles you want, type "O" to order.

In addition to the UnCover Index, "CARL" (one of the other systems you can connect to) contains the KnowledgeOne Search Service which obtains information for your paper or project for a fee that varies depending on the difficulty of your search. Journal Graphics provides transcripts of television and radio programs and School Model Programs is an educational tool concerned with improving school education. CARL also contains the Federal Domestic Assistance Catalog and the British Library Document Supply Center (another company concerned with article delivery). The Carl System Libraries allow you to search the card catalogues of libraries across the country.

While the library system can help you find books you want to read, the formal papers for an interlibrary loan request must be filled out at the library. If you are a freshman or sophomore, a librarian must approve the request. The forms are necessary for juniors and seniors because charges for out of state books or periodicals are charged not to a Visa or Mastercard, but to a student's ID card.

For more information about the library system, please contact Jeff Chaffin or Tim Kirk. To suggest NetSurfing topics, please Blitzmail Mindie Kaplan. Ω

A behind the scenes look at the W.C. Review

Sarah Bell

Erin Rowe. Kent 208. 10:00.

Erin Rowe. Her name echoed with my shoes against Kent's cement stairs as I climbed towards 208.

"Hi, I'm here to interview...hi Kristen," I said as a familiar face filled the doorway of Kent 208.

"Hi, Sarah Bell. Come in." I stepped into the bright room and turned to find Erin Rowe perched Indian-style on her bed.

"Oh... I knew the name sounded familiar. How are you Erin?" I said, plopping myself down on the worn green carpet.

"Fine, and yourself?"

I pulled my black notebook out of my overflowing book bag. "Just great." I rustled through my pocket until I found a pen and opened my journal to a clean page. "I'm really not sure what I should ask you but you might want to start off by telling me what the W.C. Review is."

"Uh... ok. What the Washington College Review is, is a book of scholarly articles that are published and put together by the W.C. Creative Writing Department and Professor Premo in the Social Sciences department. You can also send your submissions to Professor Sherbondy, who is the editor-in-chief, and of course, to me. There has also been a change since last year's Review. Submissions are now being accepted for a Modern Language Department and they would be written in a foreign language with a small abstract of what it is about."

"So, what is the process that these papers go through after they are submitted?"

"All the submissions are due on February 15," Erin said," and they get turned into Dr. Sherbondy. They are xeroxed and passed out to all of the editors and then we have a meeting to decide which ones should be published." I stopped scribbling down my sentence and quickly glanced over my notes to see if there was anything that I had left out. All my information was straight forward, to the point. I would have enough information to write a simple article on what the W.C. Review was. But I was forgetting one important piece to my article: Erin Rowe, student editor.

"Erin how did you become the student editor?"

"I wanted to be part of the writing program so I went to see Professor Wagner and she nominated me to the board and I was chosen. This is really exciting for me because I want to be an English professor."

"I really like the Review. I feel that it gives a lot of opportunities to students. I feel that if you get published...well, then that's what college is about. The W.C. Review reflects well on the college."

"Is there anything else that you wanted included in the article?" I asked.

"I can't think of anything. Freshmen can be published and students shouldn't be afraid to submit. Only, get the submissions in by February 15." Ω

"Sometimes We All Have to Sing the Alphabet Song Just to Prove We're Alive" or What, no wine for the young'uns?

Eva Kaplan-Leiserson

February 8th, 1995. 8 p.m. It is a dark and snowy night. Ok, it wasn't snowing, but it had been for about 5 minutes that afternoon. I was seriously depressed that it had stopped, so my hopes were up that I would find some solace in the genius of my classmates at this, the annual Freshman reading at the lit house.

I found quite the cozy atmosphere upon my arrival. It was much warmer inside and the Writers' Union had provided a generous spread of cookies, cheese and crackers, fruit and sodas. What, no wine for the young'uns?

The readers were standing around the free food and I uncapped my pen for some pre-reading quotes. My celebrity radar spotted the infamous filmmaker Kevin Hoffman. I persuaded him to give me the scoop on his newest project, an intriguing film called "Scotch Tape" which is currently in the planning stages. I know we'll all be looking forward to viewing this dark tale of a man's lifelong battle with scotch tape.

My star-struck eyes were still sharp enough to spot, on the couch next to Kevin, Jeff Frank. Together, Kevin and Jeff made up Kevin and Jeff, of "We Get You Discounts" fame. What say you, Jeff? Had the reading cost any money, the very generous Jeff assured me, Washington College students would have been promised a discount.

Once everyone managed to squeeze themselves into the living room and Kathy Wagner gave a lovely introduction, the readings began. The offerings were quite diverse, made up of such freshman stars (listed in order of appearance) as: Paulina Sierra Samano, Amy Hoffman, Cortney Chilow, Brett Gaba, Wenona Daniel, Colleen Glass, Jen Ward, Peter Torigoe, Sara Neutzel, Eva Kaplan-Leiserson, and Kevin Hoffman. The offerings were weighted heavily on the poetry side with the themes and subjects ranged from Postcards from God, to the college from hell (well, the future, I guess), to Bob Marley and the Chester River Bridge. As to be expected, there was a fair amount of love/sex/romance thrown in, but the unique style of each writer made every poem and prose piece distinctive. All in all, I found each reading intriguing and I was glad to have the opportunity for to see for myself what my fellow freshpeople were doing.

After the reading, I went around to get some quotes. I approached Marianne Culbertson to get the wise senior perspective. She told me: "It was unique as always. You learn how weird people's writing really is."

For the non-Writers' Union perspective, I went to special correspondent Keith Morgan.

E: Keith, can I get a quote from you? I was hoping to pull some strings. I have connections, ya know.

K: It was really good.

E: Can you expand on this?

K: It was one of the best I've ever been to.

E: How many of these have you been to?

K: This one.

I figured I ought to find an expert opinion somewhere, so I went to the head of the class, so to speak. I took my hot pink 3rd grade clipboard to Professor Kathy Wagner, organizer of the whole shebang.

E: Professor Wagner, can you give me a quote?

W: Is this for your mom?

I was beginning to give up on getting the professional commentary but then I spotted Jodie Clark, the celebrity ping-pong player whom I had the honor of being beaten by at the ping-pong tourney last week. Finally, someone who was willing to talk. "I don't really consider myself the champion, I only won 2nd place. But I should've won. It's all in the wrist you know. Oh, a quote about the reading? Well, the reading was a little like ping pong: serving and responding. Quickness and mental agility."

Working the room, I overheard Colleen Glass saying, "this beats the hall meeting." An unofficial poll taken afterwards determined that we all felt cheated that Jeff didn't sing the alphabet song. Jodie points out that she was cheated at the ping pong tournament because the person who won organized the whole thing. "I really am the winner." No Jodie, we're all winners. All of us who came out in the cold February night to hear the valiant efforts of ten freshman writers, all of us who got the courage to put ourselves on display, all of us who fearlessly devoured the Oreo cookies with no thought to chocolate teeth. We're all winners. I'll just rub off on the sunset now having saved Mindie from having to write this article herself, knowing that I have done my best to come up with the cheesiest ending I possibly could. Ω

"Show Stoppers": We Send a Neophyte to Review A Girl in Havana.

William Denton III

Musical theater returns to Washington College this weekend with "A Girl in Havana", a production of eighteen musical numbers directed by Jason Rubin. Performances are set for Friday and Saturday nights at 8 and Sunday afternoon at 2. The cast's second full rehearsal took place Wednesday night.

The show is comprised of a lineup of "show stoppers" selected from various musicals, both renowned and obscure, throughout history. Each song is introduced with a narrative of its origin, composers, and other details, delivered in the rehearsal by Rubin and Emily Grush.

The show is staged entirely on the stage of Tawes Theater, facing the upstage wall with chairs placed along the back of the stage.

The cast is made up of ten members: Jen Biondi, Lisa Christie, Katie Degentesh, Mari Endo, Tom Gallagher, Todd Lineburger, Marshall Norton, Chris Tull, Allison Tuttle, and Chris Watkins.

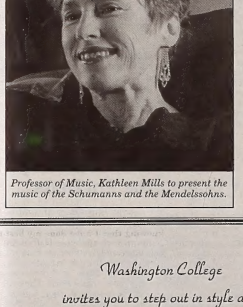
Consequently, without the benefit of the dynamics engineered into the actual theater, the voices do not carry as they should—they go straight up to the ceiling. The Performers are forced to compensate for the poor dynamics, and, based on Wednesday's rehearsal, they are doing a fine job of it.

Highlights of the show include: "There's a girl in Havana" (written by Irving Berlin), performed by Jen Biondi and Marshall Norton, "Sing for Your Supper" (adapted from Shakespeare's A Comedy of Errors), performed by Tom Gallagher, Chris Tull, and Todd Lineburger, "You're Just in Love", performed by Allison Tuttle and Marshall Norton, "Gee Officer Krumpke" (from West Side Story), performed by all five male cast members, "Anything You Can Do, I Can Do Better", performed by Lisa Christie and Chris Tull, and "The Songs of Jenny", performed by Jen Biondi with a chorus of all the male cast members. The four solo performances—two by Katie Degentesh, one by Allison Tuttle, and one by Todd Lineburger—are also impressive.

Based on Wednesday's rehearsal, one of the most outstanding performances would have to be "Brush up Your Shakespeare," a rather bawdy piece performed by a duo of Tom Gallagher and Chris Watkins. Both play their roles well and play to the audience (which, of course, had to be imagined in place for the rehearsal) well.

The high point of the show, in my opinion, is definitely the duet of Allison Tuttle and Katie Degentesh, performing "The Grass is Always Greener." Although their voices are quite different, the harmonies are positively stellar, and both individual voices are absolutely beautiful. Even in this, merely a rehearsal, the routine was executed perfectly.

There are also four pieces involving the entire cast. "Hallelujah," "Oklahoma," "Sit Down, You're Rocking the Boat," and "It's Not Where You Start, It's Where You Finish" all have great potential to be extremely entertaining performances. The vocal performances are good, but some problems with the staging and choreography remain to be ironed out. This is not an uncommon problem with songs performed by such a large group of people, and all the full-cast songs have improved quite a bit in recent days. If the marked improvements progress as they have, these four performances should be quite memorable. Ω



Photos by Paige Pyatt

Jen Biondi and Tom Gallagher on stage

Professor Kathy Mills to play works by the Mendelssohns and the Schumanns

A recital of piano music, "The Schumanns and the Mendelssohns," will be presented by Professor of Music Kethy Mills on Friday, February 17 at 8 p.m. The program features music by four composers whose lives were intertwined in 19th-century Germany: Robert Schumann and his wife Clara and Felix Mendelssohn and his sister Fanny Hensel.

The story of the engagement and marriage of Robert and Clara Schumann is one of the greatest love stories of the 19th century. He was a composer and music critic, she was a gifted pianist who debuted on the concert stage as a child and performed throughout Europe for more than 60 years. Less known but equally fascinating is the story of brother and sister musicians Felix and Fanny Mendelssohn, who both received the finest education available to privileged children of upper-middle class parents. He rocketed to fame as a phenomenal performer, composer and conductor; she also composed and played the piano beautifully, but did so out of the public eye, at home in Berlin.

Professor of Music, Kathleen Mills to present the music of the Schumanns and the Mendelssohns.

The program will include Robert Schumann's "carnival," Clara Schumann's "Variations on a theme by Robert Schumann," "Sonata in G minor" by Fanny Mendelssohn Hensel, and "Prelude and Fugue in B minor" by Felix Mendelssohn. The recital, in Tawes Theater, is free.

Professor Mills has been studying and teaching issues of women in music since 1987. She has taught "Women in Music," and has also taught a course about the Mendelssohns and Schumanns. She has performed music by women composers, most recently a recital of 20th-century piano music by American women composers. Professor Mills explained to The Elm in an interview some years ago her attraction to the music written by women composers.

"I tried some other literature, but I ketp gravitating toward this literature because I didn't know it and had been a matter of digging it out," Mills told The Elm. She continued by explaining her feelings about the exclusion of women composers from the traditional musical cannon.

"What I feel is not resentment or anger as much as sadness. In a way its just sad every time I think about Fanny Mendelssohn and Felix Mendelssohn. I think its a tragedy. I don't know there there was any difference at all in their compositional ability, and yet because of the status of her family and the opinions of her father and brother, it wasn't the place of the woman to do anything else but to nurture a family."

Professor Mills received an undergraduate degree in music from Cornell College, and master's degrees from Smith College and Northwestern University. She has been a faculty member here since 1972. Ω

Jazzing it up with the Washington College Jazz Band

Tara McKee

It may be old news but it's good news. The Washington College Jazz Band gave its first performance of the year on January 29. The time at which the concert began provided a unique setting for the audience. The Sunday afternoon scheduling allowed for many of the older members of the Chestertown community to take advantage of the students' talents. The band, itself not large in size, consists of musicians of all ages ranging from senior citizens to freshmen here at Washington College. It was encouraging and uplifting to see such a varied group of people come together to share in the magnificence of jazz.

Director Amzie D. Parcell led the band in a total of eight selections. Such well known favorites as Stormy Weather, by Ted Koehler and Harold Arlen, and How High the Moon, by Nancy Hamilton and Morgan Lewis, were accompanied by the sole vocalist of the band, Kelli L. Goldsborough. The performance was especially impressive due to the fact that this group meets only once a week on Tuesday evenings. The musicians' love of music drives them to take time out of their hectic schedules to create. Trumpet player Douglas Beckworth's opinion of the performance was one of satisfaction but also anticipation for an even better concert scheduled for this spring.

I, being a string and electric bass player myself, thoroughly enjoyed the performance and am looking forward to the next one. It's nice to be able to take a break from the daily college routine to admire local talents. Keep your eyes open for the band's next performance date, if for no other reason than a free afternoon of legendary music. Ω

Washington College

invites you to step out in style at a

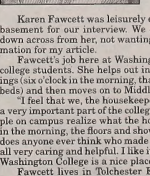
Great Gatsby Gala

featuring the legendary Doc Scantlin and His Imperial Palms Orchestra playing hits from the 20s, 30s & 40s

Saturday, February 18, 1995 at 9 o' clock in the evening

Cain Gymnasium

Black Tie or Vintage Costume



R.s.v.p. (410) 778-7752 $20 per person/$10 per student

Earth Jump... Why Not?

Andy's

Friday, February 10 • Johnny & the Headhunters
A "Dangerous" mix of rockin' blues, r 'n r, rockabilly and R&B
Saturday, February 11 • Angie Miller & Topher
Angie has a brand new CD. Great vocals & tasty guitar playing ... acoustic rock.
Thursday, February 16 • Kid Davis
(Solo) This man plays a mean guitar. Country-rockabilly ...
No Cover . . .

Washington College Staff Profile

Karen Fawcett was leisurely eating her lunch when I walked into East's basement for our interview. We exchanged greetings and I hesitantly sat down across from her, not wanting to fill up her only lunch break with information for my article.

Fawcett's job here at Washington College is cleaning up after us messy college students. She helps out in The Casey Academic Center in the mornings (six o'clock in the morning, that is, when we are still sleeping in our warm beds) and then moves on to Middle and West.

"I feel that we, the housekeepers, are an important part of the college ... a very important part of the college," Fawcett said, "I don't think enough people on campus realize what the housekeeping staff does. When you wake up in the morning, the floors and showers are shiny and the toilets are clean but does anyone ever think who made it that way? We have a good staff. They are all very caring and helpful. I like it here. Every job has its ups and downs but Washington College is a nice place to work."

Fawcett lives in Tolchester Estates with her husband Frank and her three older boys: Kevin, who is 17 and the youngest; Mike, who is 19; and Jimmy, who is 21. When I asked her how she manages three boys with only two years separating each of them, she replied, laughing and shaking her head, "I would never do it again."

When Fawcett isn't busy working or tending to her family, she likes to go horseback riding. Although she would love to own a horse, she rides at her friend's barn instead. When I asked her what her preference was, English or Western, she replied,"Definitely Western. English is not for me!"

Karen Fawcett has been at Washington College for thirteen and a half years. This August will complete her fourteenth year with us.

"When I first started here, I didn't think I would last for more than three years. Well here I am, fourteen years later. Something must be going right!"

WRITERS' UNION

T-Shirts ON SALE NOW for $10.00 to be donated to:

THE EDITH WHARTON CAT FUND

Contact Mr. Day or Marianne Culbertson to buy your T-Shirt NOW!

Sex, Drugs, and Alcohol On Campus

Peer educators celebrate National Condom Week

Sherri Foster

What is the proper way to wear a condom? How are drugs and alcohol related to the spread of sexually transmitted diseases? What's the truth about dental dams? How is HIV really spread?

These are a peer educator? Well, for all of the curious individuals lurking around campus who've been asking, they are a select group of students trained to promote awareness of and educate students about health issues and lifestyle choices. They're also once again striving once again to make a difference on campus.

Training for these individuals involves attending 2-3 informative sessions held by the Regional AIDS educator from the State Health Department. They learn how to present information about sensitive issues such as alcohol, drugs, and other personal behavior that could lead to the contraction of AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases.

More importantly though, the entire focus is not directed entirely at AIDS. Instead, the focus in on health education as a whole. This includes promoting awareness of the issues that affect Washington College and encouraging preventive measures.

Working as a branch of Health Services, they seek to prevent problems before they happen by providing information about date rape, alcohol and drug abuse, and the transmission of disease.

In addition, they are readily available to answer any questions that students may have (including the ones listed above). Most people are too embarrassed to ask or to admit that they're unsure about certain things. This is a problem that the peer educators are looking to correct. According to Erica Estep, this year's president, the goal of the group is to "give people the education they are lacking or at least the opportunity to get answers."

Throughout the year, the Peer Educators sponsor different campus activities designed to heighten awareness. Last semester, their major project was "World AIDS Day," while this semester their attention will be on "National Condom Week" (Feb. 14-21), and small group lectures in the residence halls.

Currently, the club is seeking student reaction to the idea of condom dispensers being placed in both the men's and women's bathrooms in The Cove. If you have an opinion on this matter, or if you are interested in being a part of this organization, you are asked to contact Erica Estep at ext. 8824. And, of course, they're always up for questions! Ω

Little Red Riding Hood rides again

Audrina Diane Graves has become the epitome of the "Small, Friendly College Employee." Nicknamed "Little Red Riding Hood" by her friends, Diane has been bringing a basket of baked goods from The Cove to various administrative offices in order to make their hectic days a little bit brighter. Muriel Mesick, in charge of Billing and Payables, said "It's very nice in the morning to see Diane's face carrying her basket of goodies." Madeline Howell, Secretary to the Provost and Dean of the College, smiled broadly when asked about Diane. "She's very pleasant. I can't imagine anyone coming out in this weather, but she does it." Diane even brings requests for specific foods. At times, she has even been known to push a cart containing orange juice and Snapple to give the administration a change from their usual fare of coffee, tea, and water. "Course she's going to make us all fat," Pat Smith, a secretary in the Dean's Office added, grinning. She's great. We really miss her on the days she can't come."

Nancy Toy, bursar of the college, seemed to sum it all up when she said, "[Diane's] so sweet and thoughtful about it." Toy also expressed regret that she missed Diane's visit that day. "I haven't seen her all week! She promised me a cheese danish." Toy also suggested a new nickname: "Little Blue Riding Hood," saying "she always wears a blue hood or coat." Ω

George Washington's Birthday – 1895

Laura Semel

In an effort to revive student awareness and appreciation of attending the tenth-oldest college in the country, the Washington College Historical Society will be submitting an article to The Elm bi-weekly concentrating on some aspect of W.C. history.

(Source: Dumschott, Fred W. The History of Washington College (Chestertown: Washington College, 1980) 123.)

Although the Birthday Ball is a relatively recent tradition in Washington College history, there have been other celebrations in the past to commemorate Washington's birthday. The Mount Vernon Literary Society, established in 1827, presented a special program each year to observe our first President's birthday.

One hundred years ago, the Mount Vernon Literary Society solicited Judge Alfred A. Pearce to make the feature address at the 1895 Washington's birthday observance. Judge Pearce had attended Washington College in 1853 and completed his college education at Princeton, then returned to Chestertown to practice law. He also became a member of the Board of Visitors and Governors at W.C. During his address, Judge Pearce chided the students by assuring them that they had the privilege of much better accommodations than the students of his day. He described the facilities of Middle Hall, where he was one of 40 students who resided in one of the four rooms on the third floor. These four rooms were called the "Nursery," the "Apple Orchard," the "Grog," and "St. Peters," and these names were supposed in some sort of way to reflect the condition and character of the occupants."

The occasion was also used to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the Mount Vernon Literary Society, one of the longest-running non-athletic organizations at Washington College. In memory of this organization and of our school's illustrious namesake, the W.C. Historical Society would like to wish everyone a happy Washington's Birthday! Ω

A brief history of the Phi Delts

Ever consider your future? One hundred-forty-seven years ago six men had their futures in mind when they came together in Oxford, Ohio on a blustery December evening to sign a document. It wasn't a contract to trade horses for cattle, or a death warrant for a recent train heist. They sat in a dormitory room at their college, over their Christmas break, and they pondered a document that was written by one of them. It was a document like no other they had ever seen or ever would. It was a code of beliefs, a set of common ideals, a list of responsibilities. This document included three principle objectives for all who were to embrace it. The objectives included the cultivation of friendship and positive human relationships among members, the acquisition of a high degree of mental culture, and the promotion of a high standard of personal morality. These beliefs were written by one man, suggested by six men, and have since been accepted by close to 200,000 men. This document cannot be changed and it will not be compromised. To those who have undertaken the responsibility of upholding these principles, it is a source of guidance throughout life. It is not a religious doctrine, nor a philosophic argument. It is the Bond of Phi Delta Theta.

While considering your future, consider a few things. When you are a part of an organization like Phi Delta Theta, you are a part of a network that is international. There are over 190 chapters at U.S. and Canadian Universities. There are close to 200,000 members nationwide. Our Bond brings us together wherever we are. There are Phi Delt's in our Government, former secretary of state James Baker, Senator Sam Nunn, former president Benjamin Harrison, among many others. There are Phi Delt's famous for everything from baseball (Lou Gehrig), to architecture (Frank Lloyd Wright), to walking on the moon (Neil Armstrong). These men would attribute their successes to their families and their education, but they would also consider the self-confidence gained, the leadership qualities learned, and the support received from their "other" family. The family that only consists of Brothers. Ω

The WC Chapter of Psi Chi, The National Honor Society in Psychology, Congratulates The 1994-95 Inductees

Jenny An Laure Bradley
Shawntel Fitzgerald
Arlene George-Williams
Jennifer Hannifee
Chela Hutchison
Richard McKee
Shannon Metcalf
Melisa Olson
Steven Solomon
Pat Trams
Sonja Wilson

The Elm* salutes your scholarship!

"Faculty" from 1

A new academic support service has been implemented. TEAM (Target Experience for Academic Mentoring) was created to aid students in developing better study and research habits.

Scholz announced that Dale Daigle was given tenure at a meeting of the Board of Visitors and Governors in December. He has been promoted to Associate Professor of Drama.

Vice President of Development and College Relations Marty Williams reported that response to President Toll has been positive, and fund giving is up. He also reported the resignation of JoAnn Fairchild, who has gone on to the position of Director of Communications at St. Andrews.

In a report from Dean Scholz, the Academic Council announced a TAFFY faculty forum scheduled for February 15. He said that TAFFY "is coming to the point of no return." TAFFY has received a $25,000 grant and needs a total of $50,000 in order to achieve its goals.

The committee on Student Aid reported that 58 students received first warnings for merit scholarships this semester. Six students had their merit scholarships reduced while one scholarship was eliminated. These seven students had received at least two warnings previously, and only one failed to return to the College. Thirty-three students have been placed on academic probation for this semester.

Representing the Student Government Association, Sonja Wilson welcomed Dr. Toll to Washington College and noted that the students appreciate the fact that he is interested in student input. Regarding Toll's comments about the students' commitment to Washington College, she stated that they are committed "because of people like Professor Fessler." She suggested that the "Fessler case" is bad publicity for a school which hopes to attract 300 freshmen next year. Her comments were followed by scattered applause among the faculty members.

During the time allotted for comments, David Newell related an experience he had over winter break. He attended a dinner party at which he knew only the host. There were eight others present, and six were college deans. In discussing Washington College, one of the deans mentioned that he had been nominated for the position of president of Washington College, but that "the word on the street is that the faculty at Washington College is aggressively hostile toward chief administrators." Newell expressed concern that outsiders hold this impression of Washington College.

Sean O Connor took this opportunity to voice doubts about the manner in which The Elm has handled important and controversial issues on campus. While indicating that he understands and respects the right to free speech and freedom of the press, O Connor cautioned present Elm staff members to consider the impact of The Elm's coverage. Ω month as a junior, started his part of the lecture by comparing the students he encountered as a transfer student and the students he has encountered on campus recently. He related that the year he came to W.C. the campus was covered with banners and spray-painted slogans protesting various government actions. He compared this to an article from The Elm which discussed the damage done to the CAC from the sign protesting the outcome of the "Fessler Case."

"Forum" from 1

"Students were obviously a lot different than they are now," said Moag, who went on to relate that even Newt Gingrich staged sit-ins while in college.

Moag, a lobbyist in Washington D.C., explained how the change from a Democratic to a Republican-controlled Congress will have a profound effect on Maryland. Before the election, Maryland "had the most powerful delegation," made up of 10 people, five in major positions, indicated Moag.

"This state is going to lose a lot," said Moag.

He went on to list "Moag's Seven Snide Reasons Why the Democrats Lost Congress."

1) "The American people are impatient."

2) Bill Clinton - "His jogging shorts are too short" and "He thinks out loud."

3) The Democrats lost "white men big time." Moag indicated that the union vote was only 50% Democratic.

4) "Congress is bulky."

5) "Congress tried to take shotguns from sportsmen."

6) "Hillary Clinton tried to take away health care."

7) Gays in the military.

Moag indicated that from his perspective, the American people "believe the Democrats left the center of America." He did have some good news to counter the bad. Moag's first bit of good news is that the GOP is now running things.

"They've got to do it right for the next two years or they'll be out for another 40," said Moag. He indicated that one of the biggest problems for the Republicans is the dissension within their own ranks. Now that the Republicans are in the key positions and under constant scrutiny, "they have got to keep their crazies under control."

He also indicated that the GOP has to "abide by this Contract."

"If they start backing off too much, they'll start losing ground," Moag said.

About the specifics of the Contract with America, Moag indicated that several aspects, gun control and school prayer included, will not receive the vote of the moderate Republicans. Moag said that for the Republicans to survive "they've got to move to the middle; They can't be perceived as the right."

"The winner in all this may be the President," said Moag. He indicated that the Democrats are "looking more reasonable."

"Compassional Republicans will have to do all the heavy lifting," said Moag. He went on to say that "the Contract may force an honest look at how this country taxes and spends."

Following several questions from the audience, during which both Hughes and Moag expounded upon their previous positions, the lecture was called over and those present mingled with each other and the lecturers.

The William James Forum, which has been sponsoring lectures for over 30 years, has two programs planned for the coming months. On February 28, Kile Baker, of the Johns Hopkins Applied Physics Lab, and Robert Etgen, the Executive Director for the Eastern Shore Land Conservancy will be talking on "Environmental Care from Antarctica to the Eastern Shore." William Schulz, Executive Director of Amnesty International USA, will be joining the long list of important speakers sponsored by the William James Forum on March 7. Schulz will be discussing "Human Rights: A Global Update." All lectures are held in Hynson Lounge and start at 7:30 p.m. Ω

Creative Cookery presents
Peppy Hour
Cappuccino for a Buck
3 - 5 p.m., weekdays

Peppy Hour price with this add at anytime
Expires 2/24

Women's Poetry Film Festival

February 14 • Elizabeth Bishop & Marianne Moore
February 21 • Sylvia Plath
February 28 • Adrienne Rich
March 7 • Anne Sexton
March 21 • Gwendolyn Brooks & Lucille Clifton
March 28 • Emily Dickinson

Sponsored by the O'Neill Literary House
All videos shown on Tuesday at 6:30 and run approximately one hour

VALENTINES SPECIALS

12 LATEX BALLOONS
$5.99
$9.00 VALUE

4-18" MYLAR BALLOONS
$ 7.99

DISCOUNT VARIETY
Kent Plaza
Chestertown, MD
(410) 778-5068

PLEASE PLACE YOUR ORDER NOW
LOCAL DELIVERY AVAILABLE - $ 5.00

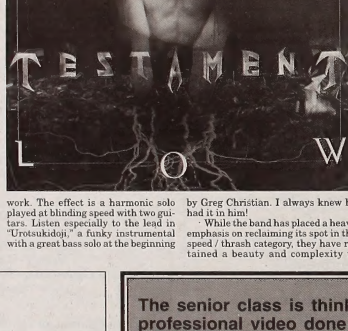
HOROSCOPES

Aquarius (1/21-2/18)
Pisces (2/19-3/20) You're too stressed. Buy a can of Play-Doh and regress for a while.
Aries (3/21-4/19) Quoting Beavis and Butthead in your Philosophy paper is probably not a good idea. Come up with something else.
Taurus (4/20-5/20) Once again you are working harder than ever. Ignore the fact that some people do not understand that they are not your only commitment.
Gemini (5/21-6/21) Be patient. Do not pound his/her door down to find out how they feel or they will slam the brass knocker in your face once and for all.
Cancer (6/22-7/22) Use a Virgo the first chance you get.
Leo (7/23-8/22) Do you really love them? If you are questioning it, you should get out. If you are in shock or experiencing disbelief stay in.
Virgo (8/23-9/23) So many people are drawn to your understanding eyes. This is the highest compliment you could receive. Stay away from the Cancer though, they will use you if they can.
Libra (9/24-10/23) Peace, peace, always trying to make things better. Stand up for yourself and MAKE WAR!
Scorpio (10/24-11/22) The moon in Capricorn, combined with the alignment of Jupiter, Mars, and Gemini, totally prevents you from understanding this week's horoscope.
Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) Frustration and anxiety you have succeeded to fight. Don't let your lover make you start to sweat because they don't understand your serenity.
Capricorn (12/22-1/20) Out of fear for his life, Shade refuses to predict for Capricorns this week.

by: Ember and Shade on the high-rise

Dropped A Whole Degree

Aaron Blake



Skolnick Who?

Testament comes back from loss stronger than ever!

I admit it. I thought guitarist Alex Skolnick was the heart and soul of Testament. I thought he was the only thing keeping them afloat. So when he left the band, I had little hope of hearing anything decent from them again. Bereft of Skolnick's technical wizardry, what could Testament do? What they did was hire James Murphy, late of Obituary. If the loss of Skolnick was the kiss of death to Testament, the arrival of Murphy was a breath of life.

Testament was on a downhill slope. Despite Alex Skolnick (some would say because of him), the band had failed to put out much worth listening to since 1987's Practice What You Preach, let alone anything to top it. The band was losing its edge. Enter James Murphy. The former death metal guitarist jumpstarted Testament. Now motivated, the band put forth its most impressive work to date, easily one of the most staggeringly powerful albums of 1994: Low.

With Low, Testament abandons the progressive tones that dominated their previous full album, The Ritual, and the obscenely ordinary heavy metal dreck of Souls of Black. What is left is the true metal roots of the band, a desire to produce viciously loud, beautifully played, and occasionally offensive music. The music on Testament's previous albums was written mostly by Alex Skolnick, with help from the rest of the band. The music on Low is written almost exclusively by rhythm guitarist Eric Peterson. Peterson's writing is very different than Skolnick's, much more emphasis on power and beauty than on overwhelming complexity and technical wizardry. Now add James Murphy to the mix. Obituary was one of the original death metal bands, and Murphy brings some of his experience to his new home. Murphy has motivated the band and Peterson, instilling them with a life until now unknown. As a guitar player, Murphy is (dare I say it?) Skolnick's superior. He not only plays with fretboard acrobatics that blow Skolnick's away, but he also seems to be enjoying himself, playing to play, whereas Skolnick seemed to play to show how good he was. The guitar on Low is incredibly loud and abrasive, truly the way metal guitar was meant to be played. The solos, however are beautiful, especially when Murphy drags Peterson into the fray. The two guitarists generally stick to their roles during the solos, Murphy playing fast and furious leads while Peterson chops away in the background. Every once in a while, however, Peterson will stray from the rhythm and join Murphy in the lead work. The effect is a harmonic solo played at blinding speed with two guitars. Listen especially to the lead in "Urotsukidoji," a funky instrumental with a great bass solo at the beginning by Greg Christian. I always knew he had it in him!

While the band has placed a heavy emphasis on reclaiming its spot in the speed / thrash category, they have retained a beauty and complexity to their music, unlike various other purveyors of metal. The solos, while faster than fast, are still wonderful to listen to, unlike the solos of Slayer's Kerry King and Jeff Hanneman. Testament's solos fit well with the music and add a lot to the songs ... Slayer's solos are maniacal, wailing departures – they mean nothing to the song they are in. In some instances, Testament even abandons speed in favor of beauty, such as with "Trail of Tears," a slow-building epic song about the event of the same name. Also in the not-quite-thrash category is "Last Call," an instrumental outro that has an almost sleepy, drunken feel to it. Even one of the faster songs, "Hail Mary," has an almost classical flourish in the bridge.

Testament's lyrics are always powerful, if not poetic. But who needs poetry when you have lines like "Take back all that we've lost / At any price that it costs / Our freedom was worth fighting for / Resistance now or never more," from P.C. While the lyrics aren't of the caliber of some other songwriters, they are a damn sight better than most of their competitors. Every once in a while, too, they hit you with a line that just sounds good in context, like the opening line to Hail Mary: "I was alive / I feel dirt in my eyes." I have no idea what it means, but when Chuck Billy belts it out at the opening of the song, it grabs you by the shirt collar and makes you pay attention.

What's that you say? What is Alex Skolnick doing now that he's not in Testament anymore? Well, let me tell you. Skolnick has joined the band Savatage, filling the void left when guitarist Criss Oliva died in a car accident. Skolnick fills the guitar slot well, but gets very little chance to shine. There are only two tracks on Savatage's newest album, "Handful of Rain," where Skolnick gets the chance to shine. The problem remains that the rest of the band just isn't that good. They play with bombastic intensity, taking it all just a little too seriously. There are songs that sound like they belong in an opera, and others that just don't belong on a recording. The band, for all its effort, and for all Alex Skolnick's brilliant playing, can't keep from sounding like a circa 1980s heavy metal band gone horribly wrong.

So, listen to Low to hear what Testament is, listen to Practice What You Preach to hear what Testament used to be, and listen to Handful of Rain to hear what they could have become. And then listen to Low again for an even greater appreciation. Ω

laundry Park drycleaning
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

The senior class is thinking about getting a professional video done of graduation. The cost of the video would be around $25 if you order it in advance, $30 after graduation. You can also have it sent directly to your home for a $5 shipping and handling fee, or pick it up at the store in Easton. If you would be interested in buying one, I would appreciate you BlitzMailing me so I know whether or not it is worth getting. This idea is still in the preliminary stages.

Thanks, Alicia Carberry

THE COFFEEHOUSE NIGHT IN THE COVE WILL STILL BE OCCURING FROM 7 UNTIL 9 PM ON THURSDAY EVENING (February 16).

THERE WILL BE OPEN MICROPHONES (courtesy of the WC Musicians Union) FOR ANY SORT OF AUDIO ARTIST- MUSICIAN, SPOKEN WORD, PERFORMANCE ART, whatever. If you are in the slightest bit interested in performing and/ or reading, please contact Luther Dudich via BlitzMail.

We Get You Discounts!

the Dynamic Discount Duo, Kevin and Jeff, roam Chestertown in search of bargains for students

o Could you tell us your name?
My name is Ron Del Naya Renato.
e Italian.
. How did you get started in this siness?
g In this business? Well, I got into is business a long time ago. Many, any years ago when I came from ly. I came to stay with my uncle. I me from Naples, Italy. And then I t away from the business for a mber of years. I went into comput-
s. And, after many years in comuters, I got tired of the rat race and f computers, and came back to my st love, which is the food business.
. So this is a lot less stressful busiss than the computers?
A lot less stressful, but a lot more ors, sometimes. Of course, working a restaurant doesn't help your estline, either.
. Do you have much competition in s area? I know there's Procolino's.
o you have any kind of rivalry?
ave a little soccer match every nday, or something?
Not at all. I think Procolino's is a siness established in Chestertown ny years ago. And they've made a me for themselves, a reputation.
owever, we don't compete because e are simply a different kind of cui-
e. Our food is northern style alian cuisine, and Procolino's esn't do that, they don't have the cilities. The only competition would e on the pizza side, and I know for a ct that our pizza's very good, and I ll not say what Procolino's pizza is t, but I know that our customers
e very happy with ours.
. How do you feel about your coun-
y being shaped like a boot?
Well, if I wanted to be a wisegu, I uld say that it's that shape so we n kick everybody's butt. But, I ink it's a unique shape. I suppose ere's a reason for the shape of our untry being like that, but the only ing I can think of is that it's nique, and outside of the United ates, it's the best country in the orld.
. What do you think the United ates is shaped like?
Well the United States is sort of n undefined sort of shape, isn't it?
Big, but it doesn't have a real definite shape, I mean, not like Italy, anyway.

K: We once talked to the Procolino's guy, and he said it looked like "a cow with big titties". He used those words to describe it. Do you have that same impression of America? What do you think?

Juan Hernandez: No, no, no. Procolino's is wrong.

K: You've seen a lot of cows, and...?

J: No, none look like that.

K: You serve more than just pizza. What other foods do you serve?

R: Pizza's actually just one of the sidelines. We have pizzas and calzones. The mainstay of our business is the restaurant, which serves a very refined Italian cuisine, northern cuisine. You'll find a lot of dishes that have seafood, shrimp and scallops. We have veal and chicken, and we do a lot of specials, seafood like red snapper, we'll do grouper, we'll do a lot of things. Salmon. Our dishes are comparable to any dishes on the east coast, to many of the fine restaurants that you might find in Baltimore or Philadelphia, or New Jersey. We've had that said to us many, many times from our customers. At the moment, I don't think there's any competition in Chestertown, whatsoever, in that line. And I'm not saying that there are not good restaurants in Chestertown, just that there's no competition within our line of cooking.

K: And any ones that come in, you will destroy, is that correct?

R: I don't know about "destroying" anyone, but we could always make a few out of state phone calls...

K: I guess you have to do what it takes.

J: I noticed a funeral hearse parked outside. Is that detracting from business any?

R: Yes, as a matter of fact, I think it is, and, being from the old country, I'm a little bit superstitious. That funeral vehicle belongs to an employee of another shop, and he insists on parking it there. He is very stubborn, and will not agree to parking it around back. Who knows, someday he might not find it in the same shape that he left it in. But then again, it's just one of those things.

K: Do you get a lot of students in here from Washington College?

R: Not enough. We'd like to see more.

K: The reason we actually came here is a couple students recommended we come here, and they said that you wanted to see us.

R: Yes, that is true. I made that statement because what I'd like to do is something special for the college. I would like to offer a student discount to any of the Washington College kids that come to eat with us. We haven't worked out the details, but I guess that depends on the number of students that are willing to come around and patronize us. We will do something for them. A minimum of fifteen to twenty percent.

K: Fifteen to Twenty percent?

R: Yes, sir, we'll begin with a definite fifteen percent with IDs.

K: That is our greatest discount ever. Is there a time limit on this discount?

R: No time limit whatsoever.

K: You want as many Washington College students to come in as possible?

R: Exactly.

K: We're going to tell them to come.

R: We're counting on it, and bye the bye, the discount won't apply to specials, and won't apply if there's another discount already in place, like our Wednesday night special.

K: I also noticed that you have a tip jar next to the cash register. Would you appreciate it if the students stuffed a few extra tips in there?

R: Well, that always helps. That's a special projects tip jar. Once in a while, on our day off, me and all the boys go and enjoy dinner at some other establishment, that doesn't have the same food as ours.

K: I've seen the same kind of tip jars in go-go bars and stuff like that. Do you guys do lap dances or anything for Washington College girls that come in?

R: No, but we'd like them to do it if they come in! I'll tell you what, in that case we will give them a tip.

K: So you guys wouldn't shake your roast beef sandwich for any money from the girls? If they came in here and requested a hot Italian Stallion, you couldn't put on something special for them?

R: One thing I always do when they come in is ask them if they're ready to get married, because a lot of my staff is single. Although, personally, I'm fifty years old and a grandfather, and I don't qualify. I mean, I've had my share of romancing, and I'm not looking forward to any more. My staff is definitely on the prowl, you could say. They like all the lovely ladies that come in and they're serious, and a lot of them have a lot of money saved up.

K: Has your staff been encouraging you to give this discount to maybe bring in some of those hot young Washington College honeys?

R: No, we don't play favoritism like that. We want all the students to come in, but when we see interesting young ladies, I always ask them if they're interested in my staff, and if they'd like to go out, or get married, whatever. So far no takers, but if I keep trying, maybe someday somebody will say "Yes".

K: So the women can not only expect good Italian food, but maybe a good Italian man as well.

R: Absolutely, absolutely.

K: So you're kind of the Chuck Woolery on the staff?

R: Indeed. I play Cupid.

K: Maybe we can do a special column where we hook up a young lady from the college with one of your hot men, and go along on the date, and see what happens.

R: That's always a possibility. I have to put another plug in and you hear about our Valentine's Day dinner special? We have a couple of lovely dinners, two seatings, six and eight o'clock, on the fourteenth of February, which is a Tuesday night. It's a wonderful dinner; we have lobsters, and appetizers and desserts. It's $45 dollars a couple. It's an unbeatable deal.

K: Can people come alone, if they don't have a date, or maybe they'll find a date when they get here?

R: Absolutely, and if they don't find a date, we'll eat with them.

K: And how about you, sir? Why don't you give us your name, and some of your hobbies, and see if any of the girls are takers?

JH: Yes, my name is Juan Hernandez, and I say thank you very much for the college boys that come here, because there has been a lot of business here.

K: What about the girls?

R: The girls as well.

JH: Oh, yes.

K: And if I could hook you up with one of the girls? What would you say to that? Would you take her out on a date? Show her a good time?

JH: Uh, not really. I don't have so much time for go out. My time is here.

K: Maybe you could set up a candlelight dinner in the back or something.

JH: If I find somebody that waits for me, then we'll go out.

R: What chef Juan was indicating is he puts so much time in here that girls would have to be willing to wait real late at night to go out with him.

K: Do you think you're worth it?

JH: I don't think so... Ω

•••• WICOMICO • CIVIC • CENTER ••••

Wicomico Civic Center
Saturday, February 25, 8 p.m.
General Admission • $20
Call to charge tickets: 410-548-4911
Tickets on sale at: Shore Music in Seaford, DE; T's Corner in Oak Hall, VA; and the Civic Center Box Office

WICOMICO • CIVIC • CENTER ••••

. . . But we do!

We here at discount central think that a hot young guy like Juan deserves a special girl! That's why we're sponsoring the "Win a Dream Date with Juan Hernandez" contest. To enter, please give a picture and a brief list of your hobbies to us, in care of The Elm (and while your at it, send us some mail about where you want us to go for discounts). The winner will be treated to a romantic candle-light dinner with that humble dream-boat Juan Hernandez, and will be featured in our upcoming We Get You Romance column. Make sure to get those entries in by the morning of February the Thirteenth, and you might be the lucky girl chosen to have that special Valentines date with Juan!

Scott Koon describes the complex intracacies of Nuclear Magnetic Resonance Spectroscopy.

"NMR" from 1

magnet to excite nuclei to a higher quantum energy state, and thereby measure the magnetic resonance of a given nucleus. This information is then used to identify the solution which is being tested. (NMR is nuclear only in the sense that it deals with an atom's nucleus. It has nothing at all to do with nuclear fission.) "What will mostly be detected are hydrogen nuclei," Dr. Roat told The Elm. "In many samples, but principally in organic material, these hydrogen atoms are in different surroundings, surrounded by different atoms which cause them to behave differently."

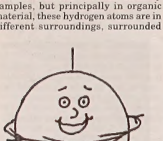

Figure 1
Mr. Happy little proton is rotating normally at a very very fast rate.

Nuclei with an uneven number of neutrons and protons all spin (see figure 1). Nuclear magnetic resonance spectroscopy takes advantage of this property in order to measure the amount and configuration of particular materials in the sample being analyzed. In the case of hydrogen, the nucleus consists of a sole proton which is, as scientists say, spinning very very fast.

In NMR, a large radio frequency magnetic field (with a frequency of about 60 Megahertz) is applied to this sample (for example, hydrogen). This field is supplied by a super conducting magnet which is encased in liquid helium, which is, as scientists say, very very cold (see figure 5). The hydrogen nuclei in the sample align themselves with the magnetic field, with their axis of spin parallel to the field lines generated by the magnet. This is similar to the common textbook example of iron filings aligning themselves along magnetic field lines.

The protons continue to spin along these magnetic field lines. However, the axis of the proton's magnetic field is not directly in line with the magnetic field generated by the magnet, but off to an angle. This angle (or precess) is constant, and the precessional angular velocity (represented by the circular vectors in figure 2) is easily calculable if you know the strength of the magnetic field and the magnetogyric ratio of the nucleus.

With the proton spinning as described above, a second magnetic field is generated at right angles to the initial magnetic field. This is done by use of a radiofrequency electromagnetic transmitter (shown in figure 3). The frequency of the radio wave is then slowly changed. When the radio frequency is identical to the frequency of the spinning proton, a resonance is achieved. The radio wave in this instance may be thought of as being analogous to the oscillating electromagetic field in an electric motor, and the nucleus may be thought of as being analogous to an electric motor's spinning shaft, as its action of flipping over is similar to that of the nucleus in NMR.

When the spin of the proton resonates with the radio waves, the energy absorbed by the hydrogen nucleus is at its maximum. The resonance has the effect of pulling the nucleus out of alignment with the original (vertical) magnetic field, creating a measurable difference in the horizontal field strength (see figure 2).

It is precisely these differences in the magnetic field strength that appear as spikes in figure 4. These spikes correspond to the presence of certain elements in a certain configuration. A trained chemist can look at these spikes and determine what compounds are present in the sample. "If you think about the millions of different compounds there are, this is a useful identification tool to determine which is in your NMR tube," Dr. Roat said.

NMR is a similar technique to MRI, magnetic resonance imaging. According to Dr. Roat, "MRI is based on the same principle, except that what the medical technique looks at is water. Every tissue in your body has water – some tissue more and some tissue less. By this method you can look at what a liver looks like vis a vis the surrounding tissue. A lesion on the liver would show up differently... b what is detected is proton magneti resonance."

Dr. Roat has been conducting n search into anti-cancer paltinum co pounds, and says the new device wi be useful for her research. "I used i (an NMR) at another institution whi on leave, and I found it to be very us ful. You can tell how the platinu compound is reacting with model co pounds imitating DNA... You can re ally see that a chemical reaction i happening." Ω

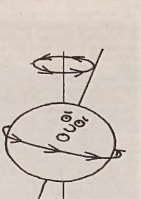

Figure 2
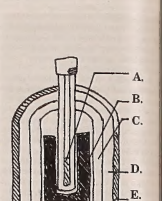
Happy Mr. Proton is still rotating on his axis, but now a powerful magnetic field has been applied, forcing Mr. Proton into a precessional orbit. (Note the angular velocity vectors the at top and bottom of Mr. Proton.)



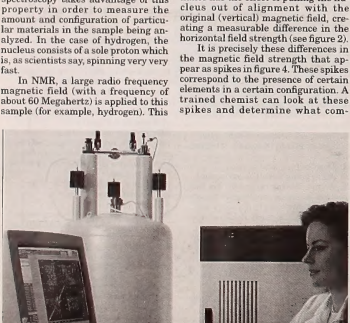


Figure 5
Diagram of the NMR "thermos"
A. spinning sample
B. Super conducting magnet
C. Liquid helium
D. Liquid nitrogen
E. Insulation

A digital nuclear magnetic resonance spectrometer. At far left sits a flask full of NMR tubes full of samples, which appear to be nothing more than colored water. At left is the computer monitor displaying the results of the spectroscopy. The funky gadget behind the computer monitor is the guts, the very heart and soul of the NMR machine. (See figure figure 5 for a cross section.) At right is the "black box" of the NMR. The black box processes all the spectroscopic data and acts as an interface between the user and the machine. User commands are input by the keyboard as shown.

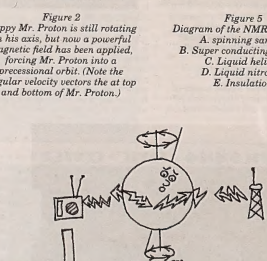

Figure 3 (top)
A radio frequency transmisson oscillates at a right angle to Mr. Proton's precessional orbit, creating a magnetic field perpendicular to the first magnetic field.
Figure 4 (bottom)
The NMR computer processes the data, producing a plot of the radio signal received by the apparatus.

The Washington College Chess Championship

...f Frank
...rom Hoffman

Ladies and gentlemen, on Tuesday the first, Washington College played host to an exciting sporting event indeed. It was the Washington College chess tournament, a furious mental Olympics to decide which member of our elite college community was to become "intellectual champion". Your generation-The press arrived early. Surveying the room with their keen eyes, they decided that the tournament must be in the Casey Academic Center, rather than the Student Center, where they had been told that the colossal event would be held. But the championship was supposed to take place in the Student Center as they learned from the first (and only) competitor to show up to the grand event. By this time, as a crowd had gathered, and the whiff of competition was a student who would only identify himself as "Bob-Bob." When asked if he was and his friends would snub him once they found out about his chess-playing ways, Bob-Bob said, "Most of them already know about it actually, and there's really no problems." Bob-Bob plays chess and he's not afraid to come out of the closet and talk about it.

Three students stood nearby watching prime time television fare, while two others, seemingly engrossed in their ping-pong match, eagerly awaited the match. There had to be a tournament. The reporters flipped a coin to see who would take on the impossibility of winning a game of chess against Bob-Bob and his lucky wallet charm. Jeff lost the coin toss, so he had to participate in the tournament. After Bob-Bob placed his chess pieces, he showed Jeff which chess pieces could go where, the match began. And ended. It was over in about six minutes. Jeff had taken Bob-Bob's bishop, a knight, and two pawns; while Bob-Bob had taken three of Jeff's pawns, a knight, a bishop, and the ever important King; whom Jeff had foolishly locked in with his own men.

Overall, it must certainly go down in history as one of the most exciting sporting events ever to rock the college community. It had everything from the Field of Dreams-esque appearance of Jeff Frank, the triumph-against-the-odds victory by Bob-Bob. Although the crowd never did get around to watching the match, the greatest minds throughout history were present in spirit. A ghostly Socrates was clapping Jeff around, cursing him for his foolish moves. Alexander the Great was drunk and on his feet, shouted from head to foot in Bob-Bob's favorite colors, singing "Whoomp, there it is!" with every flick of Bob-Bob's fingers. Sadly, most of the student body missed this monumental event. They were probably absorbed with basketball, or football, or some other unimportant, un-American sport. After his victory, Bob-Bob was asked what he would do after winning the coveted Washington College chess tournament, and he said, "I'll probably go back to my dorm and read, maybe do my homework." There you have it, an exciting end to a thrill-packed morning of chess. Ω

KA lollipops

Purchase lollipops, please, from the Brothers of Kappa Alpha. They're 50 cents each, and proceeds go to benefit the Muscular Dystrophy Association. Contact Deepak Raja at extension 8771. He'll deliver, and he'll be there in five minutes.

Club Ice Hockey ties Catholic U

Dave Kraft

The Washington College Ice Hockey Club played host to the Catholic University Cardinals on Tuesday, and played to a 5-5 tie. Freshman Mike "Punch" Mullen was the team's offensive leader, scoring a hat trick to take the team lead in goals with six on the year. Freshman Rodney Beverage also had a big game, registering four assists. Roman leads the team in assists (six) and points (10). Freshman goalie Andy Lopatin had another solid game, making 25 saves, raising his save percentage to 81.7%, and evening his record at 1-1-1. The Sho'men played a team game, apparent by the fact that every single skater scored at least one point. Another positive was that the Sho'men stayed out of trouble, only receiving five penalties — an unofficial record. This might have been because the head of officials for the Middle-Atlantic states was the referee. I guess it pays to have a reputation.

Mullen opened the scoring with a quick goal, assisted by Jon Paine and Todd Barto. Catholic, again the larger team, tried to wear the Sho'men out early by rushing the puck with their defensemen, and scored the next three goals. The Sho'men knew they needed to get back in the game quickly, so Mullen turned a Dave Kraft pass into a beautiful upper-corner goal. He then completed his hat trick with a goal assisted by Roman and Tim Reardon. The score was 3-3 after two periods.

In the third period, Scott Dervaes scored a hard-fought goal in the goal mouth, his third of the season, assisted by Mullen and Roman. Chris Daily also scored in the third, his fifth of the season, assisted by Roman and John Moreland, but the scoring ended there.

The teams played a short overtime period, in which Lopatin and the team's defensemen (Kraft, Moreland, and Reardon) were tested a number of times. Yet as time ran out, the score remained 5-5.

W.C.'s remaining games include a rematch with the Loyola Greyhounds, whom the Sho'men defeated earlier this season, in Easton on February 9, at 10:15 p.m. The Sho'men travel to D.C. to rematch Catholic on February 12 at 8 p.m., and return to Easton for their season finale against Dickinson on February 14 at 10:15 p.m. We thank the fans who have been coming out and supporting us, and hope to see you at these final games. Ω

Sho'women win 5 of last 6 games

Erika K. Ford

Washington women's basketball heads into their last week of play with a hard-fought 10-10 record.

They've won five of their last six games.

On Tuesday night, the team took on Ursinus at home, winning 57-50. Center Eboni Taylor led the Sho'women with 20 points and had an astounding 18 rebounds.

Down by one at halftime, Washington had an eight-point advantage in the second half leading to the win.

Forward Allison Wentworth came up with 14 points as well as 14 rebounds for Washington. Lee Ann Lezzer contributed nine points and five assists.

Megan Miller also had five assists and seven points for the Sho'women.

At the line Washington shot 63% at the line (17 for 27) and was 36.5% in overall field goals.

In the Centennial Conference they hold a 5-6 record.

On Sunday the team traveled to Allentown, PA to play Muhlenburg, but lost 88-77.

Eboni Taylor reached a personal best 31 points for the Sho'women, and also grabbed 18 rebounds.

Karen Sieger added 16 points against the Mules.

Last Thursday Washington left Philadelphia Bible in the dust with an 87-57 victory. Taylor scored 20 points and had 14 rebounds. Allison Wentworth had 16 points and 12 rebounds for the Sho'women.

Sieger and Kristen Snell each had 12 points, while Lezzer had 11. Miller added eight, while Shannon Rump and Hilary Rainey each chipped in four points.

Washington had a 51.3 field goal percentage, as opposed to Philadelphia Bible's 35.9%. The Sho'women took a substantial lead in the first period, standing 46-20 at the half.

Last night the basketball team played Western Maryland after this issue went to press. Tomorrow night they travel to Haverford.

The team's last home game of the season is on Wednesday, February 15 at 6 p.m. against Swarthmore.

Next Thursday they take on Bryn Mawr away in their final Conference game. Ω

Photo by John Feiler (courtesy of Sports Information)

Allison Wentworth concentrates on the net with excellent Nike air time

Kent County Parks & Rec.

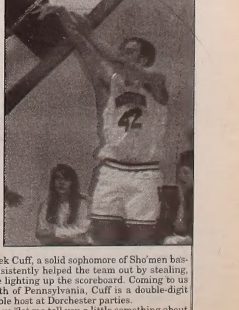
Ski Trip

Feb. 25th

Package:

Lift only -----$45.00

Lift / Rental ----$68.00



Lesson, Lift & Rental -----$72.00

Beginner Package (restricted ticket) $64.00

Contact John McDonald at 778-1957

POW

Washington College's Player of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an aide to displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

This week's POW goes to Derek Cuff, a solid sophomore of Sho'men basketball. The 6'2" forward has consistently helped the team out by stealing, blocking, and shooting long while lighting up the scoreboard. Coming to us live from the great commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Cuff is a double-digit scorer at W.C. as well as an amiable host at Dorchester parties.

Honorable mention goes to Dave "let me tell you a little something about swimming" Kraft for great times in the pool this season.

Men's B-Ball goes 1 and 1 in the Conference

Peggy Busker

It was not a good day for the Sho'men. It was their second meeting against Conference foe Muhlenberg. Earlier this season the Sho'men, with a great home crowd, had come alive to beat Muhlenberg 66-64 in overtime.

The Sho'men tried to improve their away record Sunday against the Mules, but their away record sustained another loss, making it 1-8.

Coach Finnegan sums up the Sho'men play with one word: "Outplayed."

The score was close at the half, with the Mules only slightly ahead, 34-30. But the Sho'men came out slow and 16 minutes into the second half were down to the Mules by 18 points.

Washington never came back. "[Washington was] just out-played everywhere in the second half," said Finnegan. The Sho'men were outscored 54-32 by the Muhlenberg Mules.

Leaders for the Sho'men were Ben Harris with 18 points, five rebounds, a block, and a steal.

PHOTO BY KEITH VANDERBILT

Ben Harris practices the 'Electric Slide' for the Birthday Ball

Freshman Bradd Burkhart reached double digits with 14 points and four rebounds. This was the second time this season the freshman made 14 points.

Derek Cuff made nine points for the Sho'men, followed by freshman Matt King, who netted six for Washington. Mark Awantang and Ed Hicks each had four points, Mark with four rebounds and Ed with three. Jerry Davis was tough on the boards grabbing five rebounds.

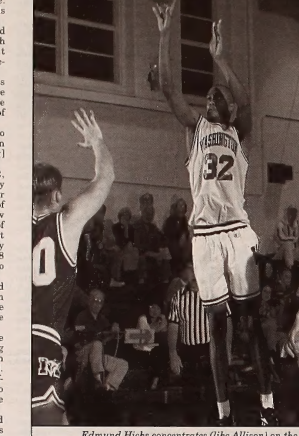
Paul Kenny and Joseph McDonald each had an impressive game, with Paul marking his season's best against the Mules playing tough defense and aggressive offense.

The shooting for the Sho'men was not its finest, at only 38% from the field and the three-point line. The Sho'men did, however, make 90% of their free throws.

"The game came down to who wanted it more," Coach Finnegan commented, "And [Muhlenberg] wanted it more."

The final score was 88-62, Muhlenberg. This, like any Conference match, was upsetting for the Sho'men. In Washington's half of the Conference, the Sho'men are now tied with Muhlenberg with a record of 5-4. Swarthmore is currently in first with a record of 7-2. The Sho'men play Swarthmore next Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the Caindome. Be sure not to miss it!

The Sho'men improved their road record by defeating Ursinus, whom they had beaten at home in overtime 69-66. Ursinus is currently 1-8 in the Conference.



The first few minutes of the Ursinus game did not look promising for the Sho'men as the Bears took an early uncontested eight-point lead. Adam Poe began the Washington offense with a lay-up four minutes into the game to put Washington on the score board.

Washington took a timeout and came back to decrease the Ursinus lead.

Ben Harris made a lay-up followed by a three-pointer by freshman Bradd Burkhart. Ed Hicks and Jerry Davis would go to the foul line to score for the Sho'men. With the score 21-9, Ursinus, Burkhart sunk another three.

Free throws by Mark Awantang and Adam Poe put the Sho'men within ten. A series of well-chosen shots and nothing but net free throws tied the game at 24, with 10 unanswered shots for the Sho'men. Washington had managed to limit Ursinus's scoring capability, while racking up their own points.

At the half, Washington was once again down, but only by four. Adam Poe made a three-pointer with 28 seconds left to keep the Sho'men within range. Ursinus was up 31-27.

Edmund Hicks concentrates (like Allison) on the net but with excellent Reebok air time

The second half was all Washington. Adam Poe sparked Washington back into action with another three-pointer. Derek Cuff followed by feeding the ball to Hicks, who drove the lane and made the lay-up. Derek then took the ball and penetrated the offense for a lay-up.

Adam Poe kept racking up points at the foul line to put the Sho'men ahead for the first time. Ben Harris and Derek Cuff added to the lead. Then back-to-back three-pointers by Poe and Harris put the Sho'men six points ahead of the Bears.

Ursinus then scored five unmatched points, cutting Washington's lead to two, when Mark Awantang made two free throws, followed by a jumper, to keep Washington's lead.

Consecutive lay-ups by Adam Poe, Derek Cuff, and Bradd Burkhart as the clock approached five minutes increased the Sho'men lead to seven, the largest of the game.

With four minutes left, Washington was up by 10 and increasing the lead. Adam Poe made another three-pointer for a 13-point margin.

As the clock wore down, Washington made all their free throws to increase their lead to 16. Burkhart, Harris, and Hicks were 100% on the foul line in the remaining seconds.

Adam Poe managed to make one mo lay-up and Burkhart made two mo free throws as the final points of th game to give the Sho'men a final mar gin of 15, and a score of 86-71 ov Ursinus.

The lead scorer for the Sho'me was Adam Poe with 27 points, a pe sonal best, with four of those comi from three-pointers. Ben Harris ha 22 points and six steals, a person best for him in the steals column Bradd Burkhart also topped his pe sonal best with 15 points. Mat Awantang had personal bests in thre categories: nine points, nine rebound and four blocks. Jerry Davis was h on defense with six rebounds and on steal.

The team shot 86% from the fre line and 41% from the field.

Washington improved their roa record and held their second place po sition in the Conference. Washingto is now 6-4 in their half of th Conference.

The last games of the season wi be the hardest for the Sho'men as the play the number one team in their ha of the Conference, Swarthmore, an the number one team in Division II F&M. Be sure to come out and suppo W.C.; you don't want to miss anothe Washington win. Ω

A look ahead to the courts

Paulina Sierra

The season starts with new goals and hard training. After having improved their ranking during the fall, both the men's and women's teams are expected to have good results this spring. Tennis coach Tim Gray has come up with a new program guiding the team to climb one step higher in the mountain of success. Todd Helbling and David Paschal, assistant coaches, are giving physical and mental advice to both teams.

The men's team consists of former champions Robin Sanders, Damian Polla, Miroslav Beran, Andrew King, Mike Kember, and Andrew Moffat, who will defend again W.C.'s honor against most difficult opponents. The women's team is stronger than ever, consisting of Anabel Flores, Diane Clausen, Meghan Brumby, Amy Rizzutello, Vicky Roth, Paulina Sierra, Melissa Ellwanger, Ann-Marie Malena, and Kim Prettyman.

These players, with more experience, will lead the team the entire season.

Both teams are ready for their first match at home. The men's team will play the University of Pennsylvania on February 12, and the women's team will play Salisbury State on February 22. The outcome of the season for the Sho'men will be the result of a lot of hard work, dedication, and cooperation that exists on and off the tennis courts. W.C. will have the opportunity to witness the many successes of these teams. Ω on scenic Swan Creek near Rock Hall offers a full care event horse facility with a private atmosphere. We have two stalls available at reasonable rates. Also TB event horses for lease and for sale. Instruction, trailering.

Humphrey's Point Farm

639-2832

Pizza Contest

This week's winners for the pizza contest are the powerful duo of Jen Nauta and Liz Mangano. Congratulations for being so spirited in supporting women's athletics at W.C. Honorable mention to Lisa Sambula who, although with several cheering teams, was a great sideline supporter of the Sho'women as they beat Ursinus. As spring sports start, there will be many more pizza opportunities, so be on the lookout for free pizza!

W.C. swimming has toughest meet yet

Women go 10-1 as season winds down

Dave Kraft

The Washington College women's swim team had a successful weekend, despite some extremely tough competition. On Thursday, they defeated Millersville University by the convincing score of 190-72. Washington opened the meet with the team of Meredith Bathgate, Darlene Schaub, Megan Bradley, and Casey Bane winning the 200 Medley Relay, and the team of Erin Miller, Robin Woollens, Amy Draper, and Jenn Voss placing second. Danielle Sullivan and Bradley has reason to look optimistically towards Championships. Part of the reason for this was the fall of two more school records and the 11 season-best times registered.

Rather than yielding to Gettysburg's powerful reputation, the Sho'women came out fired up, winning the 200 Medley Relay in a school record time of 1:58.73 to start the meet. The winning team was comprised of four freshmen: Meredith Bathgate, Darlene Schaub, Megan Bradley, and Danielle Sullivan.

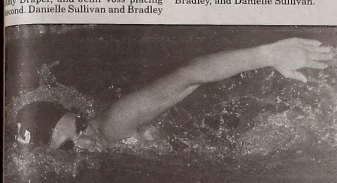

PHOTO BY KELLY VONDERHEID

Washington swimmer races towards the finish line with style and grace placed first and second in the 200 Free, and Barbara Murphy, Miller, and Denise Hakanson swept the 100 Back. Schaub remained unbeaten in the 100 Breast, with Voss coming in third in a season best time. Bradley posted a season best in the 200 Fly, winning in 2:18.54. Jen Dow placed second. Bathgate and Bane then placed 1-2 in the 50 Free.

After the break, Bane, Voss, and Hakanson took 1-2-4 in the 100 Free, and Bathgate, Miller, and Murphy swept the 200 Back. Schaub then won the 200 Breast in a season-best time of 2:40.09; just off the school record. Sullivan's season-best time of 5:39.56 was good for a win in the 500 Free. Bradley, Dow, and Heather Beauchamp went 1-2-4 in the 100 Fly. Bathgate won the 200 IM in a season best 2:22.73, as Murphy and Miller followed in second and third. W.C. finished the meet with a win in the 200 Free Relay, courtesy of Sullivan, Amy Draper, Voss, and Bane. The women raised their mark to 10-0 with the win.

On Saturday, W.C. played host to the defending Centennial Conference champions, Gettysburg. The Bullets, heavily favored to repeat as champs, trounded Washington its first loss, 119-66. The loss was not indicative of the women's performance. Considering Gettysburg defeated the Sho'women by over 100 points last year, the team

With the excitement of the relay, W.C. started to swim a great meet. Best times were recorded in the 200 Free by Barbara Murphy and Amy Peterson. All three women in the grueling 400 IM had season bests: Denise Hakanson, Erin Miller, and Jen Dow. Heather Beauchamp swam her season best in the 100 Fly, and Miller recorded another in her 100 Back. Bradley and Dow did likewise in the 500 Free.

W.C.'s second school record was broken by Darlene Schaub in the 100 Breast. Schaub took first in 1:13.39; the only individual event win by Washington. The relay teams of Casey Bane, Jenn Voss, Dow, and Murphy; and Hakanson, Peterson, Beauchamp, and Robin Woollens placed 2-3 in the 200 Free Relay.

The team now stands at 10-1. Their last dual meet is against another highly-ranked Conference rival, Swarthmore, on Wednesday night. The Sho'women enthusiastically look toward Championships, which take place February 17-19 at Swarthmore. The team will send 12 women, their largest showing in years, to better their eighth-place finish of a year ago.

"We've had a great season and we have a really good chance to place in the top three," says junior captain Jen Dow. "This is a new team." Ω

Men Swimmers bow to Foe Gettysburg

Dave Kraft

In what is becoming a fine rivalry, Gettysburg College, the defending Centennial Conference men's swimming champions, came to the Casey Swim Center for the first time in their history to face the also undefeated Sho'men. The Sho'men were again underdogs, but were determined to at least earn the respect of the Bullets, who won last year's meeting by an embarrassing 149-56 score. Gettysburg entered their very best lineup for the purpose of trying to rout the Sho'men a second time. Though Gettysburg came out on top, there was no rout, and Washington proved to themselves, and to Gettysburg, that they were a team to be reckoned with in the Centennial Conference. The 126-80 loss was W.C.'s first of the year, against eight wins. The Sho'men turned out a number of season-best times, and scored big points with their depth.

Gettysburg tried to set the tone early by swimming their top 200 Medley Relay team of Matt McKenna, John Dobson, Peter Cassares, and Todd Peters, who are ranked first in the Conference both in the relay, and in the 100 Back, 100 Breast, 100 Fly, and 100 Free, respectively. The Bullets took first, but the Sho'men team of Peter Ward, Jason Campbell, Scott Steinmuller, and Chris Freisheim took second, and the team of Tyler McCarthy, Julien Gaudion, Ryu Kawai, and Perry Holland took third, beating out Gettysburg's second team. Gettysburg's Joe Carver, ranked first in the 500 and 1000 Free, won the 1000; however, W.C.'s Erric Hetzer, Drew Fritch, and Dave Czekaj took 2-3-4; Hetzer and Fritch in season best times. Dave Kraft and Steinmuller swam season best times in the 200 Free. In an extremely close 50 Free, Campbell swam an all-time personal best 22.64 to place second behind Gettysburg's Peters (22.25), and Tim Parent (22.81) followed in third. Freisheim took third in the 400 IM with a season best.

The 100 Fly was won by Gettysburg's Casares, but followed closely by Parent and Steinmuller in season best times. Peters scored another win in the 100 Free; Fritch was second and Hetzer third. Ward and McCarthy swam season bests to take second and third in the 100 Back, behind Gettysburg's McKenna. Carver won the 500 Free, with Dave Cola second. Gettysburg's Dobson and Washington's Campbell swam the 100 Breast in 1:02.58 and 1:02.89 respectively; the two fastest Conference times of the year, and Campbell's second season best of the meet. Gaudion followed in third.

W.C. ended the meet on a positive note, with the 1sem of Cola, Ward, Fritch, and Parent winning the 200 Free Relay. The team held their heads high after the meet. Senior captain Chris Freisheim said, "Despite the loss, our times really showed the potential that this team has. Everybody is going to ready for Champs – ready to go crazy."

The Sho'men end the regular season with another tough meet on Wednesday night at Swarthmore. The Garnet has an identical record to that of the Sho'men; both teams losing only to Gettysburg. The Sho'men will then take the maximum, 18 men, to Championships on February 17-19, where they know that they, Gettysburg, and Swarthmore will all be vying for the coveted title. Ω

Are you a closet sports cartoonist?

If you are, and want the rest of campus to see your talent, drop your cartoons of at the Elm Office with sports cartoons on the envelope or through campus mail to The Elm or to Peggy Busker.

Pool Tournament

The Department of Campus Recreation will be running a pool tournament for all interested players on Tuesday Feb.14 and Wednesday Feb. 15. If registration is good we can run it an extra day.

Registration: one thin buck, payable when you enter the student center. In order to fully register, reply to Steven Dashiell. You will be informed of your time of playing and opponent by Monday Feb. 13 at 4 p.m.

Divisions: As it looks now the tourney is set for two divisions (Class A and Class B). In order to compete for IFC points, you must participate in Class A. If there is enough female interest, there might be a Class C.

Other info: This is an IFC event so fraternities are encouraged to join in. The tournament is single elimination, with a standard game of 8 ball. Registration must be done by Monday Feb 13 at 2 p.m. For more information, contact Steven Dashiell at ext. 8891.

Here's another
Free Pizza Offer!

Thursday 7:30 p.m. in the Caindome (or Cain Gym) the women's basketball team vs. Western MD. If you and your friends are the loudest, you win two free pizzas courtesy of The Elm

Come on out and support WAC Basketball

Thursday, 7:30 Be There!

SKI
INTERCOLLEGIATE SKI WEEK '95
There's only one... PARTY IN THE SUN & SNOW!
ONLY $209
MT. ORFORD, QUEBEC, CANADA
JUST ACROSS THE VERMONT BORDER!
5 DAYS/4 NIGHTS
Sponsors include: Labatt's & Molson Budgie! Quebec
5 NIGHTS LODGING, LUXURY CONDO
• FULLY EQUIPPED KITCHEN, FIREPLACE ETC.
5 DAY SKI & SNOW BOARD LIFT TICKET
• NO QUEUES, NO WAITING FOR ALL LEVELS
• 1800 FOOT VERTICAL DROP
5 DAYS & NIGHTS OF INTERCOLLEGIATE PARTIES, CONTESTS & ACTIVITIES.
* NOTE: THE LEGAL AGE TO CONSUME ALCOHOL IS 18 STA TRAVEL
• CAMPUS REPS WANTED!
• FRATERNITY & SORORITY FUNDRAISERS
1-800-999-SKI-9

Photo by Kelly Youngblood

Matt King (who, dispite appearances does not actually have a mohawwk) unveils a new secret weapon in W.C.'s arsenel. Note the look of shock and horror on the opponent's face as Matt skillfully directs his baleful countenance at this unfortunate Gettysburg player. Reliable sources inform us that the player was seen running down Gibson Avenue in fear and is presently recovering from the shock in a local hospital.

As the winter sports are drawing to a close, do not miss your chance to see how Sho'men Sports dominate. Wish the WAC Swim Team good luck as they prepare for Championships, they have had an awesome season and deserve much support. The Championships are being held at Swarthmore February 17-19, only a 2 hour drive. Women's and Men's Basketball also enjoy the home crowd support and needs it as they continue to be in the top of the Conference. SUPPORT WAC SPORTS!!!

Scores

Swimming

Washington (women)	190
Millersville (women)	72
Washington (men)	80
(women)	68
Gettysburg (men)	126
(women)	119

Men's Basketball

Washington	62
Muhlenberg	88
Washington	86
Ursinus	71

Women's Basketball

Washington	87
Phila. Bible	57
Washington	77
Muhlenberg (OT)	87
Washington	57
Ursinus	50

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Wednesday February 15

Women's and Men's Basketball vs. Swarthmore 6 and 8 p.m. (LAST HOME WOMEN'S GAME!)

Saturday February 11

Men's Basketball vs. Haverford 7:30 p.m.

Women's Basketball @ Haverford 7:30

Friday February 17

Men's Basketball vs. F&M 7:30 (HUGE W.C. GAME!)

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number Seventeen

Serving the College Community Since 1930

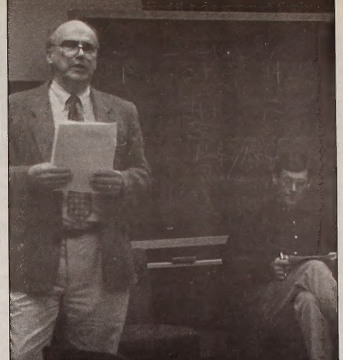

PHOTO COURTESY OF TERRY DE HAVEN

Dr. Frank Creegan address the Faculty during the TAFFY Forum while Kevin Coveney looks over his notes.

Faculty discusses TAFFY:

Plans for first-year program distribution nearing completion

Kate Meagher

"The Task Force on the First-Year Experience and Distribution proposes that starting in the Fall of 1995 all incoming students will have to take four general education courses, two in their first year, the other two in their sophomore year."

TAFFY met with the Faculty on Monday to present their report, the result of their study of the first-year experience, from which the above is excerpted. The main points discussed in the forum were distribution and the regional aspects of the proposed program.

"Academic Council asked us to take a look at the freshman year and distribution," said Frank Creegan, chair of the Chemistry Department, member of TAFFY, and leader of the forum. The task force also consists of Director of Reader Services Jeff Chaffin, Dean of Student Affairs Maureen McIntire, Assistant Professor of the Department of Psychology Kevin McKillop, Assistant Dean Beverly Wolff, Assistant Professor of the Department of Mathematics Louise Amick, Vice President for Admissions and Enrollment Management Kevin Coveney, Dean Joachim Scholz, Chair of the English Department Bennett Lamond, Chair of the Sociology Department Steven Cades, and W.C. sophomores Leeanne Cole and Catherine Langan.

TAFFY spent the fall semester looking closely at the first year and comparing the College's program to those of 24 comparable colleges, such as Western Maryland, Goucher, Drew, Bryn Mawr, Franklin & Marshall, and Muhlenberg. Some of these are considered by TAFFY as peer institutions, while others are termed "reach" institutions.

The student members of TAFFY polled the student body on their impressions of their first-year experience and desired improvements.

The forum was conducted in order for the task force to "get input from the Faculty in terms of what we might do," with regard to curricular change, according to Creegan. In the process of planning a new program, TAFFY considered a common course for all freshmen. Because few members of the Faculty would be able to participate in such a program, the task force developed the idea of "a set of thematically arranged courses." The proposed theme for the general education program is "Connections to an Expanding World." TAFFY asked faculty members for ideas and comments which they feel need to be considered by TAFFY. The ideas brought up will be considered in future TAFFY meetings. The student members of TAFFY will hold a student forum for the same purpose of accepting suggestions.

The first Faculty member to comment on the proposal was Spanish Professor George Shivers. He liked the concept, especially the flexibility and variety of courses. He referred to it as "a coherent program that moves through a series of steps." He addressed the fact that TAFFY has not changed the number of credits which need to be gained through required courses. (TAFFY proposes that eight courses be required under distribution, beyond the four outlined in the first- and second-year program.) Shivers asked whether the task force had considered lowering distribution requirements. He suggested that lowering the total course requirement

See "TAFFY" on 5

SGA's executive board elections coming soon

William Denton, III

Elections for next year's Student Government Association Executive board are rapidly approaching. The executive board is comprised of the President, Vice-president, Treasurer, Secretary, Student Life Chair, Honor Board Chair, and Parliamentarian. The first five positions are filled by way of election; the Honor Board Chair and Parliamentarian are appointed by the elected Executive board.

According to the Student Government Association's Constitution, the Executive board "shall meet weekly and serve as a steering committee and a budget committee for the SGA." In addition, "the Executive board shall review the constitution during each academic year."

Petitions for the positions will become available in the Student Affairs Office starting February 15. Petitions may be taken out by anyone. Each person seeking candidacy must obtain 15 students' signatures on his or her petition. The signatures are required in order to ensure that only serious candidates are able to gain candidacy. Completed petitions are due back to the Student Affairs Office on February 22.

All candidates must submit supplementary campaign essays to The Elm by Tuesday, February 21, at 5 p.m. They will be published in an Elm supplement, to be released Friday, February 24. Essays must be at least 2,000 characters in length (approximately one page, single-spaced, in New York or Geneva font), and the staff will edit the essays for clarity and length if necessary.

An open forum will be held on the Monday, February 27 at 7 p.m. in the Student Center, in which the candidates will give campaign speeches. Each candidate for each of the five offices will have the opportunity to speak. Following the speeches, the candidates, as a panel, will field questions from the floor.

The elections are scheduled for March 1. Starting at 10 a.m., balloting will take place in Casey Academic Center. At approximately 4:30 p.m.,

See "Elections" on 4

Cole to speak at Convocation

Kate Meagher

This year's guest at Washington College's annual convocation in celebration of George Washington's birthday is Johnnetta B. Cole, first African American woman to be president of Spelman College. Among Cole's many achievements are honorary degrees from 30 institutions of higher learning. She will be likewise honored by W.C. on Saturday, February 18, in Tawes Theatre. Convocation begins at 2 p.m. Cole, to become an honorary doctor of public service, will give the convocation address, entitled, "On Becoming Each Other's Keeper."

Cole, an anthropologist, professor, administrator, author, researcher, and lecturer, has written several books, including 1993's Conversations.

Having received her master's degree from Oberlin and her doctorate from Northwestern, Cole went on to teach at Washington State University, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, Hunter College, and the City University of New York.

Her service to the community includes participation in the Board of the Department of Education's Fund for the Improvement of Post Secondary Education, the United Negro College Fund, and the Points of Light Foundation. She has served on the boards of the Atlanta Women's Network, the Business Higher Education Forum, the Center for Women's Policy Studies, the Fund for a Free South Africa, Leadership America, The Feminist Press, and Sisterhood in Support of Sisters in South Africa. She is a member of the Atlanta Rotary Club, the Coalition of 100 Black Women, the National Council of Negro Women, the National Political Congress of Black Women, and the Utopian Literary Club. Cole is also a fellow of the American Anthropological Association, and advisory and contributing editor for The Black Scholar, on the editorial board of the Journal for Higher Education Management, and included in Who's Who in Black America (1980) and Who's Who of American Women (1986 and '92).

Cole was one of Glamour's 10 Women of the Year in 1991 and one of Working Woman's 10 Women to Watch in the '90s. She has garnered many awards, and in 1994 alone was given the Tree of Life Award by the Jewish National Fund and the Martin Luther King Distinguished Service Award from the Georgia State Holiday

See "Cole" on 5

Inside This Week's Elm

Thinking through...
the possible nomination for Surgeon General of Henry Foster
3

TAFFY proposal
The complete report to the Faculty from the Task Force on the First-Year Experience & Distribution
5

We Get You Romance!
Jeff and Kevin unite Juan Hernandez with the Washington College woman of his dreams.
6

Crossword Puzzle
Koon returns with devilishly difficult puzzle, his first with thirteen-letter words.
9

Because they demand it or Justifications for editorial decisions

Last week I spent my column inches explaining how I feel about journalism, what it is, why it is, and how it applies to The Washington College Elm. Everything I wrote was theory, pure theory. Now I will try explain how the Elm staff takes that theory and applies it to practical, week-to-week decisions.

As I explained in last week's editorial, The Elm is more than the paper upon which it is printed. It is a service the Elm staff provides to our audience, the Washington College community. Our first responsibility is to our audience.

Members of this community have a right to know what actions are being taken that affect the welfare of the whole. Actions such as the decision not to grant Audrey Fessler contract renewal, changes in the budget and the proposed changes in freshman orientation and distribution do have an effect on the community at large and therefore it is not only the right of The Elm, but its obligation to inform its audience of these changes.

Last week I wrote that journalism is part good reporting, good judgment, good writing, and responsibility. The Elm staff takes each of these very seriously. We strive to reach all of the parties involved in any conflict or action. We strive to avoid mud-slinging and name-calling in all of our articles. We strive to present the issues in as concise and clear a manner as possible. And we strive to live up to the responsibility that all of this entails.

Due to The Elm's position as the official Washington College newspaper, the Elm staff has an added responsibility. We must weigh the consequences of everything we print, and its effect on the College's public image. On a day-to-day basis this means asking ourselves whether or not the stories we propose to cover are important to the community and if they will present a negative picture of Washington College. If the answer to the first question is yes and the answer to the second no, then our job is easy. If, on the other hand, the answer to the first is yes and the answer to the second is also yes, we are placed in the position of weighing the importance of the issue against the possible damage done to the reputation of this institution.

On more than one occasion, information has reached the Elm office that the Elm staff thought best not to print. We felt that the consequence of making public such information would do more harm than good. On the other hand, and as more frequently happens, the staff decides that providing our audience with information is more important and takes precedence over protecting the image of the College.

A decision such as this was made in the case of the "Fessler case." It would appear as if we made the right decision, or at least some of our readers think so. This week The Elm received four letters concerning Audrey Fessler. This is an issue that is important to our readers and that makes it important to the paper.

Towards the end of last week's editorial, I made it a point to mention that the issues that are controversial at Washington College are not unique. The world of academia is faced with the issues of curricular review, the relative merits of tenure, budgetary problems and a host of others. We at Washington College can not ignore these issues in hopes that they will be solved elsewhere. We must face the controversies and find solutions to the problems in order to keep up with the rest of the academic world and ensure our place in the future of that world. Only through honest discussion and the passing along of information can we hope to accomplish this feat.

Election Essays

With SGA executive board elections coming soon, The Elm would like to remind all those running for an office that their election essays are due to the Elm office no later than Tuesday, February 21, at 5 p.m. The essays should be at least a page, single-spaced in length and typed in Microsoft Word. Please refrain from the use of tabs, and use only one space after a punctuation mark. The essays can be delivered to the Elm office on disk or sent through BlitzMail to The Elm. If there are any further questions, feel free to contact Editor-in-Chief Rachael Fink at extension 8505.

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink
News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Co-Editors
Mindie J. Kaplan and Sarah Bell
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Erika Ford

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Joshua T. Lawrence, IV
Office Manager
Scott Koon
Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and cruds do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 9 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BitnzMail. Noteworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8585.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

To the Editor:

"Fessler case" still an issue

I am proud of the people whom I have met at Washington College. I give admissions tours and tell prospective students how friendly a community that we all are a part of. I tell them of the wonderful professors that I have had here, and how they have greatly influenced my life. I have been proud to meet and be involved with the people at Washington College, from the housekeepers to the deans. I believe that people have always treated me fairly and with respect at this campus. This College has taught me a great deal about life. I will never forget my tenure here; the community has had a lasting influence on me.

I am now going to depart from W.C., and I feel that I am going to leave this place with a bad taste in my mouth. The reason for this is the release of Audrey Fessler from her position as professor. I have not been able to figure out the reason that her position was dissolved. If one looks at the track record of the soon-to-be-Dr. Fessler, one will see her dedicated and hard working attitude toward the campus. Her involvement with the new Honor Code, her instrumental voice in Gender Studies, and her basic positive influence on so many students has been reason enough to justify keeping her here. She is leaving because there has been a political movement to oust her. No one has ever questioned her dedication to her job, or to the community, or to the students. The loss of her job is unfair, and it is also unwise. She has not received the respectful treatment I have received here.

I believe that this issue illustrates some of the underlying problems of the College. The student government has voted unanimously to keep her, and the faculty unanimously supported that motion. Nothing was ever done about it. It was like whoever made this decision said "so what, the decision will stand." It seems to have been smoke and mirrors after that. I have heard a variety of reasons for the release of Audrey Fessler. I have heard that it was because she had not completed her doctoral dissertation. I had heard that it was a restructuring of the English Department that caused the position to be eliminated. I have also heard that the College does not have the money to retain her. I have heard many other things too, but it would not be proper to discuss them in The Elm. This does not illustrate the candid honesty that has endeared me to this College.

It seems that whoever has made this decision has looked at the students with a paternal attitude. "We know what you need, you need an American-ist or nothing at all. Audrey Fessler's popularity and her effective teaching are of no consequence to the College." I implore anyone who has the power or the will to change this decision to talk to students, colleagues, anyone to get their opinion of the job she has done here. She has done an outstanding job. Why do we choose to lose her?

Audrey Fessler's classes are full, not because she is an easy professor, but because she makes her classes interesting and she cares about her students. That is the kind of professor that the College prides itself on, and yet she is let go. Four hundred students signed a petition to keep her in a three-day span of signature collection because of class evaluations are superb. Other professors who have been fired during my time here have been eliminated because of "outside evaluations." Audrey Fessler's outside departmental evaluations say that she is "undervalued" and needed. If the outside evaluations say that she needs to stay, why do we not keep her?

I could write forever on this issue, but I will say that Audrey Fessler keeps people at W.C. She gives us intangible qualities that make W.C. a better place. We need to keep her.

This whole situation shows the flawed process that the College employs for personnel decisions. I do not think that the students have been listened to at all. We are the ones that will lose by the dismissal of Audrey Fessler.

If anyone on the Board would happen to read this, please step in and find out the facts. Talk to the students, look at end of class evaluations, look at outside evaluations, look at what she has done here, see how she makes the College better, and look at the way that this whole situation has been poorly handled from the beginning. I would be more than happy to sit down and talk to anyone about this who would like to hear my candid opinion about this.

I feel sorry for Dr. Toll, who stepped into the middle of this controversy, and I also urge him to revisit this issue for the benefit of the community.
-Max Walton

For more letters "To the Editor" concerning "The Fessler Case" see 3

This Week on Campus
Feb 17 - 23

Film Series
Café au Lait
Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.

Friday 17
Music of the Schumanns and the Mendelssohns, a piano recital by Prof. Kathy Mills, Tawes, 8 p.m.

Saturday 18
George Washington's Birthday Convocation,
Tawes, 2 p.m.
President's Forum,
following Convocation, CAC Forum
Great Gatsby Gala,
Dinner 7:30 p.m., Hodson Hall, Dancing 9 p.m., Cain Gym

Tuesday 21

Wednesday 22
George Washington's Birthday

Thursday 23

Thinking through ...

A nomination in critical condition

by Paul Briggs

Today, the Foster nomination is in critical condition. It seems that over the course of his career in OB-GYN he has performed some abortions. Foster outlined his personal position on abortion thus: "I believe in the right of a woman to choose. And I also support the President's belief that abortions should be safe, legal and rare. But my life's work has been dedicated to making sure that young people don't have to face the choice of having abortions."

"Safe, legal and rare" - and you may place the emphasis on whichever one you like - is as close to a position of consensus as America will ever come to on this issue. Most people, although they may agree that abortion should not be outlawed, cannot quite regard it as being no different from, say, an appendectomy. It is generally acknowledged that the large number of abortions that occur in the United States is a symptom of a societal failing.

The main problem, however, is that when you pull just how many abortions he had performed, the White House took a while to give a coherent response. First it was just one, then fewer than a dozen." Meanwhile, groups in opposition were claiming that it was as many as 700.

It is understandable that it would take a few days to sift through 38 years of medical records. According to the most recent figures, Foster performed 36 abortions. Also, it has been possible to trace some mistakes back to their source. According to Newsweek: "Asked how many abortions he'd performed, Foster recalled instead one especially troubling procedure, involving a woman who was HIV-positive. Incredibly, the HHS staff construed this to mean that he had done just one abortion."[1] In addition to the fact that abortion politics is still very much a sore spot, this sort of fumbling has caused the nominee's position to be weakened.

There doesn't seem to be much chance that the nomination of Henry Foster will be withdrawn, either by himself or by Clinton. In the aforementioned speech, Foster described the nomination battle as the "fight of his life" and said that "I am standing strong - and I appreciate the strong support of the President." Recently various White House sources have said that the President does in fact plan to fight for this nominee, so as not to appear indecisive or unreliable, as he did in the Lani Guinier incident. (Digression: I would much rather be seeing Clinton fighting for a nominee than be hearing about how he's going to do it. Also, if I were the President, I would be extremely irritated at my staff's habit of telling the whole world in advance what impression I was planning to aim for in a given situation.)

The question is whether abortion-rights Republicans are prepared to vote against Foster in order to damage the President. If they do, Foster will almost certainly be defeated.

The Democrats do still have 47 seats. If they could muster some sort of party discipline, they might be able to save this nominee. My suspicion is, however, that the lesson the Democrats have drawn from the '94 elections is that they didn't lie low enough when they were in charge. Several Senate Democrats have already come out against Foster, charging the administration with bad judgment in choosing him. This may serve as cover for other Senate Democrats to desert.

If Clinton can't count on what remains of his own party to support him, he won't be able to do much of anything except veto whatever passes that he doesn't like. For an activist president, this would be the ultimate irony. Ω

[1] Bill Turque & Bob Cohn, "Foster Follies, Newsweek, 2/20/95, p.27.

Continued student activism called for

I has been very frustrated and angry about the issue of Professor Fessler. I am angry not only at the administration, but also at students in general. The lack of interest, lack of actions, interests, and anger towards the administration. We had understanding and support for the issue. But it seems to me that it all died out. That is exactly what the administration was hoping. When we, the SGA, and the Student Senate called upon to support professor Fessler, the administration and the English Department, especially, decided to put the issue aside for two, three weeks, or so. (I don't remember exactly.) Then we had the final exam, got too busy taking care of ourselves, and we forgot all about it after we came back from the Christmas break. Whose plan has been succeeding? The administration's one.

The SGA and faculty have done their job by going through proper, well-mannered procedures. But the administration has provided no clear justifications or explanations for the leave of Professor Fessler. I am sure that they will be working on this issue til the end of this semester. But I am afraid that the end result will be same.

They have already tried enough and it did not work. There has to be a different way. We have to take steps.

We are paying big bucks for education and time of our lives. We are customers of the college. Our voice should be heard. There is a reasonable doubt that Professor Fessler has been treated fairly by the administration. Their new justifications have been contradicted to the previous ones. We don't know which is true and who has been responsible for the decision. The English Department points a finger at the administration and hides with just about everyone I may bump into. However, there still lingers in the air uneasiness concerning the dismissal of Professor Fessler. I feel that I and every other member of the Washington College Community that have so often speak of are being cheated.

I still do not fully understand the logic behind why Professor Fessler was denied contract renewal at Washington College. I have never sat in a Fessler class, but it is hard to understand why such a popular and successful professor would simply be let go. From my understanding, every year her students consistently score the highest on Senior Comps. Her student evaluations are outstanding. We, the college community, have been given a variety of conflicting and inconsistent reasons why tenure was denied. The members of the SGA unanimously passed a resolution last semester supporting Professor Fessler. The faculty followed with a resolution supporting the SGA resolution. Still, the Washington College Community has not been listened to.

The controversy began, as I see it, last semester when the A&T Board denied Professor Fessler contract renewal. Since then, there have been a number of reasons given for this decision. The English Department voted instead to create another position in the American Literature. However, they had just last year eliminated that same position with the release of Professor Wolff. It was then argued that Professor Fessler had not published enough. Several now finished her dissertation. It is my understanding that there exists at Washington College tenured professors that have not finished their doctorate, even within the English Department itself. Furthermore, Professor Fessler has spent this past year working on her dissertation. President Trout, during an SGA meeting last semester said Fessler was denied contract renewal on the grounds that "there has been a dramatic shift from English majors to those in the Natural Sciences." Yet, there are no plans to hire any new professor in any of those departments. Our new President, Dr. Toll, who inherited this mess, stated that there simply isn't enough money to retain Professor Fessler. However, there are possibly six English majors who are thinking about transferring to another institution because of this issue. Roughly speaking, six students paying about $20,000 per year in tuition will cost the school $120,000. I am sure that is considerably less than Professor Fessler's salary!

So, just why was Professor Fessler denied contract renewal? I still can't figure it out. I believe the vote within the English department was two in favor of retaining Fessler, three against. How can the voices of three people deny the voices of another 900 or so members of the Washington College Community. It sounds like an extreme case of the tyranny of the minority! I believe it was one student, Mike McDermott, who said it best, "For most of us (the students), this is the only chance in our lives to complete our education and make something of ourselves." When will the voices of this Washington College Community" that we so often hear about be listened to, addressed honestly, and respected?

-Mark Reyero, Junior Class President

Reasons doubted, answers wanted

I am an English major, President of the Spanish club, a member of Professor Fessler's History of English Literature class, and a hard working, paying member of the student body. In spite of my vast roles on this campus I still do not know why Professor Fessler, an enormously effective and well liked educator, has been dismissed. I will agree that there have been answers given to this very question. However, they have been inconsistent, vague, and insignificant in comparison to the reasons she should remain at Washington College. I have heard that it was a departmental decision to change the position, and this happened to be one in which she could not fulfill. Then the claim was that there was no room for a position in the English department at all because the Science department was growing. Recently the assertion made was that our fine institution just can't afford to keep her on staff. I am not presenting these reasons as right or wrong. I am simply curious as to why students (the soul of the College) could make such an uproar, be given these feeble responses and then be expect to accept it and drop the issue. Frankly, I would like to be treated like the vital part of this community that I know I am. I am the one paying my hard earned money to be educated and so I would like to know why the reason she has been dismissed and whether or not I can expect all the professors I admire and appreciate to be dismissed also with out my voice being heard. I am also curious to know whether or not there are students out there that still feel the way I do.

I appreciate anyone who has taken the time to read this and additionally appreciate anyone who is willing to discuss the matter further.

-Christina Chiarchiaro

Explanation requested

The buzz around campus is that we, the Washington College community, which includes every student, faculty member, and administrator, must do everything to promote the well-being of our almost 213-year-old institution. This is especially true during these tough economic times for the school. To me, Washington College is a special place. I have grown and matured during my past two and a half years here. I have made some very close and special friends. On any given day I can stroll around campus exchanging smiles and hellos with just about everyone I may bump into. However, there still lingers in the air uneasiness concerning the dismissal of Professor Fessler. I feel that I and every other member of the Washington College Community that have so often speak of are being cheated.

I still do not fully understand the logic behind why Professor Fessler was denied contract renewal at Washington College. I have never sat in a Fessler class, but it is hard to understand why such a popular and successful professor would simply be let go. From my understanding, every year her students consistently score the highest on Senior Comps. Her student evaluations are outstanding. We, the college community, have been given a variety of conflicting and inconsistent reasons why tenure was denied. The members of the SGA unanimously passed a resolution last semester supporting Professor Fessler. The faculty followed with a resolution supporting the SGA resolution. Still, the Washington College Community has not been listened to.

The controversy began, as I see it, last semester when the A&T Board denied Professor Fessler contract renewal. Since then, there have been a number of reasons given for this decision. The English Department voted instead to create another position in the American Literature. However, they had just last year eliminated that same position with the release of Professor Wolff. It was then argued that Professor Fessler had not published enough. Several now finished her dissertation. It is my understanding that there exists at Washington College tenured professors that have not finished their doctorate, even within the English Department itself. Furthermore, Professor Fessler has spent this past year working on her dissertation. President Trout, during an SGA meeting last semester said Fessler was denied contract renewal on the grounds that "there has been a dramatic shift from English majors to those in the Natural Sciences." Yet, there are no plans to hire any new professor in any of those departments. Our new President, Dr. Toll, who inherited this mess, stated that there simply isn't enough money to retain Professor Fessler. However, there are possibly six English majors who are thinking about transferring to another institution because of this issue. Roughly speaking, six students paying about $20,000 per year in tuition will cost the school $120,000. I am sure that is considerably less than Professor Fessler's salary!

So, just why was Professor Fessler denied contract renewal? I still can't figure it out. I believe the vote within the English department was two in favor of retaining Fessler, three against. How can the voices of three people deny the voices of another 900 or so members of the Washington College Community. It sounds like an extreme case of the tyranny of the minority! I believe it was one student, Mike McDermott, who said it best, "For most of us (the students), this is the only chance in our lives to complete our education and make something of ourselves." When will the voices of this "Washington College Community" that we so often hear about be listened to, addressed honestly, and respected?

-Mark Reyero, Junior Class President

Reasons doubted, answers wanted

I am an English major, President of the Spanish club, a member of Professor Fessler's History of English Literature class, and a hard working, paying member of the student body. In spite of my vast roles on this campus I still do not know why Professor Fessler, an enormously effective and well liked educator, has been dismissed. I will agree that there have been answers given to this very question. However, they have been inconsistent, vague, and insignificant in comparison to the reasons she should remain at Washington College. I have heard that it was a departmental decision to change the position, and this happened to be one in which she could not fulfill. Then the claim was that there was no room for a position in the English department at all because the Science department was growing. Recently the assertion made was that our fine institution just can't afford to

There will be a Forum for the Task Force on the First-Year Experience and Distribution in the Student Center on Tuesday, February 21 at 6 p.m. All are encouraged to attend.

SGA Report

by William Denton, III

As the 1994-95 SGA Executive Board nears the end of its term, issues such as the annual Birthday Ball and the spring semester budget are coming together well. More trying issues such as the situation involving Professor Fessler continue to fester, but, overall, the new executives should expect to inherit a stable Student Government Association next month.

In the words of President Jamie Baker, the Birthday Ball is "really starting to shape up nicely." Turnout among the senators for setup and teardown has been better than expected (although more help from the student body at large would certainly be appreciated). Baker also encouraged all those who are attending to show up promptly at 9 p.m., when the entertainment will begin. The SGA has added a continental breakfast in the night's fare, which will take place after the ball, from 1 a.m. to 3 a.m.

Funding for three more clubs was apportioned Tuesday. Beta Beta Beta, the Biology Honor Society, was apportioned $360, and its new constitution was also approved. WAC Playgroup was apportioned $650 and the Psychology Club was apportioned $400.

In matters of the "Fessler case," Vice-President Sonja Wilson announced that the SGA plans to implement the 10-step plan of preventative action drawn up by several members of the senate last semester. She met with some members after the senate session to discuss some possible changes to the plan and details of how it should be enacted.

TAFFY, the task force assembled to evaluate the Freshman experience at Washington College, is scheduled to send its members to meet with the senate at next Tuesday's meeting. The first 20 minutes of the meeting are tentatively scheduled to be devoted to discussing the research performed by the task force, which are expected to result in, in the words of SGA Faculty Advisor Dr. Kevin McKillop, "major changes." The distribution system is in a position to undergo changes reducing it from 12 courses to eight. The required freshman English course, Forms of Literature and Composition, may very well be liquidated and replaced with a four-semester, more uniform course. Many of TAFFY's plans are to be left up to the senate's decision, and, according to Dr. McKillop, "student input is definitely necessary."

An SGA "Weekend Activities Survey" was distributed to the senate Tuesday. Senators are responsible for distributing the surveys to their constituents. The questionnaires are designed to help the school suit the desires of the students when planning school-sponsored events. Hopefully, the input gained from the survey will help the SGA plan events which will be attended by more students, thus keeping more people on campus for the weekends.

After being edited for problems of ambiguity, the amendment proposing three more senate seats which was proposed last week came up for a vote on Tuesday. The amendment, which suggested additional seats for the Inter-Fraternity Council, Pan-Hellenic Council, and Resident Assistants, was met with some vocal opposition as well as some sparse support. The consensus seems to be that these extra seats are unnecessary, as the amendment defeated, nine votes to eight. Greeks are already seemingly omnipresent in the SGA - all six on-campus organizations except for Alpha Chi Omega (there is one Alpha Omicron Pi pledge, and Alpha Chi was represented by a senator and a class president last semester) are represented. Six of the seven Executive Board members are Resident Assistants. Ω

The big day approaches:
Final preparations for The Gatsby Gala nearing completion

Kate Meagher

Birthday Ball weekend has arrived at last, and preparations, which began the day after last year's Mardi Gras gala, are still underway. This year's Ball is being planned and executed by students, with four in key roles. The work of Elizabeth Likens, Carey Hargrove, Jamie Baker, and Cary Kelly was instrumental in getting the Ball off the ground.

This year's decorations are again being supplied by Hargrove Inc., and they will reflect the Great Gatsby theme. The Ball will have "the same style and flair" as last year's, according to Director of Student Activities and Campus Recreation Dennis Berry.

"Cain Gym will look nothing like Cain Gym – again," said Berry. "It's going to be great."

Through Likens's hard work and good fortune, Doc Scantlin and his imperial Palms Orchestra have been scheduled to provide the entertainment. Their reputation as an exceedingly entertaining big band orchestra precedes them, and the show should be quite impressive.

"I feel like it's going to be great," said Likens. "There's been a lot of planning and work that's gone into and it's going to be one of the best Balls this school has ever seen."

During the band's first intermission, the Riverside Players will act out a scene from The Great Gatsby.

The Washington College Jazz Band will be playing during dinner, and following the Ball, there will be a free continental breakfast in the Student Center, which will remain open until 3 or 4 a.m.

The students who put the event together have been working on it for a year.

"This is the first year we've gone back to the Birthday Ball being 100% student-run. The administration needs to look at what students can do," said Berry. They've done all the work of making this thing happen."

"I don't think anybody knows how much preparation goes into this," said a weary Hargrove.

The students were working with a close-to-$30,000 budget. The cost almost equals the SGA's entire student life budget. The ticket sales of this year's Ball will go to create a permanent fund for the Birthday Ball.

Hargrove hopes that the Ball remains a gala event in years to come. Until last year, it had been around 10 years since the Ball had been extravagantly planned. Last year began what Hargrove hopes will be a tradition at Washington College.

"We definitely want an event that people will come back to school for," said Hargrove.

Help is needed for set-up and break-down in Cain, "not just because we need the manpower," said Likens, "but we also want students to get involved and feel a part of [the event]." If you wish to help set up Cain Gym, send BlitzMail to Carey Hargrove and enclose the times you are available. Ω

"Elections" from 1

the polls will move to Hodson Hall, outside the dining hall. Seniors are allowed to vote for next year's executives.

After being sworn in at the SGA meeting of March 7, the elected officers will work in tandem with this year's officers until Spring Break, which begins on March 13, in order to train for their new posts. The new executives will take over the operation of the SGA after break.

According to the SGA Constitution, the President (currently James Baker) shall "preside over senate meetings; appoint Senate committees and their chairmen and fill vacancies in those Senate committees with the approval of the Senate; serve as a non-voting member to the Board of Visitors and Governors, at faculty meetings; vote during the Senate proceedings only to break ties; give greeting from the student body at Fall and Spring Convocation", and "oversee cooperation between the Senate, [Student Academic Board], and [Student Conduct Council]."

The Vice-President (currently Sonja Wilson), according to the Constitution, shall "serve as a representative of the Honor Board, as a member of the Alumni Council, as a member of the Academic Council and as a non-voting representative at faculty meetings."

The Constitution states that the Treasurer (currently Elizabeth Likens) "shall handle monetary business of the SGA and report the state of the of the finances at each regular Senate meeting. (S)he will also chair the Organizations Committee."

According to the Constitution, the Secretary (currently Sharla Ponder) "shall call the roll and take minutes of all Senate meetings, prepare a current agenda for each meeting, and read the minutes for Senate approval at the start of each meeting. (S)he shall also handle all SGA correspondence, maintain and make accessible the files, and chair the Publicity Committee."

The Constitution dictates that the Student Life Chair (currently Rob Moran) "... will... coordinate activities between the SGA and Student Affairs Office, especially the Student Activities Office. The Student Life Chairperson will chair the Social Committee, and will work to gain consensus on student activity desires and Student Affairs concerns. The Chairperson will represent these views from the Senate to the Student Activities staff."

The Honor Board Chair (currently Douglas Beckworth), stipulates the Constitution, "will be responsible for all judicial proceedings that relate to the Honor Code. The Honor Board Chair will carry out the responsibilities contained in the Honor Code."

The SGA Constitution, as of fall 1994, makes no provisions for the office of Parliamentarian.

As of right now, petitions are available in the office of Student Affairs. Anyone with an interest of running for any SGA executive position is encouraged to pick up a petition. Questions may be directed to any of the aforementioned current officers, sent to "Student Government Association" over BlitzMail, or voiced by phone to the SGA office at ext. 8500. Ω

Important Dates for Student Government Elections

Wed., Feb. 15	Petitions available in Student Affairs
Tues., Feb. 21	Elm essays due
Wed., Feb. 22	Petitions due to Student Affairs
Fri., Feb. 24	Elm Supplement
Mon., Feb. 27	Speeches, 7 p.m., Student Center
Wed., March 1	Elections

For more information contact the Student Government office at extension 8500.

Gotlieb resigns as V.P. of Finance & Administration after five months

Anita F. Gottlieb, Vice President of Finance and Administration at Washington College, announced today that she has decided to resign from that post, effective May 1, 1995. In a letter to Acting President John Toll, Gottlieb stressed her willingness to "continue to assist the College in any way."

"In the past six months," Gottlieb wrote, "I have become even more aware of the many attributes of the College and of how important it is to the vitality of the county." She also praised her staff and thanked members of the Board who had been particularly supportive. She wrote Dr. Toll that "I know your strong transition leadership combined with the steady hand of Chairman Goldstein, and Dean Schols' wisdom will continue the College's progress until a new President is selected."

Gottlieb joined the Washington College administration in September of 1994. Since then, she has focused her energies on reorganizing the College's finance and personnel offices, making staffing and procedural changes to help ensure the College's continued financial stability.

In accepting Gottlieb's resignation with regret, President Toll wrote, "I want to express my thanks to you for the progress that has been made in financial and administrative operations at Washington College during your tenure." Ω

laundry Park dryCleaning
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

"TAFFY" from 1

from 12 to 10 "might open possibilities for Faculty to develop new courses beyond the core curriculum." Creegan responded, explaining that, while his idea was considered by TAFFY, it was decided that with eight requirements beyond the four main courses, the four distribution categories would be evenly represented, with two courses required for each category. Shivers's concern will be addressed in future meetings of the task force.

There was a question as to how the "rich resources of our regional culture" could apply to certain courses. It was a worry that the Chesapeake Bay was the main resource and that some departments would be unable to offer a course that centered on the Bay. Dean Scholz assured the Faculty that the region includes the cities of Baltimore, Washington, D.C. and Philadelphia. Music classes could take trips to the Kennedy Center and drama courses could go to the Arena Stage.

English Professor Richard Gillin was concerned about the lack of a "common ground," because there will be different methodologies used by different professors. Scholz assured Gillin that professors participating in the program will be share ideas over the summer. He said that TAFFY did not want to dictate the methodology used by the participants.

The fear that in concentrating on the region, W.C. will be a narrow-minded was answered with the argument that in concentrating on the area around the College, students will be engaged by more concrete learning.

"Learning by doing has been around in the Western world for a long time," said Chair of the Education Department Seán O Connor. He said that most students learn inductively and referred to this form of learning as "psychologically seductive."

Chair of the American Studies Department and Professor of English Richard DeProspo, while "not convinced that it will save the College," favored the plan.

"If we don't do this," said DeProspo, "we're going to be asked to do other people's jobs," such as fund-raising and recruiting, referring to Kevin Coveney's request that the Faculty do its best to bring in students.

Chair of the Biology Department Donald Munson showed favor for the proposed program as well, saying that modification can lead to improvement.

"I like the proposal," said Associate Professor of History Emlie Ant. "I'm very excited about the possibility of participating in it."

"I feel that the proposal's being put forth in good faith," said DeProspo. He said that he is "willing to tolerate the imperfections."

"I think this is a good work," said DeProspo. "I think the committee has done good work."

The final proposal goes to the Faculty on March 6 for a vote. Ω

"Convocation" from 1

Commission, and was honored for Outstanding Contribution to Higher Education by the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators.

Immediately following convocation, Cole will take part in the President's Forum, to be held in the Gil Forum. The forum, whose theme is, "Challenging the Role of Higher Education: Challenging Ourselves," will consist of a panel discussion moderated by Acting President John Toll.

The degree honors "a person of unusual scholarship and learning, therefore worthy to receive the highest academic honors." Honorees are nominated, voted on by the Board, and, if approved, invited to be honored at convocation. Also nominated this year were Alistair Cooke, who does not accept honorary degrees; and Katharine Hepburn, whose grandfather was rector of Emmanuel Church in Chestertown. Ω

Report from the Task Force on the First-Year Experience & Distribution

I. Program Proposal

The Task Force on the First-Year Experience and Distribution proposes that starting in the Fall of 1995 all incoming students will have to take four general education courses, two in their first year, the other two in their sophomore year.

These courses are intended to be writing intensive and therefore will replace the present Forms of Literature and Composition courses as a college-wide requirement of the first year as well as the so called asterisk courses in the sophomore year.

In addition, the Task Force proposes that the number of required courses currently described as Distribution Courses be reduced from twelve to eight, two each in Humanities, Social Sciences, Natural Sciences, and Formal Studies. All twelve required courses would then constitute a General Education Requirement: two first-year seminars, two second-year seminars, two courses in Humanities, two courses in Social Science, two courses in Natural Science, two courses in Formal Studies.

Discussions on a possible reorganization of distribution courses or distribution categories are ongoing. The Task Force does not expect to be able to offer a recommendation on this subject during the current academic year.

The Task Force proposes that the four general education courses be thematically structured and suggests a theme with the tentative title: "Connections to an Expanding World." In this theme the assignment students would proceed from a first semester course devoted to the exploration of the rich resources of our regional culture (i.e. the region and culture that allows us to construct an active teaching and learning environment, from the Chesapeake Bay to the urban centers of Baltimore, Washington, and Philadelphia) to a second semester course designed to address issues of diversity and identity in the United States, in turn to be followed by two courses in the sophomore year devoted to the "Global Perspective" (Western and non-Western topics).

II. Rationale

This proposal addresses such needs as: a) increased coherence and progression within the general education requirement; b) a sufficiently distinct shared experience for first-year and sophomore students; c) a curriculum which takes full advantage of Washington College's unique location, history, and tradition; d) an interactive learning experience that helps students form an early bond with faculty and institution; e) creating a successful transition from high school to college life through a systematic teaching of the skills necessary to meet the academic expectations of a competitive liberal arts college.

Particularly issues c) and d) to be addressed in the proposed first semester course designed to explore our immediate region. Far from being provincial in perspective, this course will engage students in experiential learning that follows up on and expands their pre-orientation and orientation activities. It will help them understand and appreciate that their immediate environment provides them with their most direct access to an interconnected world, rather than constituting an obstacle to learning or being irrelevant to their education.

Addressing issue e), the central skills these courses must include are expository writing, the fundamentals of scholarly research (centered on the library and its tools), and the use of the computer as a writing and information gathering device. Instructors in this program will teach and assess exposition (description, analysis, argument, etc.) but may rely on other members of the community (e.g. librarians, members of the computer center) for instruction in research and information technology.

The Task Force strongly feels that the introduction of two sophomore courses in the theme of "Global Perspective" provides balance to the proposed first-year theme. It allows additional departments to become involved in the general education program. Most of all, it assures that students at Washington College are able to view and assess their liberal education against the background and in the context of other traditions, cultures, and traditions, a goal explicitly espoused by our mission statement.

The Task Force recognizes that some of what is proposed here already exists at Washington College in many separate units. It is, therefore, a further intent of the program to weld these new and existing elements into one programatically structured plan that will allow the College to fulfill its mission by pursuing its distinctive educational opportunities.

III. Implementation

The Task Force realizes that the proposed curricular changes would overwhelm the existing system were they to be fully implemented in the Fall of 1995. To proceed with total implementation for the academic year 1995/96, the curriculum would need to offer approximately 16 courses in the Fall and 16 courses in the Spring of 1996. While some courses on our regional environment and culture or on the diversity and identity of American life are already in place and could easily be adjusted to the new first-year theme, many need to be developed, while others need to be substantially redesigned before they can effectively serve in this new role.

It seems unrealistic to expect that a complete roster of 32 theme-related courses could be offered in academic year 1995/96.

At the same time, the implementation of a mere pilot program is troublesome because it would result in much curricular confusion and unavoidable division between the two groups of incoming students, a division which would undermine the whole idea of a more unified first- and second-year experience.

Therefore, the Task Force proposes partial implementation of this program for all incoming students in 1995 and total implementation for the [incoming] class of 1996.

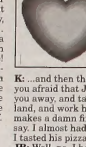
The Task Force suggests the following intermediate step for academic year 1995/96: The College will offer 24 first-year courses in the Fall (eight with a regional theme, eight with the theme of diversity and identity) and the same 16 courses in the spring of 1996. Students who have taken a course within the cluster of regional topics in the Fall will have to choose one course from the cluster on diversity and identity in the Spring, and vice versa.

Admitted students will be sent descriptions of these 16 courses in July. They will be asked to rank their first four choices in order of preference. Because good connections between teaching and advising students are a particularly important part of the first-year experience, the students' teacher in his or her first-semester seminar will serve as adviser for both the first and second year. Should the teacher be unable to accommodate new advisees or should the particular requirements of a student's intended major make such an assignment inadvisable, other connections will be used in making adviser assignments.

The second-year component (to be attempted for the first time in 1996/97) will work on a similar model. The Task Force has not yet discussed in detail the distribution of Western and non-Western courses within the theme of "Global Perspective." Tentative agreement has been reached that sophomore classes could have somewhat larger enrollments.

The Task Force is aware that staffing these new courses will present considerable difficulties for some departments, especially in the beginning stages of implementation. During that period it seems likely that some departments will need additional help in other areas of their curriculum. To smooth the transition, applications for adjunct help will be considered. In the long run, however, it is believed that these general education courses would become not merely additions to the existing departmental or interdepartmental offerings but would reshape the existing curriculum in such a way that permanent adjunct help would become unnecessary.

IV. Funding



The Task Force is fully conscious of the fact that curricular innovation of this magnitude suggests implementation without financial resources. A grant of $25,000 has been awarded by the Clayton Fund with the express stipulation that is be used for the implementation of the Task Force's curricular proposal. In addition, the Task Force has applied for matching funds for this curricular initiative from the NEH Program Office.

Should the second grant application be successful, the implementation of a first year program would be funded tentatively as follows: Professors willing to design a new course or substantially redesign an existing course for this program would be awarded up to $2,450 in faculty enhancement money, to be used for professional development and equipment needs. In addition, it is envisioned that there will be funds available to bring outside experts to campus if this should prove necessary or advisable.

Loyola

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

Robert Pennington
Salon for Hairdressing
Presents...
Sandra & Dana
50% OFF
113 South Cross Street
778-9747

We Get You Romance!

Jeff and Kevin set up Juan with his lucky date, Jennifer Reddish

For those unfaithful fans who missed the last exciting episode of our discount quest, we got a 15% discount at Giardino's, but more importantly, we discovered every girl's fantasy ... Mr. Juan Hernandez. We sponsored a contest to see what lucky W.C. woman would get a taste of Juan's Latin love! Jennifer Reddish was the lucky winner, and we now join the date in progress, with Juan cooking up a fine pizza in the kitchen, and the whole restaurant empty for an intimate date with Jennifer, Juan, Kevin, and Jeff. Isn't it romantic?

Kevin: Do you find it at all strange that a Spanish guy is making pizza in an Italian restaurant?

Jennifer Reddish: No. Well, you know. I like pizza. He likes pizza. We both like pizza.

K: Are you a regular reader of this column?

JR: Well, I saw it once or twice. I was away in London, but when I got a copy of the paper, I saw it. I'm sorry I got your names wrong on the application.

K: That's no excuse!

Jeff: She got the names fine. They were right.

K: What I'm referring to is the fact that you somehow decided to call me "Frank." I'm just kind of wondering, who's "Frank"?

JR: It seemed like that was what your name should be. Your interviews are very frank, so you should be "Frank".

K: Is it some kind of Freudian slip? Is there a "Frank" in your past?

JR: No, no there isn't. I'm sorry.

K: Does Juan have anything to worry about?

JR: What is that supposed to mean?

K: Is "Frank" a jealous boyfriend?

JR: No. "Frank" doesn't exist.

K: What a minute. I thought I was "Frank". I exist.

JR: No, you're Kevin.

Jeff: I'm Frank.

K: Then who am I?

Jeff: You're Kevin.

K: Jeff, you're getting me a little bit confused here.

Jeff: I'm Jeff and Frank. You're Kevin and Hoffman.

K: I guess that's acceptable. Makes sense to me. Did you have any jitters before you came here?

JR: Not jitters exactly, I just wasn't sure what was going to happen, I don't know why I did this. It seemed like a good idea at the time. I don't get out very much, and then...

K: ...and then there was Juan. Are you afraid that Juan might sweep you away, and take you to a foreign land, and work his "magic"? He makes a damn fine pizza, let me just say. I almost had sex with him when I tasted his pizza. That stuff is good.

JR: Well, no. I have my own car. That's fine.

K: Jeff, do you have any questions for her before the pizza arrives, and the real romance begins?

Jeff: Yeah, since we're in an Italian restaurant I just thought I'd ask how you feel about Italy being shaped like a boot?

JR: I always liked that. It was kicking Sicily, which was the football. That's what I learned in fourth-grade geography class.

K: Now, if I were to say: "cow with big titties," what would come to your mind?

JR: Well, I think I read that someone said it looked like the United States, but that doesn't really strike me. I guess I'd think of a dairy farm.

K: Jeff, do you have any questions?

Jeff: Yes, but they're not appropriate for the table, they concern philosophical matters.

K: What do you think will happen when Juan comes out here?

JR: Well, I said he was making pizza, so I assume he'll bring out a pizza.

K: I'm talking about...after the pizza.

JR: Oh, probably a few pleasantries.

K: What about a good-night kiss?

JR: Well, I just met him like five minutes ago.

Juan emerged from the kitchen, hot, sweaty, and ready for love! Kevin asked him about the dinner, amazed by the burning passion for his chosen woman, Jennifer Reddish.

K: How's that pizza going, Juan?

JH: Well, it's cooking now.

K: Is it cooking good?

JH: Well, I think so.

K: Is it getting hot in there?

JH: Oh yeah.

K: Are you getting hot under the collar?

JH: Maybe.

K: Ooh, baby. How long 'til that pizza's ready?

JH: Five minutes.

K: And then you start working your charm?

JH: Maybe. Yes. You guys make me nervous.

K: It's not us making you nervous, Juan. Let's cut to the chase here, Juan. What's it like being a steamboat? What's it like being the man that all the Washington College women want?

JH: It's nice.

K: We went through lots and lots of applicants to select just the right woman for you. Maybe one that might want to work in an Italian restaurant when she got older. Is that correct?

JR: I hadn't really thought about it, but maybe.

K: Do you think a lot of girls are gonna come to get pizza here, just to get a look at you?

JH: I don't think it's just for me. I can give a nice deal on pizza.

K: How do you feel at this point in the date?

JR: Well, he seems very nice.

K: Jeff, what do you think?

Jeff: Did he say he was from Columbia, Maryland?

K: I think he meant the District of Columbia. What kind of discount do we have here?

Jeff: We have a 15% discount.

K: And if enough students come in we get a 20% discount, isn't that right, Juan?

JH: Yes, it is.

K: That should encourage a lot of students to come. Not just for the pizza, but for Juan as well. How about you, what are you here for, Juan or the pizza?

JR: Both.

Jennifer had to turn her eyes from the burning sexuality of Juan Hernandez. Desperate to keep her Catholic girl image alive, she tried to busy herself by making idle conversation with Kevin, who has his very own Native American heritage.

K: I am related to Pocahontas.

JR: You are? This is ground-breaking news.

K: So you're doing a research paper on Pocahontas?

JR: No, it's a feature story on Pocahontas, and her changing image through time. Now if you're related to Pocahontas, then who did she marry?

K: Captain Smith?

JR: No, she married John Rowlf.

K: Well, I'll put it to you this way, who was your great great grandmother married to?

Jeff: Her great great grandfather, of course.

K: Shut up, Jeff.

JR: I couldn't tell you because I don't really know.

K: I just hope it wasn't a member of Juan's family, because then you two would be almost like brother and sister.

JH: My family is really big. I have two brothers and five sisters.

K: Jeff, how big is your family?

Jeff: I have a sister and a dog, and I had 23 fish, but they all died.

K: That's really sad, Jeff.

Jeff: Yes, it is.

But Kevin, with all his boyish charm, couldn't keep her mind off Juan, the pizza-boy dreamboat of her fantasies. She turned her attention to Jeff, and immediately noticed his sportish camel-hair jacket.

JR: Is your jacket camel hair?

Jeff: Yes.

K: Wait a minute, how about the poor camel that died just so you could get that jacket?

Jeff: The camel didn't have to die, it's just naked.

K: Jeff, that's a little bit raunchy. This is a first date.

Jeff: I'm sorry, I really shouldn't talk about naked camels during dinner.

K: Juan, when you finally decide to settle down with just one woman, if that could ever satisfy your throbbing libido, where would you take her on a date?

JH: I don't know.

K: Do you think you might take her out on the town, maybe for a romantic trip to the zoo?

JH: Maybe.

K: You could take her to see the camels!

JH: Yes, maybe.

With this sexy conversation about camels, Kevin and Jeff saw fit to make their exit. They had accomplished their dreams and brought the couple together. The future for this blossoming romance rests on the shoulders of Jennifer and her love-chef, Juan. Ω

We Proudly Serve STARBUCKS COFFEE

Ooh LA LATTE

Take a Stroll down WINE ALLEY

espressos • cappuccinos • lattes mocos • mochaccinos • hazelnuss cafe amore • hot chocolate

baguettes • breads • croissants
pecan rolls • danish • bagels • muffins
focaccia • espresso cheesecake brownies pizzelles • brownies
cookies • tarts

10% discount with student I.D.
Come join us and sip chai at ... Open evenings

the Cellar
coffee bar & bakery

Wine Aurr features over 175 wine selections from around the world!

Featured Vineyard of the Week
DeLoach, Sonoma County

White Zinfandel '94	$6.75
Gewurstraminer E.H. '93	$7.75
Fume Blanc '93	$9.00
Chardonnay '92	$14.00
Cabernet Sauvignon '90	$14.74
Zinfandel '93	$11.50

additional 10% off all case orders

Casual and fun wine tasting by the fireplace
"Bonny Doon Vineyards"
$20 per person - 7 selections from Randall Graham served with light hors d' oeuvres
February 17th at 6:30 - call for reservations

Wines available from $4.99 to $70.00 a bottle
Discounts for case orders.

NOW OPEN DOWNSTAIRS AT THE IMPERIAL HOTEL 778-5600

The Riverside Players are holding open auditions for

I HATE HAMLET!

Directed by: Stephen Fuchs

Auditions will be held on Sunday, Feb. 19, 4 p.m. - 6 p.m. and Monday, Feb. 20, 7 p.m. - 9 p.m. in rooms 9 and 10 of the Gibson Theater, upstairs in the Music Department.

All are welcomed and encouraged to come to try out for this comical farce of Hamlet.

Dan LaRosa: the hypnotist, the comedian ... the MAN

Sarah Bell

"I want you all to close your eyes and extend your arms out in front of you and clasp your hands together. I want you to relax and concentrate. Your arms will become locked in that position," Dan LaRosa explained in a rhythmic voice to the 12 students who volunteered to be hypnotized.

Last Friday night had to have been one of the most amusing and unusual nights that I've had since I've been here at W.C. Although I was not hypnotized, I watched as some of my closest friends were put under by the humorous hypnotist, Dan LaRosa.

Out of the 13 or so who volunteered, only about eight or nine were able to be hypnotized. As LaRosa was putting his magic spell on his eight guinea pigs, he told them that they would not feel embarrassed at anything they were made to do and after they woke up they would feel peppy and energetic. And with that, the show began.

LaRosa began with a beach scene: the sun was beating down, it was hot but they had a cool drink in their hands. Only this wasn't an ordinary drink. It was a bubbly drink that made you laugh. So on LaRosa's cue, the volunteers sipped their drinks and went into a state of hysterics.

Next, he had them go on a fishing trip. But it wasn't fish that they caught but a $100 bill! But, oh no, they dropped it! Volunteer Sue Czechowski leaped out of her chair and scrambled on the ground, frantically searching for the floating money. All those that were put under seemed to grow into all of the roles well, although Carolyn Pass seemed as if she was turning a meat grinder rather than fishing.

I would have to say that one of the funniest moments that evening was when LaRosa had them go back out into the audience and sit next to someone of the opposite gender. Whenever the word "Washington" was said, those who were put under would know that the person beside them had just pinched them and they would quietly tell them to stop. Fortunately my two friends Laurel Harris and Tara McKee sat down near me, so I had a front row seat.

Harris sat next to Josh Lawrence while McKee plopped herself down next to former Washington College student Tim Stultfrus. LaRosa said "Washington" three times and each time McKee and Harris's "Could you please stop that!" became more intense. LaRosa then turned their anger for that person into desire whenever he said the word "LaRosa." Harris batted her eyes at Lawrence and in a shy quiet voice asked, "So, what are you doing tonight?"

Jennifer Dougherty, another volunteer, was a little more aggressive when she asked Tyler McCarthy if he had a girlfriend and when he responded yes, she turned to him and said, "Well too bad for her!"

The volunteers were also made to dance to such toe-tapping tunes as "Walk Like an Egyptian," the Pee-wee Herman Dance and "Hot, Hot, Hot." I felt like I was in the scene from Beetlejuice where they were all sitting at the table eating peacefully until "Day-o" blared through the house, taking over their bodies and forcing them to dance.

The end of the show neared but not without the ecstasy scene. Just like in Dirty Dancing when Jennifer Grey and Patrick Swayze were riding in his car and Grey turns to him and shouts, "You're wild!" I just cringe every time that scene comes on. Anyway, I thought I was going to have to jump up onto the stage and save McKee from being completely mortified. She was on the verge of breaking into a round of "Yes! Yes! Yes!"

After over two hours of amusing the audience, the volunteers were brought out of their trance-like state. But before LaRosa brought them back to the real world, he told them that they would have a fantasy dream about a hacky sack.

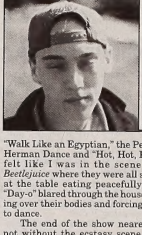
I asked Tara the next morning if she had had a dream about a hacky sack. She hadn't, but her roommate told her that she had been yelling in her sleep. Perhaps she did dream about a hacky sack. One that was continuously pelting her in the head, maybe? Ω

Campus Voices

Question by Phil McQuade

Photos by Kelli Youngblood

This week's question: Are you going to the Birthday Ball? Will be better than last year's?

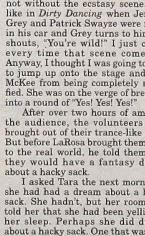


Yes, I am. And I think it will be ten times better because the Riverside Players will be performing.

Steve Fuchs
Senior

Yes, I am going, and I definitely think it will be better.

Rob Moran
Junior



Normally I don't do that kind of thing, but I have to. It should be pretty good.

Sue Czechowski
Senior

Yes, I am. From what I've heard, it will be good, but it will be hard to top last year's.

Keith Morgan
Senior

Yes ... because I'll be there.

Pez Walters
Freshman

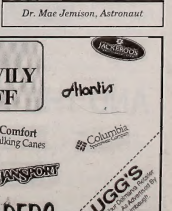
No. Yes, because my roommate's parents will be there grooving it up.

Bill Brady
Freshman

Celebrating Black History Month:

Mae Jemison, African American astronaut

Erica Estep



Mae Jemison was selected as a NASA astronaut in 1987, becoming the first American black woman in space. She made her maiden voyage abroad the space shuttle "Endeavor" in September 1992 as a mission specialist responsible for conducting various experiments during the shuttle mission.

Some of Jemison's accomplishments include receiving her bachelor's degree in chemical engineering from Stanford University in 1979 and earning her medical degree from Cornell University in 1981. In addition, she is an accomplished student of African history and has completed all the degree requirements for African and African American Studies at Stanford.

Jemison, through her extensive travels, speaks Russian, Swahili, and Japanese. From 1983 to 1985, she served as a Peace Corps medical officer in Sierra Leone and Liberia, West Africa. Here she managed the health care delivery system for the Peace Corps and the U.S. Embassy personnel.

For these accomplishments and for Mae Jemison's continuous effort to serve her country she should not only be recognized during Black History Month, but also acknowledged at other times.

Dr. Mae Jemison is an astounding woman, citizen, and an important black figure in American history. Dr. Mae Jemison, we salute you. Ω

Dr. Mae Jemison, Astronaut

Andy's

Friday, February 17
Biscuit (formerly August West)
This is Meg's electric band.
Saturday, February 18
Rockwell Church
Acoustic roots-rock duo highly recommended by John Alagia. We trust him implicitly.
Thursday, February 23
August West
The original acoustic duo. No Cover.

DISCOUNTS INCREASED HEAVILY 15% To 40% OFF

Patagonia
Columbia Sportswear Company
Merrell
Comfort Walking Canes
Old Towne Canoes & Kayaks
Whole Earth Outback Felt Hats
JANSPORT
UGG'S Australian Sheepskin Boots For Men & Women
BAY TO BAY TRADERS

Washington College Writers' Union:

Everything you've ever wanted to know about the WU but were afraid to ask

Marianne Culbertson

I hope to answer a lot of questions concerning the Writers' Union and its purpose on campus through this article. Let me clear up one small misconception right away by saying that YES, we are half freaks, half introverts, and all intelligent beings. Involving oneself in the Writers' Union means a lot more than having to smoke a pack of clove cigarettes a day and wear funky clothes that don't match; it means that we must constantly feed and tend to the creative nature of the group which can be hard at times as there are a hell of a lot of weeds. The inner workings of the Writers' Union, though not secret like a sorority or fraternity ritual, are not widely known. I could probably guess that most of the people involved on this campus have no idea how we organize ourselves. Well, sit in a dark corner and light a candle people because I am going to tell you the SECRETS.

The "officers," as other groups might define the decision making members, are called the JUNTA. The Junta is made up of eight students, two from each year. This year's Junta members are: Marianne Culbertson, Katie Degentesh, Brandon Hopkins, Erika Wilson, Anne Black, Aaron Pierce, Cortney Clulow, and Perry Schatz. We are the members who pull everything together for everyone else and are CONSTANTLY brainstorming for ideas. Right. Last semester was a little slow for us although we did have a really huge Open Reading at which attendance was FANTASTIC. This semester is going to be extremely different from the last few.

The Writers' Union is determined to become a "obvious" group on campus. Not obvious for our TRENDY clothing or funky way, but for our literary prowess. Through our activities we want everyone to find something in poetry or fiction that strikes them on the head (not with a lacrosse stick). The Writers' Union and the Literary House have put together a full calendar of events that everyone on campus should feel free to attend. There are plenty of opportunities for students to stop in and see what we are really about:

Friday, February 17, 9:30 p.m.: Blackbeards Ball (invite only)

Wednesday, February 22, 4 p.m.: Formal Reading

Wednesday, March 1, 9:45 p.m.: Full Moon Reading

The Formal Reading is open to the entire campus and will be held in Norman James Theater. All students, faculty, and staff are invited to approach me about reading their own work or to sneak in and grab a seat. I make the point to everyone that if you show up, you will see why the Writers' Union exists and what we are working towards. The Full Moon Reading is something that we thought of at the beginning of the semester to make our group more unified. Those who want to go may meet us at the Literary House on Wednesday, March 1, at 9:45 p.m. We will then travel to a SECRET destination where we will all light candles and read either our own or someone else's poetry. SPOOKY. There will also be another Open Reading which we hope will have as large of an attendance as the first one.

Lastly I want to do a bit of charity work. The Writers' Union owns a beautiful black and white cat named Edith Wharton who is desperately in need of food and stuffed mice. The best way for the campus to help out is to BUY A LITERARY HOUSE T-SHIRT. They are only $10 and they come in gray, white, and maroon, with a lovely print of the house itself on the front. Please help us out because we need to support our cat. Ω

Help need for set-up and break-down of the Birthday Ball.

Friday, February 17, 10 p.m.
Saturday, February 18, 8 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Sunday, February 19, 8 a.m. - 3 p.m.

Help especially need for break-down.
If you are willing to help, BlitzMail Carey Hargrove with the times you are available and leave your number. He will contact you.

Come out and help get the party going!

Treason at W.C.: A new lit. mag., not a capital crime

"Translation is treason." That's the motto of the new Washington College foreign language magazine called, not surprisingly, Treason.

According to Faculty Adviser Dr. Amy Smiley, however, this magazine strives to "[valorize] the act of treason." Smiley, an Associate Professor of French at the college, seeks to encourage students to "write creatively in foreign languages." Through this magazine, she hopes that students can become "interested and excited by foreign languages."

Dr. Smiley isn't the only individual involved with the project. Two other professors, Professor of Spanish Dr. George Shivers and German Instructor Jefford Vahlbusch make up the other two-thirds of the faculty advising group.

Students are at the core of this magazine, however. Junior Jodie Clark and Sophomore Abby Moss are the student editors of the project. According to Clark, Treason will be published to make "foreign languages more accessible to non-foreign language students."

Clark, who has been studying foreign languages since first grade, is an English major with a minor of study in French. It is her sincere desire to travel abroad some day. "The sooner the better," says Clark.

Moss has studied Spanish since her days in middle school. "The coolest thing about foreign languages is that language is how a person expresses themself," says Moss. "If you can communicate on their level — on their home turf — you get such a different perspective."

The magazine will accept "translations of famous works or student writings from English into a foreign language or vice versa." Nearly any sort of work is acceptable. Submissions so far have come in the form of poetry, critical essays, and short stories.

According to Moss, Treason is a revival of an older campus magazine. It is, in a sense, an experimental endeavor. When asked whether or not there will be any more issues of Treason, Moss said that "we're just going to see how it goes."

Those interested in submitting to Treason can contact any of the individuals above personally, or via Blitz or campus mail. The deadline for submissions is February 19. The editors and advisers expect the magazine to be published later this semester. Ω

There will be a RA tutorial program for ANY interested student. This is NOT a mandatory program for prospective RA's, but it is a great opportunity to learn more about the program. We will introduce you to an interactive computer RA training program. There will also be a question and answer period with current members of the RA staff.

It will be the same program for both nights, so you need not come to both.

Date: February 22 and 23
Time: 6 p.m.
Place: Computer room, third floor, CAC

Questions can be directed to either Jennifer Dougherty or Chris Freisheim through BlitzMail.

We've Made It Easier For The Class Of '95 To Drive The Class Of '95.

THE ALL NEW TOYOTA TERCEL

AND THE TOYOTA COLLEGE GRAD PROGRAM.

There's no better way to enter the work force than behind the wheel of the all-new, always dependable Toyota Tercel.
And it's easy with Toyota's special college graduate program... you get Toyota's premier rate*, no down payment, no payments for 90 days, and a year of free roadside assistance. Just see your participating Toyota dealer for all the details.

WE'RE MAKING IT EASIER FOR COLLEGE GRADS.

*COLLEGE GRADUATE PROGRAM FINANCED THROUGH TOYOTA MOTOR CREDIT CORPORATION'S 60 MONTH PREMIER RATE.  TOTAL FINANCED CANNOT EXCEED MSRP PLUS OPTIONS, TAX AND LICENSE FEES. FINANCING AVAILABLE WITH APPROVED CREDIT THROUGH TOYOTA MOTOR CREDIT CORPORATION. DEFERRED FINANCE CHARGES ACCRUE FROM THE CONTRACT DATE. SEE PARTICIPATING DEALER FOR DETAILS.

TOYOTA
I Love What You Do For Me

Dropped A Whole Degree

Aaron Blake

Pantera: Stronger than all? YES!

Can you stand it? Two heavy metal reviews in a row? Hey, the other Aaron knows what he's getting into when he asks me to write his column for him.

Okay. Pantera. No one knows what happened here. One minute they are a barely-heard-of band that I discussed on the school bus with my other headbanger friends ("Have you heard Pantera? They're, like, so fast!"), and the next they have an album debuting at number one on the Billboard charts. That album is, of course, Far Beyond Driven. With this album, Pantera continues the trend they started when they put out Vulgar Display of Power in 1992. Vulgar Display followed up 1990's Cowboys From Hell by going faster and louder (Cowboys From Hell wasn't a bad album, but it was by no means extraordinary. Vulgar Display of Power was extraordinary. After hearing it, I was convinced that Pantera had reached their peak; after all, where could they go from here? Where they went was into the domain of hard-core, which is where Far Beyond Driven seems to have been spawned from.

What amazes me is the popularity that Pantera has gained. Every once in a while, a band encounters success just by being good, not by kowtowing to MTV and Top 40 radio. Pantera is one of those bands. Who expects popularity from a band with songs like "F—ing Hostile" or "Good Friends and a Bottle of Pills?" It's just one of those things. Kudos go to the people at Eastwest Records America for allowing Pantera to grow as a band and not trying to force them into a mold. Usually when a band becomes as popular as Pantera has as quickly as they have, the record company gets a little too excited and tries to squeeze as much money out of them as possible by making the band conform to their mathematical definitions of what is popular. This, generally, kills the band and any chance that it might have of succeeding as a musical entity. What the producers do not realize is that what attracts people to the band is what they have heard from them, the uniqueness of the band. Attempts to change this generally piss off the fans, who abandon the band altogether. This has not happened here. No record producer in his right mind would have calculated Far Beyond Driven to be the kind of hit that it is.

So why is Pantera so popular? I don't know how to answer that question in a general way. I only know how to say why I like them and why I think they are a good band. So that's what I'll do. Pantera has produced a wonderfully loud, raw, brutal album with Far Beyond Driven. This is an album that begs to be played loud. You can start listening to it at a lower volume, but eventually you will turn it up. "Dimebag" Darrel's guitars are as abrasive and incendiary as ever—even more so. Darrel sticks to a rhythm-heavy feel for most of the songs, trying to create a live feel for the album. The opening song, "Strength Beyond Strength," floored me when I first heard it. It opens the album with a powerful guitar chord that lasts all of about two seconds before Phil Anselmo's voice comes in. Anselmo's voice is more raw than it has ever been, more powerful than the voices of other vocalists. His voice is, to use his own words, "stronger than all." As great as the band is, there are times when nothing in the song matters so much as Phil Anselmo's voice and what he is saying. Take "25 Years" for example. This song is a vicious indictment by Anselmo of his father. There is little more powerful in the world than listening to this hulking, tattooed man accuse his father in such blatant terms as these: "I vent my frustration at you old man, after years your ears will hear." Or "Now you pick up that splintered chair that was aiming for your head. A head that should have been long ago kicked in by me alone." But these lines cannot compete with the most powerful line on the album, one of the strongest I have ever heard: "I'm shoving my life right down your throat. Can I find the guts can I feel the heart. Look at the ground as you choke me up, does it taste like tequila or failure?"

Most of the album continues at a frenetic pace, with every song so good it is hard to pick out highlights, but the one that stands out for me besides "25 Years" is "Hard Lines, Sunken Cheeks." There is also the inexplicable "Good Friends and a Bottle of Pills." I can't even get into what this is about, but it is a very twisted song. Closing out the album is a cover of Black Sabbath's "Planet Caravan." This is a beautiful cover, and totally detached from all the other songs on the album. After Pantera gets you hyped up with all the other songs, they use this one to kind of bring you back down a little.

While Pantera's albums are spectacular, nothing compares with the power and chaos of the live show. Pantera will be playing at the Wicomico Civic Center on Feb. 25. And check out Far Beyond Driven. Ω

HOROSCOPES

Aquarius (1/21-2/18) There is no sense in throwing yourself on a live grenade when there is no one to protect from it. Stop sacrificing yourself just for the sake of sacrifice.
Pisces (2/19-3/20) There is so much life in you trying to get out; get a piercing and let some of it escape.
Aries (3/21-4/19) Fire is festering within your soul for recently it has not been fed by the elements. Act on that which you desire for yourself, not that which people tell you to desire.
Taurus (4/20-5/20) You have finally let yourself move toward a more intimate relationship with someone. Don't hold back now or it will fizzle out quickly.
Gemini (5/21-6/21) Do not be fooled by what you see and hear. What you believe to be your newest focus is merely another fantasy.
Cancer (6/22-7/22) Slow down, words run from your mouth as quickly as snow falls and turns dirty. This is your time to think and feel those things that surround you and through this you will find your way.
Leo (7/23-8/22) Always the beautiful lion is seen tossing his or her mane. Put your hair up or shave it off. You drive people crazy with your egocentric airs.
Virgo (8/23-9/23) So you are connected to the earth; it doesn't mean you can't take the night off to sit next to the moon. High up on her berth you too shall see the earth in a more positive light.
Libra (9/24-10/23) Doing what you think is in your own best interest without regard to the feelings of others may cause problems for you as well.
Scorpio (10/24-11/22) Just because you're a Scorpio doesn't mean you have to own every album by Sting. Leave that for the Capricorns.
Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) "To make an omelet, you have to break a few eggs." But who says you need to make an omelet? Just have some Pop Tarts.
Capricorn 12/22-1/20) Be careful with that diet; when you weigh the same as a duck, you're made out of wood. Then you'll be in trouble, because people will be wanting to burn you left and right, you witch.
BY: EMBER AND SHADE
circling the mulberry bush

Crossword Puzzle

Exclusive to The Elm by Scott Koon

Across
1. An apocalyptic rider.
4. Suitable verb.
9. Satellite navigation system.
12. Tint.
13. Exceptionally angry.
14. Misery.
15. Period.
16. The Treaty of _____ Litvosk.
17. To be, pl.
18. A certain Dravidian language.
19. Less common.
20. Where a speaker of 18 across may be found.
22. Greeting.
26. Oprah's production company.
31. What a cat might say if it were to err.
32. Tied again.

Down
1. To make keen.
2. Invisible surrounder.
3. 500 sheets.
4. The condition of loving books.
5. To screw up.
6. Actress Dunaway.
7. Common contraction.
8. In the manner of a four-sided polyhedron (adv.).
9. Outlandish Antarctic band.
10. To study attentively.
11. A prophet.
21. To execute.
22. British ship preceder.
23. Oft smoked fish.
24. W.C.
33. An edentate mammal of the family Bradypodidae.
35. Male bee or Al Gore.
36. A pungent discharge from a sore or lesion.
37. Kennedy's real assassin fired from the grassy

40. Hebrew alpha.
44. Charged atom.
45. What you get when you take the e out of a certain Mid-east nation.
49. Norma ___.
50. Inter___.
51. Terrestrial mollusk.
52. Female sib.
53. Electric Light Orchestra, acronym.
54. What Ron calls Nancy, when he remembers what he calls her.
55. More than one elevated train.

25. Old Testament dude who let the Sodomites rape his daughters.
27. Troubled commuter plane.
28. River, Sp.
29. The ___ is mightier than the sword.
30. Poetic form.
34. Butthead's favorite two-letter word.
37. Cow pl. archaic
38. X-mas.
39. On top of, prefix.
41. The language of the Irish Celts.
42. Bucket.
43. The last war criminal in Spandau Prison.
46. ___ cone.
47. Dodge ___.
48. Native American radical org.

Notes by Andrea Nolan

All over campus, people are bundled up in coats of every conceivable style, shape, and color. Scarves are wrapped around necks; gloves and mittens are worn in some of the colder classrooms; and the smartest among us have hats pulled over our heads (because as my mother always said, "You lose 95% of your heat through your head"). Yes folks, winter has finally come to Maryland.

I, for one, am glad to have it here. While for many people February is the dreariest month on the calendar – promising nothing but cold weather, the flu, and an unrelenting workload – I look forward to February every year. No, it is not George Washington's birthday that gets me all riled up. Rather, it is the fact that no matter how obscenely mild the winter has been, it is bound to get cold in February.

You thin-blooded people out there may question what is so great about winter. Well, biologically speaking, it is what keeps this temperate ecosystem that we live in ticking. This is no tropical jungle that we live in where everything keeps on pumping along, year after year. Rather, the ecosystem demands dormancy and death to revitalize the soil and balance the food chain.

But, being scholars at a liberal arts college, you already know all about the cycles of life. The question is, do humans really need cold weather? Let's say by some weird mutation of nature (or technology) man did not need the temperate or Arctic zones of life. Everything could be sunny and warm 365 days a year. There would even be a special place where people could go if they wanted to ski, but no one would ever be cold involuntarily. Wouldn't that be wonderful?

I say no! Cold weather makes us think before we go outside; it demands preparedness. Frost-bitten fingers remind us that though we may sit cozily at the top of the food chain, we are not above the elements and forces of nature. We are as much under her control as the squirrels running around on the Cater Walk.

Some people may argue that we are better off because we have heated houses, cars, and warm clothes. But don't tell me that the heat in your dorm room is always working, or that you have hot water for your shower, or that when you stand waiting to cross 213 you aren't shivering in your boots. Personally, I've never seen a squirrel shiver. We need to be uncomfortable, to deal with adversity. It is what keeps life sharp, and when life is sharp, our senses grow keener.

Coldness is good because it isn't selective. You don't have to go out and find it; it finds you. So even if you never get out into the woods hiking, or out on the river boating. Nature still reminds you that she is there, and that you are still a part of her. But don't just wait for the cold to invade your dorm room or history class. Don't cower underneath electric blankets – go out and meet old man winter one-on-one. Do a cold weather jig around the flag pole, kick around an ice ball, run until you feel the air frosting up your lungs. I'm not saying that it will be comfortable, or necessarily even feel good. But you will know one thing for certain – you are alive, and are greeting winter with everything you've got.

Besides, for all you cold wimps out there, even if you can't bring yourself to love the cold air and white snow, one thing can be sure – cold weather always makes spring seem all the sweeter. And, until that spring comes, wear a hat for goodness sake – it's one thing for the weather to be cold, it is another thing altogether if you're too stupid to dress intelligently. Even the Texas and shorts for those balmy 40-degree days we still keep on getting. Ω

Ralph Ellison Memorial Reading at the Literary House

Jen Ward

In memory of Ralph Ellison, a writer most famous for his novel, Invisible Man, a reading was held at the O'Neill Literary House on Monday, February 13. The reading was one of a series of talks known as The Monday Series, held at 4:30 p. m. on certain Mondays this semester at the Lit House.

About 20 people attended to hear Jackie Smith, Wenona Daniel, and Marianne Culbertson read from Ellison's work. All three students were in Professor Beth McCoy's African-American Literature class last semester.

The reading formally began after a revealing discussion of the latest developments on "One Life to Live" and a rather heated debate over "Melrose Place."

Professor Kathy Wagner introduced the work of Ralph Ellison: "Though his publications were few, his novel Invisible Man, published in 1952, is one of the most discussed and praised books published in America since World War II. While it announces no program for the liberation of blacks, it presents in an almost definitive way the moral, political, and psychological considerations involved in the enduring struggle."

Jackie Smith, a sophomore Sociology major and fiction writer, read from the prologue of Invisible Man. Smith later commented, "Invisible Man is my favorite work of Ralph Ellison's because it depicts an accurate account of the black experience in the United States."

Wenona Daniel, a freshman writer and visual artist, read a selection from Ellison's short story, "King of the Bingo Game." "I was very happy to [speak at the reading]. It needed to be done – not only because of Black History Month, but because Ralph Ellison was a great writer and deserves to be honored in that way," she said.

Smith and Daniel joined Marianne Culbertson in reading the final selection, the "call and response sermon" of the prologue of Invisible Man. A senior and a fiction writer, Culbertson clarified the performance. "All three of us pulled together and decided what we'd read. ... It was sort of like a 'Reader's Theater.' It made more of an impact because three of us were [reading] together." She went on to comment: "I was really impressed by the African-American turnout. Although I expected more people to be there."

Ralph Ellison was born in Oklahoma City in 1914. He began studying music at the Tuskegee Institute, but later moved to New York to learn sculpture. His many accomplishments include being the editor of "Negro Quarterly," a part of the Federal Writers' Project, and a member of the Merchant Marines. During his life, he received the National Book Award, the Russwurm Award, the Medal of Freedom, and the Chevalier de l'Ordre des Artes et Lettres from Andre Malraux, minister of cultural affairs in France. In addition, he has also been a teacher at Bard College, Rutgers University, Yale University, and New York University. He died in the spring of last year.

In his prologue for Invisible Man, Ellison discusses Louis Armstrong's question, "What Did I Do to Be So Black and Blue?" He questions why freedom is, and responds, "It's all mixed up. First I think it's one thing, then I think it's another. It gits my head to spinning. I guess now it is not nothing but knowing how to say what I got up in my head." Ω

WICOMICO • CIVIC • CENTER

WICOMICO CIVIC CENTER • WICOMICO CIVIC CENTER • WICOMICO CIVIC CENTER

FAR BEYOND DRIVEN

Wicomico Civic Center
Saturday, February 25 • 8 p.m.
General Admission • $20
Call to charge tickets: 410-548-4911
Tickets on sale at: Shore Music in Seaford, DE; T's Corner in Oak Hall, VA; and the Civic Center Box Office

WICOMICO • CIVIC • CENTER

Washington College

Staff Profile

Sheryl Crow was softly singing about having some fun when I walked into Laura Anthony's office. Anthony is the faculty secretary for 15 professors in the buildings of Dunning and Decker. Fifteen professors, geez!

"It is a lot of work ...a lot of word processing, letters of recommendation, copying and typing. I enjoy [it], though."

Anthony has only worked for Washington College since July. She found out about the job through her best friend, who works in the business office. Anthony lives in College Heights in Chestertown with her four-year-old daughter Sarah.

"My daughter sent me those roses for Valentine's Day," Anthony said, beaming and pointing to a crystal vase that held two beautiful peach roses.

Anthony works out everyday and is a member of the volleyball league.

"Actually, I am on the league with other staff here at Washington College," said Anthony. "It is part of the Kent County Parks and Recreation. It is a lot of fun. I really am a sports fan. I love football and baseball."

Anthony also plans on taking some business classes at Washington College.

"When I graduated from high school, I moved out to Atlanta, Georgia, needed a change from Chestertown, needed to get away for awhile," (We feel your pain, Laura.)

In between working at Washington College, raising her four-year-old and whacking volleyballs, Anthony is also building a house in Worton.

"This is hopefully going to be my dream house. They are putting the roof on today, so I feel that it's moving along pretty well."

Even with her heavy workload, Anthony loves working here.

"The professors are all wonderful and so are the students. I feel that we have the best crew on campus. We are one big family."

BROADSIDES

is now accepting submissions of poems, prose poems, and short stories (up to one page in length) for publication. Submissions should be sent by campus mail, Lit. House mail, Blitzmail, or any other mail to Katie Degentesh. Up to two submissions by any one author may be published in the same semester. SUBMIT NOW.

Sho'women basketball drops two as winter season winds down

Wentworth scores personal best with 28 points

Erika K. Ford

Following a red hot performance in recent weeks, Sho'women basketball struggled in their last two contests, losing both.

The team's overall record is 10-12. In the Centennial Conference, they are 5-8.

Last weekend, the team traveled to Pennsylvania to take on Haverford in a Conference game. Canning 34% of their baskets, Washington lost 73-64.

The Sho'women out-rebounded the Fords, 54-38, but that was not enough to win.

Forward Allison Wentworth (Millersville, MD: Old Mill) had 28 points and 15 rebounds, leading all players in both categories.

Center Eboni Taylor (Germantown, MD: Bullis) had 20 points and grabbed 11 rebounds.

LeeAnn Lezzer (Millersville, MD: Old Mill) and Karen Sieger (Avondale, PA: Kennett) each added six points to the scoreboard. Sieger also had 13 rebounds, a personal best.

Hilary Rainey (Chadds Ford, PA: Ursuline Academy) and Kristen Snell (Cherry Hill, NJ: Cherry Hill East) each scored a basket for the Sho'women.

Last Thursday, Washington hosted Western Maryland in another Conference game in which the Sho'women lost 60-50.

Snell led the team in scoring with 12 points. Taylor had 11, while Sieger was right behind her with 10.

Taylor and Wentworth each had 10 rebounds for the Sho'women. The team shot 50% from the free-throw line, and was 21 for 52 from the floor.

On Wednesday night Washington's Cain Gym hosted Swarthmore.

Tomorrow the team travels to play Bryn Mawr in the last scheduled game of the season. Depending on the outcome of these two Conference matches, the Sho'women may advance to Centennial playoffs. Ω

Tennis starts with victory over U. Penn

Paulina Sierra

Last Sunday, the Sho'men achieved another victory against a Division I school, this time the University of Pennsylvania. The match started with three doubles, with the team winning two-out-of-three receiving one point. The six singles were played at the end, each worth one point.

In doubles, both teams played aggressively and in the end the University of Pennsylvania won the point by defeating W.C. at number two and number three doubles. Miro Beran and Damian Polla attacked the weaknesses of their opponents and coupled that with playing smart. They won in the tie-breaker. Buba Soysa and Mike Kember played well at number two doubles, but in the last moment the opponent imposed his game and the Sho'men could not reach in time, losing in tie-breaker by a difference of 8-9 (2). The third doubles were played by Andrew Moffat and Andrew King. Moffat saved unbelievable balls both from the baseline and the net. Although Moffat did not win doubles, he saved the Sho'men in the last moment during singles.

In singles Polla fought hard. He got to seemingly unreachable balls and won his singles match. He started the game attacking the net and finishing from the baseline.

Beran looked for opportunities playing with the cross-court strategy. He used his solid strokes, forcing the opponent to miss the majority of balls.

Soysa played with much consistency and focus on the court. He attacked key places of the court, giving his opponent a hard time.

Kember started the match well, but not with enough concentration. He could not come back in the third set.

King played smart and took all the chances he could and won some games. Despite the loss of the set, he did a great job against a very difficult opponent.

Moffat saved the team in a key match at number six singles. He was the key player to give the first success to the team. This season the team is not as deep as last year, but still should be in good position to defend their title. Ω

Haverford kills Sho'men's Conference dreams

Peggy Busker

The chance for Conference playoffs slipped out of the Sho'men's hands as they hosted Haverford this week.

The crowd turnout was encouraging for the Sho'men with 200 eager fans hoping to see Washington go to Conference Championships, and it showed as Jerry Davis took the tip-off and got the ball for the Sho'men. Ben Harris took the ball down-court and passed it to Davis, who made the easy lay-up to put the Sho'men on the board first.

Haverford responded quickly, with their big men (two forwards measuring in at 6'8") inside. Washington made some early rebounds and inside shots to keep up with the Fords.

The W.C. Sho'men showed real hustle early on as they fought for every possession and took quality shots, including the crowd-pleasing three-pointer.

Freshman Matt King took advantage of several opportunities and had several steals that resulted in Sho'men points. Adam Poe, among others, really worked the inside well to sink many jumpers from just outside the paint.

Jerry Davis had back-to-back steals including one which resulted in a three-pointer by Ben Harris with eight seconds left on the shot clock. Washington thus gained the lead. It was a narrow one, but a lead nonetheless.

Freshman Bradd Burkhart proved to be tough both defensively and offensively as he forced bad passes by Haverford and made his own shots on the other end of the court.

Edmund Hicks managed to shut down the height of Haverford with some key defensive rebounds. Mark Awantang put himself in good rebounding position and tallied rebounds for Washington.

Washington was playing as a team and it was paying off. Ben Harris drew his offense foul and then looked at the crowd from his position on the floor. It was this intensity that kept the Sho'men ahead.

With under two minutes remaining in the first half, the Sho'men broke down somewhat and the Fords took a small lead. A missed three-pointer by Adam Poe at the buzzer put the score at 41-38, Haverford.

The second half opened up with four unanswered points by Haverford. After the Washington time-out, Ben Harris made another three-pointer to decrease the Haverford lead to one. Haverford responded with a three-pointer. The Sho'men seemed to be slipping again, but tough defense by Burkhart and Poe put Washington back in the game. Burkhart made a three-pointer off an assist from Poe. Derek Cuff contributed on defense by keeping the Fords off the ball.

From an Awantang rebound, Poe made a three-pointer, followed by a lay-up by Hicks and four points by Awantang to cut Haverford's lead to seven.

Two free throws by Burkhart put The Sho'men ahead for the first time in the second half, 61-60.

Washington attempted to hold on to their small lead but Haverford began sinking more of their shots and W.C. seemed tired, as the Fords retook the lead and increased it. Washington had some good attempts at recapturing the lead, but Haverford kept playing with intensity and good shot selection.

Washington played hard, with Cuff, Harris, and Davis all making great plays and stirring up Washington.

With under four minutes left, Washington was down by five, 76-71. Haverford kept possession and the lead. As the clock wound down, Washington tried to get the ball back, but Haverford only increased their lead. As the foul line, while Washington missed shots.

Haverford won with a final score of 91-78.

Ben Harris sunk 30 points, his second highest total this season, and was nine for nine from the free-throw line. Bradd Burkhart and Jerry Davis each had 11 points. Harris and Davis had the most rebounds with five each. King had a personal best of three assists.

Washington shot only 40% from inside and 31% from the three-point line. The Sho'men did look better from the foul line with 74% shooting.

Haverford scored more points than any other team all season against Washington with 91.

The Sho'men played hard but in the end could not pull off the win. They forfeit their position in the playoffs to Haverford, and set their sights on next season. Ω

POW

This week's Player of the Week is Peter Ward, super Sho'men swimmer. Pete's going into this weekend's Centennial Conference Swim Championships hoping to actually top last year's performance. Setting seven records in the '93-'94 'ships, the junior history major who calls Riverside, CT home will be one to bank on as the season winds down. He frequently swims medley and free relays with the gang, while swimming IM and the backstroke solo.

Honorable mention's got to go to the ice hockey goalie, who had an awesome time in the net on Tuesday night. Andy Lopatin did a darn fine job as he blocked 67 shots with his trusty stick.

SKI
INTERCOLLEGIATE SKI WEEKS '95
Then it gets one!
PARTY IN THE SUN & SNOW!
ONLY
$209
MT. ORFORD QUEBEC, CANADA
(JUST ACROSS THE VERMONT BORDER)
SPRINGBREAK '95
Sponsors include: Bonjour! Quebec
Labatt's & Molson
5 NIGHTS LODGING, LUXURY CONDO
* FULLY EQUIPPED KITCHEN, FIREPLACE ETC.
5 DAY SKI & SNOW BOARD LIFT TICKET
* 40 SLOPES, 2 MOUNTAINS FOR ALL LEVELS
* 1000 FOOT VERTICAL DROP
5 DAYS & NIGHTS OF INTERCOLLEGIATE PARTIES, CONTESTS & ACTIVITIES.
* NOTE: THE LEGAL AGE TO CONSUME ALCOHOL IS 18
* GROUP LEADER DISCOUNTS
* FRATERNITY & SORORITY REPS NEEDED
1-800-999-SKI-9

Humphrey's Point Farm

on scenic Swan Creek near Rock Hall offers a full care event horse facility with a private atmosphere. We have two stalls available at reasonable rates. Also 7th event horses for lease and for sale. Instruction, trailering.

639-2832

Student Athlete Mentors hit W.C.

The SAMs (Student Athlete Mentors) program is designed to "create a safer and more positive environment that reduces social hazards for student athletes" (SAM handbook). SAMs serve as resources for fellow teammates and other student-athletes. The SAMs have been trained in a variety of areas: conflict resolution, intervention techniques, and various health issues are just a few of the topics and techniques covered. The SAMs sponsor a variety of programs on campus; from individual teams to all-campus programs. SAMs seek to heighten awareness and educate on matters of social hazards through these programs. For example, an alcohol awareness program was opened to the entire campus last fall. Other examples include a study skills workshop sponsored by the women's field hockey SAMs, and a program on self-defense sponsored by the volleyball SAMs. The role and usefulness of the SAM, however, is ultimately determined by the team he or she serves. A bulletin board to promote further understanding of the program is in the making. The SAMs bulletin board will be posted outside of the training room; a listing of all current SAMs and further details will be provided there.

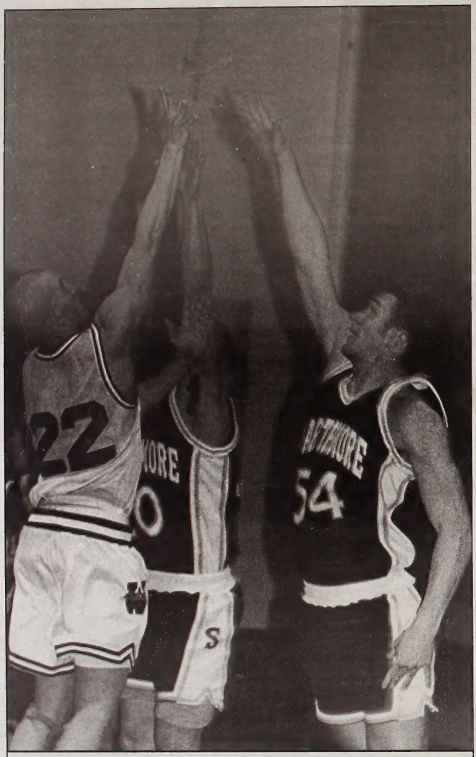

Photo by Josh Lawrence

Two Swarthmore players try to high-five Ben Harris for pulling off an 82 - 76 W.C. win.

Scores

Men's Basketball

Washington 78
Haverford 91

Washington 82
Swarthmore 76

Women's Basketball

Washington 50
Western MD 60

Washington 55
Haverford 43

Washington 55
Swarthmore 41

Men's Swimming

Washington 94
Swarthmore 111

Women's Swimming

Washington 94
Swarthmore 111

Club Ice Hockey

Washington 2
Dickinson 8

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Friday February 17
Men's Basketball vs. Franklin & Marshall
7:30 p.m.

February 17-19
Swimming Centennial Championships at Swarthmore

February 22 and 25
Men's Basketball Centennial Conference Playoffs

The Washington College
ELM
Volume 66, Number Eighteen
Serving the College Community Since 1930

Dr. Audrey Fessler
See related story on page 3.

Board authorizes Daly Hall project

Administration authorized to revise design to fit budget constraints

Rachael Fink

This past weekend was swamped with activity. George Washington's birthday is the occasion for most at Washington College to attend some form of celebration. Black Heart's Ball, the Great Gatsby Gala, and Convocation all celebrate this occasion in one way or another. This weekend is not about celebration alone, however. Quite a bit of important business is also taken care of amidst all the parties and party preparations. The Board of Visitors and Governors met this weekend for their regularly scheduled spring meeting.

In addition to the myriad committee meetings, the full Board met Saturday morning to take care of their business. Among the issues dealt with at this Board meeting were the plans for Daly Hall, the annual budget, and student life improvement.

After the usual call to order and approval of the minutes of the last meeting, Board Chairman Louis Goldstein addressed the Board. During his remarks he thanked Acting President Dr. John Toll for his contributions to the College.

Toll then took the floor and expressed the hope that the "steps we (the Board members) take at this meeting will move us ahead rigorously." He went on to outline his priorities for action during his brief stay at Washington College. Toll stated that his top priority is to balance the budget and he outlined a plan for doing so. Cutting expenditures and increasing annual fund contributions are on the top of his list. As of Saturday, the level of giving to the annual fund is up 50 percent over this time last year. If this level of giving continues, Toll indicated that reaching the 2 million dollar goal would be possible.

Second on Toll's list of priorities is the recruitment of students for the incoming freshman class. According to Toll, the Admissions office has received anywhere from five to ten percent more applications so far this year than last year at this time. Toll also stressed the recruitment of part-time and non-traditional students.

Following this, Toll made several comments concerning the planning and construction of Daly Hall. Toll has been very active in revising the plans for the construction of the hall which will primarily house classroom space. He commented that with minor downscaling Daly Hall could be constructed "within the funds available," and that this plan of action as been endorsed by the Dalys.

Shortly following Toll's address to the Board, the various committees made their reports. Reporting for the Academic Affairs Committee was Chair Lawrence Wescott. In addition to announcing the establishment of a minor in computing science and a major in modern language studies, Wescott announced the Committee's nominations for department chairs:

See "Board" on 3

W.C. celebrates Washington's Birthday with an address by Dr. Johnnetta B. Cole

Kate Meagher

On February 18, Washington College celebrated the birthday of George Washington in the usual style, with a special convocation, this time honoring Dr. Johnnetta B. Cole for her achievements, and announcing the election of 24 students to Omicron Delta Kappa, National Leadership Honor Society. Cole is the first African-American woman to be president of Spelman College. She gave an address entitled, "In Becoming the Others Keeper."

Acting President John Toll presided over his first and possibly last convocation. In his opening comments, Toll described the values of George Washington to include "integrity, loyalty, courage, tolerance, service to others, and a devotion to democracy and learning."

"Today we re-commit ourselves to the goals George Washington set," said Toll. "We reaffirm our intention to maintain this college in his image."

Chair of the Board of Visitors and Governors Louis Goldstein also extolled the virtues of the first president of the United States, adding that Washington College is the only institution of higher learning which bears his name with his blessing.

Goldstein said that while Washington had finished only seven or eight years of school, he was "one of America's greatest educators through deeds." He named the goal of Washington College: "To enlighten and to educate." His speech ended in typical Goldstein fashion with, "May God love and bless you all real good."

The next speaker was Jamie Baker, president of the Student Government Association. Toll introduced him by praising the student body as "the best thing about Washington College." He mentioned the recently student-revised Honor Code which "supports the values inspired by George Washington."

Baker began his address with a Birthday Ball update. The four main organizers (Baker, Elizabeth Likens, Carey Hargrove, and Cary Kelly) had been up all night (after months of preparation) putting the finishing touches on Cain Gym. Baker described the Birthday Ball as "a cele-

See "Convocation" on 4

Cole sits on panel with Toll, O Connor, and Sherbondy to discuss role of higher education

Kate Meagher

Following Saturday's Washington's Birthday Convocation, Dr. Johnnetta B. Cole joined Acting President Dr. John Toll, Chair of the Department of Education Dr. Seán O Connor, and Associate Professor of Anthropology Dr. Jeanette Sherbondy in forming a panel at the President's Forum, with the theme 'Challenging the Role of Higher Education: Challenging Ourselves."

Toll opened the discussion by saying that in her speech at Convocation, Dr. Cole had presented "a tremendous challenge, with lots of implications for higher education." Toll asked Cole what she believed to be the most important challenges.

Cole presented two main challenges. The first is the maintenance of the system's strengths along with the solution of problems such as access and cost.

The second challenge is to establish the goals of higher education. Some say that "the role of American higher education is indeed to help our people to fundamentally understand the world," said Cole. Others believe "the role of higher education is to make the world better, to address basic problems in American society." Cole believes that it is the responsibility of higher education to do both of the above.

O Connor was asked what the relationship should be between higher education and public education. O Connor said that it has been found that teachers who come out of college "teach as they have been taught." It is the responsibility of university professors to teach by example. His challenges included raising the standards in the schools through education of teachers while they are in college. He advocated removing the barrier between K-12 education and the University.

There was a question referring to O Connor's comments. Louis Goldstein asked why today it seemed the job of the schools to teach against bigotry when he learned to treat others equally at home. He also questioned a comment made by O Connor

See "Forum" on 4

Inside This Week's Elm

SGA Supplement
Candidates state their positions on the issues. 7

Candidate analysis
Scott Koon weighs the pros and cons of SGA candidates. 10

Movie review
Chris Watkins gives seven Arnies to Highlander III. 11

We Get You Discounts!
Kevin and Jeff bust out, gettin' all funky with that discount thang! 12

Decisions, decisions

With the Student Government Association elections quickly approaching I am torn between my natural tendency to express my opinions and my duty as a journalist to remain objective. I can't endorse any candidate for any of the positions, but at the same time I want to make sure that it is crystal clear that there are simply some people who should and others who should not be elected to represent the student body. My only recourse is to urge every voting member of the student body to think carefully about all of the issues and what is at stake.

What is at stake is the reputation of the student body as a whole, as well as the progress that has been made toward empowering the student body. Over the past several years, the student body has become more and more active in all areas of campus life and politics. Students are becoming active in planning curricular changes, social changes and staffing changes. The student body has begun to express a real interest in what happens at Washington College as well as a desire to be a part of the changes that must occur to ensure the future of the institution.

This trend should not be broken. If the Student Government Association becomes inactive or inept at maintaining the momentum that has built up then much ground will be lost and the student body of future years will have to struggle as we have to regain a strong position.

The student body is the heart of any educational institution. If the student body is unable or unwilling to take responsibility for its action or non-action, then the institution is in worse shape than the Tin Man; at least he got a heart-shaped watch. The Tin Man was given a heart-shaped watch to show that he really did have a heart. Washington College is not going to get a watch, or anything else to convince us that we do have a heart. Instead, we have to convince ourselves.

If the student body is the heart of the College, then the SGA is the heart of the student body. It is the only body that can claim to represent the entire student body. Just as the heart must beat strongly and consistently, the SGA must be strong and consistent in its efforts to assure that students retain their ability to affect College policy.

As students, each of us has an obligation to examine each of the candidates and their positions on the issues that effect the ability, attitude and position of the SGA. We have an obligation to elect the best possible combination of people as our representatives. We have an obligation to realize that we do have a heart and that our heart is important to the whole body.

With that said, these are the issues as I see them: fiscal responsibility is very important at a time when institutions nationwide are struggling to balance their budgets; student life is, quite obviously, of major importance; participation in every area of change, including the search for a new president and the curricular changes, is a must; and, of course, the ever present but wholly intangible, willingness to tackle the "controversial" issues that arise as the year progresses.

The elections are not (or at least, should not be) about popularity. They are not about "brothers" or "sisters" or even friends. They are about responsibility, dedication and drive. They are about who we want to be as a body of students and who we want to lead us into the years of change to come.

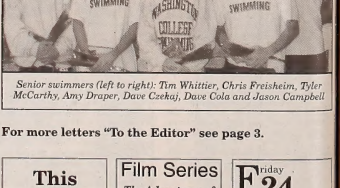
To echo the words of current SGA President Jamie Baker, vote, and vote thoughtfully.

To the Editor:

W.C. Swimming - Keep the Tradition

This is a letter to recognize a group of individuals on campus who do not always get the recognition they deserve. This is not a complaint, but an expression of appreciation to let the students of Washington College know what W.C. Swimming is about, and to thank the team members for being a part of it. As many of you may know, the men's and women's swim teams returned Sunday night from a grueling three day championship meet. Of all the teams at the conference meet, Washington swimmers swam out of their minds. Our teams performed the best, exceeding the expectations of coaches, swimmers, and parents. Despite not being crowned conference champions, we were victorious in our own way. While swimmers from other colleges were dropping their times by a couple of seconds, we were dropping five to fifteen seconds in our events. Great job and congratulations to all.

Washington Swimming is something special to us. To all of you teammates, there was no greater feeling of pride, joy and excitement as we crushed the competition in the final event of the meet. To see a third of the fans and parents in attendance cheering and supporting us, was amazing and exhilarating. The roar of WE ARE- WASHINGTON will never be forgotten. The support every member of the team gives to each other, despite our differences and personalities, is what makes swimming as fun as it can be. Sure we don't always enjoy the practices and discipline we follow throughout the season, but it gives us a tremendous return for our effort.



And above all else, our coaches deserve more credit than we could ever give to them in person. Kim Lessard and Jen Green, and Eric Norman the years before, support us in every way possible. We are on big family, not always happy, but no family ever is always happy, and they are at the head. We sincerely hope that the coaches know how much we appreciate their hard work and effort that is put forward for our benefit.

The seniors who came in four years ago have built an awesome program that each successive class has strengthened upon its arrival. The swim team was created with our hearts. We will never forget the times we've spent together, the joys, the sorrow, and all of the emotions. Yes we will miss swimming, the competition and the intensity, but it is the Washington Swim Team that we will miss above all else.

In the words of Joshua Lawrence Chamberlain, a Civil War General, "... true greatness is not in nor of the single self; it is of that larger personality, that shared life with others, in which, each giving of his best for their betterment, we are greater than ourselves; and self-surrender for the sake of that great belonging, is the true nobility." That is W.C. Swimming.

Keep the tradition!!

-Chris Freisheim and Dave Cola, Co-Captains

Senior swimmers (left to right): Tim Whittier, Chris Freisheim, Tyler McCarthy, Amy Draper, Dave Czekaj, Dave Cola and Jason Campbell

For more letters "To the Editor" see page 3.

Get active! Get involved! Edit the paper!

Applications are now being accepted for the positions of editors of both The Elm and The Pegasus. Those students interested in the positions should send a letter of application to Dr. Richard Striner, Chair of the Board of Publications, via campus mail. The deadline for application is Friday, March 31. Interviews will be conducted on Wednesday, April 12. For more information contact the offices of The Elm (x. 8585) or The Pegasus (x. 8584). Any interested student is encouraged to apply.

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink
News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Co-Editor
Mindie J. Kaplan and Sarah Bell
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Erika Ford

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Joshua T. Lawrence, IV
Office Manager
Scott Ross Koon
Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and crud do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall,sent through campus mail or entered over BlitzMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8585.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

This Week on Campus

Feb. 24 - March 2

Film Series
The Adventures of Priscilla Queen of the Desert
Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.

Friday 24
Death and the Maiden
8 p.m. Tawes Theatre

Saturday 25
Death and the Maiden
8 p.m. Tawes Theatre

Sunday 26

Monday 27
SGA Executive Board Candidate Speeches
7 p.m., Student Center

Tuesday 28
Mary Ann Caws speaks on "Reading Women, Writing Women" at 2:30 in Sophie Kerr room.

Wednesday 1
SGA Elections
Don't forget to vote!

Thursday 2

Thinking through ...

the Chechenya crisis.

by Paul Briggs

Anyone who has been following the events from Chechenya over the last month or so must have a sense of déjà vu. A tiny, backwater portion of the Russian Federation has been trying to break away and form an independent nation. The Russian military has largely succeeded in overwhelming it, despite numerous blunders and setbacks, including the refusal of one entire battalion to participate at all. Nonetheless, the danger of a protracted guerrilla war in the area still remains.

No one in Washington seems sure of how to respond to this. As the most ideologically inclined politicians in Moscow, Yeltsin is generally regarded as being too important to U.S. interests for anyone to risk damaging him politically or driving him away. Moreover, if Chechenya does win its independence, there are other regions within the Russian Federation and other former Soviet republics which may want to secede. The result could be the complete collapse of Russia. As a result, criticisms of Yeltsin but for the most part been muted. Nonetheless, there is also concern that Yeltsin may be harming his own interests in this area. Over the past few years, nobody really wants to see popular movements put down by military force.

Five years ago, similar events were taking place in the Baltics. At that time places like Lithuania and Estonia were demanding the right to secede from the Soviet Union. Gorbachev, although a sincere reformer, was then unwilling to preside over the dissolution of his society. At first, his reaction was to use force against breakaway republics. At that time, the Bush administration was reluctant to criticize Gorbachev too strongly, because, as the first real hope for Russian democracy since the Kerensky government, he was seen as too valuable. Moreover, in those days there was serious question as to whether the breakup of the Soviet Union would be a good thing. When a January 1990 uprising in Baku ended in a bloody anti-Armenian pogrom, the Soviet crackdown that followed was fully supported by the White House.

To understand the conflict today, it is important to remember that Russian imperialism did not begin with the Russian Revolution. In fact, people in the United States for the most part did not even begin speaking of the Soviet Union as an "empire" until it was in the last stages of its collapse. Long before the Revolution, centuries of expansion into Siberia, central Asia and the Caucasus had swelled the czarist state - once confined to Moscow and its environs - to a gigantic size and placed it in charge of hundreds of subject peoples. It was on this shaky foundation that the Bolsheviks built their "union".

It is beyond the scope of this column to analyze how one area became a "Soviet Socialist Republic" and another area was designated a "kray", "oblast" or "Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic." To Americans, these distinctions may seem specious - after all, whatever one chose to call those areas, they were all under the same iron heel. And indeed, these were largely bureaucratic inventions, intended to give an appearance of (for want of a better term) "multicultural" respectability to a totalitarian state. The fact remains, however, that in the breakup of the Soviet Union it was only the "SSRs" that became independent nations.

By far the largest of these was the Russian Federation. Although predominantly Russian in population, it is also the heir to the old empire, with numerous pockets of ethnic minorities. There are about a dozen of these in the Caucasus alone. Many of them, like the Chechens, have been oppressed by Moscow for centuries. Just to complicate things further, there are also populations of Russians outside of Russia. One of these is in tiny Moldova, in the even tinier Dnestr River region - which, the last time anybody checked, was still trying to form a separate republic. Substantial numbers of Russians live in Ukraine, particularly in the Crimea, which was originally part of Russia but was given to Ukraine by Khrushchev. There is also a large Russian population in Kazakhstan. Russian nationalists like the infamous Vladimir Zhirinovsky have expressed the desire to re-annex parts of the "near abroad" that have large numbers of Russians living there.

The situation Yeltsin faces today does seem analogous to the one Gorbachev faced several years ago, and may even play out the same way. We cannot know. Perhaps it would be for the best, therefore, if the United States plays the same role now as it did then - that is, none at all. We have long since learned that something that may appear to the outside world to be a stable and solid nation-state may in fact be an artificially imposed empire. However, that does not mean that we can treat it as such. Ω

To the Editor:

Thanks for the help

I would like to thank the many people who helped us with the Birthday Ball this past weekend. Because we were working the event with a tight budget, we had one major goal: to save money and be able to pull it all off. That resource is the student body; we needed help, asked the student body for help with the set-up and clean- up, students responded thoroughly for us. I would like to publicly thank my fellow planners, Liz Likens, Carey Hargrove and Cary Kelly for all of their hard work and dedication. So many people came to help out that I can't list you all here, but I want to extend to you my sincere gratitude and appreciation. There were a number of identifiable groups that were noticeable in their efforts to assist us with the Gala: the Riverside Players, the Dance Club, the SGA senate, members of the freshman class, and the members of Phi Sigma. In addition to these students I would also like to thank Anthony's Flowers and Timothy and Jane Kelly, parents of Cary Kelly. Everyone's efforts to assist us made Saturday night the success that we had hoped it would be. We could not have done it without you. Thank you.

We have video tape of most of the set-up process, and we are beginning the process of editing and compiling it. We hope to have the tape on display so that everyone can see the hard work that went into the evening.

-James M. Baker, SGA President

Fessler successfully defends dissertation, receives Ph.D.

Kate Meagher

A member of the Washington College Faculty has received the title of Doctor of Philosophy in English Literature from the University of Michigan. Assistant Professor of English Audrey Fessler on Friday successfully defended her doctoral dissertation, entitled "Intellectuality and Female Sexuality in the Novels of Charlotte Yonge."

Yonge was an enormously wellselling popular Victorian novelist, but has not received much critical attention since then. She wrote 200 novels, as well as A History of Christian names, which came close to 2,000 pages in length. John Ruskin said of History, "It is the only work written by a woman that I ever wished I myself had authored."

Yonge was religiously conservative. She was involved in the High Church Oxford Movement, which she promoted in her fiction.

"She adopts from the Oxford Movement patristic ideals a notion of patriarchal domestic organization," said Fessler.

Yonge's critics in the past have considered her "a representative of arch-conservative thought," said Fessler. But Dr. Fessler found that Yonge, "in depicting intellectual women, had a difficult time promoting domestic patriarchy."

Yonge attempted to promote the Oxford Movement, until in the 1870s when "she abandons that model of domestic organization."

In her dissertation, Fessler said, she also shows "how Yonge's stances on issues of women's intellectual freedom and intellectual self-development changes, it seems in response to changes in women's education ... and in response to medical theories of the day."

Fessler has received an inquiry from an academic press regarding the possibility of publishing her dissertation, and another academic press has asked her to edit a new edition of one of Yonge's novels."

Fessler's 250 page dissertation was accepted by the University of Michigan without any revisions. For a dissertation to be accepted by the University of Michigan with no revisions is rare, and as far as Fessler knows, unprecedented. Ω

Gottlieb resigns but continues to support W.C.

I am resigning as Vice President for Finance and Administration of Washington College for both personal and other reasons.

I believe I have been a catalyst for positive change during my time here and I intend to make the remainder of my tenure with the College as productive. I have enjoyed working with each of the directors who report to me. The people here are bright and hard working and have a real concern for Washington College. I am proud of the qualifications of the new staff I have hired. They are quickly becoming real assets to the College.

Wes and I will continue to live in Rock Hall and we intend to retire in Kent County. We have made new friends here whom we treasure. A number of Board members have been particularly supportive of me and I very much appreciate that support.

I remain a staunch supporter of Washington College. In the past six months I have become even more aware of the many attributes of the College and of how important it is to the vitality of the County. I want to continue to assist the College in any way I can and I will be happy to work with my successor in phasing into the job. I know your strong transition leadership, combined with the steady hand of Chairman Goldstein and Dean Scholz's wisdom, will continue the College's progress until a new President is selected. I look forward to joining in the celebration of that inauguration and in many future milestones in the life of the College.

Sincerely,
Anita F. Gottlieb

LOYOLA

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

"Board" from 1

Drama, Associate Professor Dale Daigle; English, Dr. Richard Gillian; Music, Dr. Amzie Parcell; Modern Languages, Dr. George Shivers; Chemistry, Dr. Rosette Roat; Sociology, Dr. Steven Cades; Mathematics, Dr. Albert Briggs, Jr.

The Board unanimously approved the Committee's recommendations for each of the three-year departmental chairmanships. Wescott also indicated that the Committee was very enthusiastic about the work being done by the Task for on First Year Experience and Distribution.

During the report of the Buildings and Grounds Committee, chaired by Christian Havermeyer, a resolution to "move as ahead as swiftly as feasible" with the plans to scale down and construct Daly Hall. This resolution was passed by the Board.

The report by the Admissions and Financial Aid Committee included some interesting statistics concerning the current application pool for the incoming freshman class. Currently there are 30 percent more applicants expressing an interest in English majors as compared to this time last year. Mark Schulman, Chair of the Committee, also reported an increased number of international applicants as well as applicants from New Jersey. The Committee also reported a need for more staff in the Financial Aid Office, noting that Director Jean Narcum is the only full time staff member in that office. Ω

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

Much of the Student Government Association meeting of Tuesday, February 21, was spent discussing some of the problems Washington College faces. As these things were discussed, the senate faced problems of its own.

At the outset of the meeting, Max Walton announced his resignation from his senate seat. Walton did not give any specific reasons for his resignation, but said that it was a decision at which he had arrived last weekend. Walton had consistently been one of the members of the senate who advocated more direct action on the part of the SGA with regard to the "Fessler case."

Later in the meeting, senator Mitsu Hannuki also resigned. Hannuki cited "Fessler case" as the direct cause of his resignation. He plans to help with the situation from outside the senate from now on.

Last week, Fessler successfully defended her doctoral dissertation, clearing the most important hurdle to becoming "Dr. Fessler." According to SGA faculty advisor Dr. Kevin McKillop, "one of the complaints [of the administration] is moot at this point."

SGA President Jamie Baker has promised to devote a substantial portion of next week's meeting to the Fessler situation. Time, however, is running out. If the SGA expects to get anything done, something concrete which will be carried out immediately will need to be decided upon next week. Next Tuesday's meeting will be the last with the current executive board.

TAFFY held an open forum Tuesday night in order to inform the students and answer questions about the changes to the distribution system and English requirements they have planned. The forum was weakly publicized; consequently, only five students attended. Assuming that the lack of attendance was indeed due to a lack of publicity, TAFFY will hold another one at 9:30 in the CAC forum on Tuesday, February 28. It will be the last chance for students to meet with the task force before the proposals are voted on by the faculty in March. If passed, the changes will take effect next fall.

Washington College's security problems have once again been brought into the spotlight by an incident which occurred Monday night in Worcester House. A local resident, an African-American male, 5'5", late 20's-early 30's, medium build, medium complexion, entered the building shortly after midnight, entered the bathroom, and allegedly exposed himself and masturbated in the presence of a female student. No one was injured, but the threat of violence, possibly more serious, incident has prompted increased security and increased demands for not only the repair of broken locks around campus, but also the installation of call boxes in the dormitories on the west side of Route 213. It is widely speculated that the local resident who caused the incident gained entrance to the building through a door which does not fully close after being opened. Since the incident, Public Safety has begun locking dormitory doors at 7 p.m. Resident Assistants have posted signs on malfunctioning doors asking students to push them closed after exiting or entering through them.

To voice any comments, suggestions, questions, or concerns, contact a member of the Executive board or senate, BlitzMail "Student Government Association" or call the SGA office at x.8500. Ω

William James Forum sponsors two important lectures

"Environmental Care From Antarctica to the Eastern Shore" is the subject of Washington College's William James Forum next Tuesday, February 28. The meeting, free to the public, will be held in Hynson Lounge at 7:30 p.m.

The program features two speakers, Kile Baker of the Applied Physics Laboratory of the Johns Hopkins University, and Robert Etgen, Executive Director of the Eastern Shore Land Conservancy.

Dr. Baker, a past participant in research in the interior of Antarctica, will show how conditions in Antarctica mirror world environmental problems. Robert Etgen will describe the work of the Eastern Shore Land Conservancy in its attempts to save natural habitats locally from destruction by developers.

Dr. William Schulz, Executive Director of Amnesty International USA, will speak on "Human Rights: A Global Update" on Tuesday, March 7. The meeting, open to the public free of charge, begins at 7:30 p.m. in Hynson Lounge.

Dr. Schulz's visit is sponsored by the College's William James Forum and is supported by the Emory Memorial Fund, the campus chapter of Amnesty International, and the Unitarian Fellowships of the Chester River and Easton.

Dr. Schulz heads the 80-person staff of Amnesty International USA and directs the everyday operations of the 400,000-member U.S. branch of the international human rights organization, a past winner of the Nobel Peace Prize.

An ordained Unitarian Universalist minister, Dr. Schulz most recently served as president of the Unitarian Universalist Association of Congregations, where he led his organization's involvement in U.S. human rights activism in El Salvador, India, Romania, and South Africa. He has been a tireless campaigner for religious freedom and the rights of women and gay persons, and has fought against racism and the death penalty.

Dr. Schulz is a graduate of Oberlin College, the University of Chicago, and Meadville Lombard Theological School. He has served on the boards of Planned Parenthood and People for the American Way. Ω as to the responsibilities of politicians to assist in the efforts.

"Forum" from 1

O Connor answered that today, with so much "social disrepair," schools must fill the roles of mother, father, minister, etc.

"Teachers are asked to perform miracles," said O Connor. They do not have support from outside the school.

"If we would be willing to invest our moneys in the long term," said O Connor, "our children would greatly benefit... Our schools can't work unless we work as citizens."

She bondy asked Cole about "world-centrism," an idea discussed in Cole's book, Conversations.

"How can we achieve more world centrism in education?" asked Sherbondy.

Cole replied, "We're not going to have any choice."

She said that America is no longer the superpower it once was, because we no longer have the Soviet Union as an enemy and Japan has an "awesome" grasp on technology.

"People now have to do business globally," said Cole. "From sheer self-interest, we have got to come to understand the world."

An audience member asked the panel if it was possible to teach ethics in the schools in an anthropological way. Cole responded that she believed it was possible, with a few stipulations. She said that there must be a separation of church and state, and the course must be taught "beyond the specificity of any religion." She suggested a concentration on the respect for life and for the elderly, as well as "decency in interactions among human beings."

While she believes in the need for an ethics class, Cole stressed the importance of teaching by actions as well.

She quoted two African proverbs: "Each one teach one," and "It takes a whole village to educate one child."

"If you start with the kids," said Cole, "you have a better chance to help turn them around." Ω

"Convocation" from 1

bration of what it is to be a part of this community."

He praised those who got involved in the planning and preparation of the Ball.

"This kind of involvement and dedication to the College, especially by students, builds support for our entire community," said Baker.

Baker ended his speech with appreciation to the institution for all it has given him in his time at Washington College. He mentioned that it has brought him much happiness, and wished the same to the audience members, students, alumni, and Faculty alike.

"This institution has taught me an incredible amount about working with people," said Baker. "That kind of experience is incredibly valuable."

Dr. Johnnetta Cole was then presented with an honorary doctorate. She considered it "a special honor."

"I take it as a distinct privilege to share with a man who remains clearly and unequivocably as the father of our nation" an honorary degree, said Dr. Cole. George Washington was given the honor during his lifetime. Cole brought up one aspect of George Washington's life which is not worthy of imitation. It contradicts the virtues listed by Tall.

"George Washington had slaves," said Cole.

Cole's speech addressed "the persistent problem of inequality." Using the Holocaust and slavery as examples, Cole said that people elevate themselves "by juxtaposing themselves with others."

Cole told of an African proverb that says, "If you're sleeping on the floor, you can't fall off the bed."

"We are indeed sleeping on the floor," said Cole.

Citing situations in South Africa, Ireland, the Middle East, Mexico, India, Haiti, El Salvador, and the United States, she concluded that "there is no shortage of bigotry run wild."

"Bigotry starts early and is relentlessly passed down," she said. She mentioned that there are teams named the Washington Redskins and the Atlanta Braves. "Why?" she asked. She decried the bigotry toward those with accents, "different" sexual orientations, the elderly, and the "differently-abled."

She then brought up the recent book, "The Bell Curve," which attempts to tell African-Americans that they are "genetically and forever inferior."

Her solution for the problem of bigotry lies in education.

"Our institutions have the responsibility to teach us," said Cole. "It is our schools that must teach the history of the groups that form the great American quilt."

"Each of us must see [the problem of bigotry] as our specific responsibility," said Cole. "We must look honestly at our own prejudices, myths, and untruths with honesty and self-criticism. When we witness [bigotry], we must call it for what it is." She said that laughing at racist jokes and running silent when a qualified African-American is passed over for a job in favor of a less qualified white person are "not the right thing to do."

"If each of us called bigotry for what it is ... I am convinced that our communities, our nations, our world would be a better place."

"We must become each others' keeper if we are ever to know true peace with justice."

Her conclusion was followed by a standing ovation.

The following students were elected to Omicron Delta Kappa:

Kristin Callahan, Matthew Distler, Shawntel Fitzgerald, Mariah Geissler, Tod Hall, Elizabeth Likens, Elizabeth McDonald, Ann-Marie Malena, Erin Rowe, Melanie Ruane, Jill Schultz, Dawn Simms, Lisa Swann, Christy Belliveau, Lisa Brown, Jennifer Dougherty, David Felton, Harrison Gallagher, Anthony Higgins, Eileen Hunter, Amanda Kirby, Marcia Mowbray, Sharla Ponder, and Sonja Wilson. Ω

TAFFY Student Forum

A Student Forum will be held on Tuesday, February 28 at 9:30 PM in the CAC Forum. The purpose of the Forum is to discuss the curricular proposals made by the Task Force on the First-Year Experience and Distribution. Student input on this issue is essential, so students are strongly encouraged to attend and make your opinions known. Students CAN make a difference.

Creative Cookery presents
Peppy Hour
Cappuccino for a Buck
3 - 5 p.m., weekdays
Cappuccino 50¢ with this add at anytime

Internships:

Opportunities never imagined

Beth Moser

Ever wanted to go far away and do more than just vacation? From Europe to the Colorado Rockies right back to little ol' Chestertown internships are available for sophomores, juniors, and seniors. As for the freshmen, it is not too soon to put your name in at the Career Center located in the Spanish House for future recommendations.

On Thursday, February 16, Vicky Sawyer held an informal meeting in the CAC Commons Room to introduce the idea of internships to the student body. She stressed the fact that all internships do not take place in offices for business majors only. Most careers require experience and this is a good way to receive it. It is also important to start looking ASAP, as many of the deadlines are in the beginning of March.

An important aspect is to decide what you are interested in and what you are looking for in the arrangement. Ms. Sawyer suggests creating a proposal or contract so that you do not end up being taken for granted by your employer. Look in your home area and even on campus during the school year. Familiar settings can be comfortable and convenient, a definite plus.

Unfortunately, not all setups come with a paycheck. However, the learning involved is invaluable and not all internships are for 40 hours a week. Some jobs only require two or three days per week, so that a second job such as waitressing is a plausible idea.

On campus jobs may result in credit which is another plus. Perhaps the most beneficial part of internships is the chance to test out a prospective career. Ms. Sawyer explained that a majority of adults have six or seven jobs in their employment span.

Internships' true value appears when a student graduates and begins to send out applications. Employers like new, fresh ideas with a reasonable foundation of understanding. Also, if a future employer uses your internship supervisor for a reference, your amount of enthusiasm and effort will play a big part. Remember to go for what you want, you are the one who has to live with your decision. Seriously consider your strengths and weaknesses and your likes and dislikes, before applying to any companies. The Center has various ways to help you focus on your interests.

Along with in-depth information concerning internships, the Center for Career Development offers various other employment and education opportunities. These range from part-time/summer to full time work, as well as counseling in resumes, job interview tips, job searches, and individual counseling appointments. The Center's hours are from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Monday through Friday and 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. on Wednesday nights. The staff of the Center are extremely able and willing to help you with those trying career choices, so do not be afraid to stop by and ask questions. Ω

Students make the call:

Guess who's responsible for all the wonderful things happening at the Student Center these days

Mindie Kaplan

Did you ever wonder what goes on in that office next to the big screen television in the Student Center? Who decided to bring virtual reality or Dan LaRosa to the campus? A quick peek inside the office of Director of Student Activities Dennis Berry's office reveals the truth. Students plan out the events and bring them to campus. Yes, that's right. If you've been complaining that night life on campus is dull, you have only yourself to blame.

Berry describes his job as "working with students to develop their own leisure activities." In other words, he helps students plan their own events. No staff or faculty knows what we want better than we do, so they decided to give us free rein, more or less. The benefits of this method are obvious. In addition to providing us with exactly what we've asked for, the students who plan the activities have taken advantage of a tremendous learning opportunity.

"Student programmers," as they are called, are the mini-producers of each event on campus. They contact the company, coordinate dates, and negotiate the contract and budget from the available funding. Once the event has been set up, they coordinate the use of any necessary facilities, advertise the event, and are in charge of set-up and clean-up. It's a big responsibility and a lot of work, but it gives students a chance to develop skills they can use for the rest of their lives. Ken Pipkin, for example, was the student programmer for the virtual reality game brought here earlier this semester. He was the one on the phone and sending the faxes. Dennis Berry explained that he guided Ken "without interfering." Even for as important an event as the Birthday Ball, students were on the phone haggling over the price of the dance floor and helping with the other arrangements. "The skills you learn here will carry on 10 years from now in your future career," Berry explained.

Berry explained that part of his job is to work with the Student Life Chair of the SGA, who takes responsibility for each big event. Berry attempts to plan one major event every week. Planning each event is a complicated process, requiring about a three-month lead. Mariah Geissler began her efforts to bring Dan LaRosa to the campus back in November!

Berry also manages the Student Center which is operated by students, as Berry is the only professional staff. Doug Beckworth manages operations, deciding how many people should be on duty for each event and monitoring outside access, since alcohol cannot be brought in from the outside. Another student, Scott Steinmuller, is in charge of the training of the student staff. Together, students keep the Student Center open seven days a week.

Student Activities also covers other forms of recreation. Dennis Berry oversees the campus rec. programs such as intramural basketball and football, as well as club sports like ice hockey, rugby, and women's soccer. Recently, club squash was also added to the school's variety of activities. Also included is the ping pong tournament, which was arranged by Charles Bucknor, and the aerobic dance program, which is funded by students.

Can't think of anything to do? The Student Center has a closet full of board games. As Berry explained, a large part of his job is to give students support if they need it. Whatever you want to do, he is willing to help, even if it is just setting aside space in the Student Center for a game of Twister with a few friends.

And the office? Berry's home base, it is also where the social calendar is kept. The social calendar is a living, working document that contains all the events for the entire school year. It is open from one to five each afternoon, and Berry encourages all students to stop by and flip through event magazines or discuss their ideas with him. If you're bored on the weekends, then come by the office and help make campus night life something special. What you want is what you get; it's all up to you! Ω is now accepting submissions of poems, prose poems, and short stories (up to one page in length) for publication. BROADSIDES is a Washington College-based publication funded by the Writers' Union; submission is open to any W.C. undergraduate.

BROADSIDES

Submissions should be sent by campus mail, Lit. House mail, Blitzmail, or any other mail to Katie Degentesh. Up to two submissions by any one author may be published in the same semester.

SUBMIT NOW.

Go see

THE ROAD TO WELLVILLE

February 24 through 26 in the Student Center

Nothing is sacred in Alan Parker's (The Commitments, Mississippi Burning) satirical comedy about the bizarre goings-on at the world-famous Battle Creek Sanitarium, a turn-of-the-century haven for rich and famous health food enthusiasts. Oscar-winner Anthony Hopkins turns in an enthusiastic performance as eccentric, buck-toothed health guru Dr. John Kellogg, the creator of cornflakes and head of the freewheeling spa. Bridget Fonda and Matthew Broderick are Eleanor and Will Lightbody, a New England couple who arrive at the sanitarium hoping to find a cure for their marital ills. John Cusack portrays an ambitious entrepreneur hoping to start his own cornflake business, and a disheveled Dana Carvey is Kellogg's vengeful, neglected son, one of 42 adopted by the fanatical doctor during his lifetime. The Road to Wellville is 119 minutes in length and came out in 1994. It is rated 'R.

We Proudly Serve STARBUCKS COFFEE

COFFEE ANYONE?

What's a latte you ask?
A shot of espresso, flavored if you like, with vanilla, carmel, hazelnut, etc. We fill the cup with milk steamed to a temperature comfortably warm and very satisfying and top it all off with a cap of delicately foamed milk. A light sprinkle of freshly ground nutmeg, cinnamon or sweet chocolate is the finishing touch.

Stop by and try one! We bet you'll fall in love, but if you don't, there's no charge.

10% discount for students

Open evenings

the Cellar
coffee bar & bakery

Take a Stroll down WINE ALLEY

ALL WINES DISCOUNTED EVERY DAY

Wine Alley features over 175 wine selections from around the world!

Featured Vineyard of the Week
DeLoach, Sonoma County

White Zinfandel '94	$6.75
Gewurstraminer E.H. '93	$7.75
Fume Blanc '93	$9.00
Chardonnay '92	$14.00
Cabernet Sauvignon '90	$14.74
Zinfandel 92	$11.50

additional 10% off all case orders

Inquire about the wine society. Casual tastings, great comeraderie, good fun. Glorious wine dinners matching Rodney's great American food with the great wines of the world.
Zagat's 95 calls these dinners "unsurpassable"

Wines available from $4.99 to $70.00 a bottle
Discounts for case orders.

NOW OPEN DOWNSTAIRS AT THE IMPERIAL HOTEL 778-5600

The Natives are restless:

Student opinions of the Birthday Ball

Sarah Bell

The Birthday Ball came and went and we all have that Christmas-is-over-and-no-more-presents-to-unwrap-feeling. Your dresses are thrown over your closet door while your tuxes are balled up in a corner, collecting dust and waiting for next year's ball to come around. You are still nursing those bruises from who're some ignorant girl slammed the spike of her heel into the soft flesh of your foot.

Well, if you're tired of hearing about the Birthday Ball, save your whining for another day because here is what some students around campus had to say about it:

"It was great! I loved that guy with the trumpet," said Mari Endo, sophomore. "He was so good with dancing and talking and all that stuff! I had the most wonderful time in years (not to mention that my 'date' was treating me really good). The only thing I felt sorry about is the Gatsby skit ... they should have done that in the dining hall instead of at the gym. Nobody was really paying attention (of course, no announcement was heard). I felt sorry for the actors and those people who helped them. They worked really hard on that for nothing. SGA should have discussed with them how they were going to perform and stuff. Other than that, it was a great Birthday Ball!"

"It was a great event that brought together a vast and diverse population of Washington College's student body. It was a time for everyone, including faculty and staff, to let their hair down and have some fun. The set-up of the ball was better this year because it made the dance floor more attractive, causing more interaction. The great band, however, also contributed to the Ball's success. The only down side was the smoking, which caused some cigarette burned arms on the dance floor as well as a coughing environment. The other problem was the many drunk students that interrupted the great jazz dance by our clubs. But overall, I really enjoyed myself," said Erica Estep, junior.

"We put a lot of work into it and it's a shame it couldn't be demonstrated properly because of some overly excited people attending the ball," said Dina Abbate, a freshman and one of the Charleston dancers.

"The Birthday Ball was a spectacular evening. Everyone was elegantly dressed, the music was inspiring, and the booze was delicious!" said Mike McDermott, junior. Ω

Richard Longstrath: "Where the stores are"

Jen Ward

Richard Longstrath, an architectural historian from George Washington University, came to speak last Thursday, February 16, to a crowd of about 30 people in the lecture hall in Dunning. The title of his lecture was "Where the Stores Are," and in it he discussed a half century of American commerce.

Longstrath's talk was this year's Goodfellow Lecture. The Goodfellow Lecture Series is a talk held once a year in memory of Guy Fair Goodfellow, a former professor of American History at W.C. Generally, the speaker of the lecture is a professor of American History from another institution, chosen by the History Department at W.C.

Longstrath's work exceeds just architectural history, however. He is a specialist in 20th century commercial architecture, as well as a social, cultural, and urban historian. He not only helps to preserve historical buildings, but also researches the social significance and impact particular buildings have had on society. Currently the Director of the graduate program of Historic Preservation at George Washington University, he is a professor of history there as well. In addition, he is the Vice-President of the Society of Architectural Historians, a national professional organization.

"Retail centers are things we like to loathe," he said at the beginning of his speech. Longstrath went on to describe the "quantum leap in building technology" that has occurred in the history of American commerce. He talked about the rise and decline of the downtown area, the birth of Aladdin cities, the advent of plazas or "small concentrations of stores," and the massive modern shopping centers, citing Shopper's World in Massachusetts and Northgate in Washington state as examples.

"Around 1930, department stores became the symbol for downtown, and by virtue of that, for the city... A department store was a yardstick for what the city was capable of." Longstrath said. Los Angeles, for example, has had the largest downtown area since 1930.

Concluding the lecture, Longstrath was asked about the potential Wal-Mart in Chestertown. One person was concerned about small local businesses that might suffer, and about the potentiality for "ghost shopping centers." Longstrath responded, "It doesn't necessarily mean it will kill off other merchants... It's very difficult to stop things like this... I'm not an expert. I know a little. That can be dangerous."

Dr. Richard Striner, professor of history at W.C. and personal friend of Richard Longstrath, later commented, "It was a great pleasure for me to be able to introduce Richard Longstrath to the Washington College community. I've known him over a dozen years and worked with him very closely in numerous preservational campaigns in Washington, D.C. I regard him as a brilliant and extraordinary scholar." Ω

Death and the Maiden:

a non-review by Sarah Bell

From where I sat, I looked out onto a triangular black stage which consisted of only a desk, two chairs and a stereo with speakers. Cleo Patterson, the director, was calmly milling around the set, giving last-minute instructions to her actors. Meanwhile, Dave Johnson, the lighting board operator, and Jeff Brown, the electrical engineer, played with the lights, dimming and brightening them and subsequently leaving me in scary moments of darkness. In the background, Kelli Youngblood, stage manager, could be seen bustling around the stage, making sure things were in their proper order.

The actors and actress soon appeared, who are all of three. They included: Liz Ellinghaus, who is only a freshman, Tony Squires and Robert Bull. All of them have been in previous productions at Washington College and have been brought together to perform in Death and the Maiden.

Although I won't ruin the story for you, I will give you a little taste of what to expect. Hopefully this article will leave you hungry for more.

Death and the Maiden handles a heavy subject that is not really made clear until nearly the end of the play. It involves the characters of Gerardo Eskibar (Tony Squires), a lawyer who has just been commissioned to the President's investigating committee; Paulina Eskibar (Liz Ellinghaus), Gerardo's wife who is carrying her pain like a festering sore; and Roberto Moranda, a "good Samaritan" whose halo might need a little polishing. Throughout the performance, the audience is slowly let into their world, where you learn of their dark kept secrets and of the forbidden truth. Don't worry. It is not like The Crying Game. Or is it ...?

"All of the actors have worked hard. They have done a fabulous job in only three and a half weeks. I am proud of them. They have come far," said Cleo Patterson. Patterson is a drama major and has put a lot of time into Death and the Maiden, which is her senior thesis. Death and the Maiden was on Broadway and reviewed as a feminist play.

Death will be shown in Tawes theater on Friday February 24 and Saturday February 26 at 8 p.m. There will be a cast party after Saturday's performance and all are invited. The band Pipe Dream will be there, whose lead singer (so I am told) is cute and single. Rraannlll ...

Thus concludes my non-review of Cleo Patterson's production of "Death and the Maiden," a very powerful and poignant play. Oops ... I wasn't supposed to say that.

Tony Squires, Robert Bull, and Liz Ellinghaus in Death and the Maiden.

SGA Presidential candidate Bob Brown (far right) promises to work with students to improve college social life.

Elect Bob Brown

SGA President

This is a paid advertisement.

WE DELIVER!!

11:00-1:30 Lunch & Dinner 5:00-9:00

From Chestertown's most popular restaurants.

College Discount: Only $1.75 per delivery!

We deliver on a per delivery basis - not on the cost of your order. We deliver from the restaurants listed below. If you would like to see any others we ask that you tell us and / or ask that restaurant about their future plans to have us deliver from them. Thanks.

The Imperial Hotel	Giardino's	Old Wharf Inn
Procolino's	Snack Shack	Super Soda
Super Soda II	Ellen's Coffee Shop	C'Town Deli
E & E Seafood	Sharon's Diner	Downey's

The Dining Delivery Co. 778-0370

Student Government Association Election Supplement

In an effort to inform the student body about the upcoming Student Government Association elections, The Elm has included in this supplement relevant Articles gleaned from the Student Government Association constitution as well as essays submitted by each of the students running for the Executive Board of the SGA, an open letter from current SGA President Jamie Baker to the student body, and Scott Koon's look at the candidates.

From the Student Government Constitution

Article 3 - Officers and their responsibilities

Section 1. All Executive offices of the Student Government Association shall be held by one person only, with the exception of the office of Student Life Chair(s) which may be held by either one or two persons.

Section 2. The Executive officers of the Student Government Association are the President and the Vice President.

(a) The President shall:

- preside over senate meetings;
- appoint Senate committees and their chairmen and fill vacancies in those Senate committees with the approval of the Senate;
- serve as a non-voting member to the Board of Visitors and Governors, at faculty meetings;
- vote during Senate proceedings only to break ties;
- give greeting from the student body at Fall and Spring Convocations;
- oversee cooperation between the Senate, SAB and SCC.

(b) The Vice President shall:

- serve as a representative of the Honor Board, as a member of the Alumni Council, as a member of the Academic Council and as a non-voting representative at faculty meetings.

Section 3. Officers of the Senate are the Treasurer and the Secretary.

(a) The Treasurer shall handle monetary business of the SGA and report the state of the finances at each regular Senate meeting (S)he shall also chair the Organizations Committee.

(b) The Secretary shall call the roll and take minutes of all Senate meetings, prepare a current agenda for each meeting, and read the minutes for Senate approval at the start of each meeting. (S)he shall also handle all SGA correspondence, maintain and make accessible the files, and chair the Publicity Committee.

(c) The honor Board Chair will be responsible for all judicial proceedings that relate to the Honor Code. The Honor Board Chair will carry out the responsibilities contained in the Honor Code.

Section 4. The Student Life Chair shall be elected to the Executive Board. The duties of this Chairperson will be to coordinate activities between the SGA and Student Affairs Office, specifically the Student Activities Office. The Student Life Chairperson will chair the Social Committee, and will work to gain consensus on student activity desires and Student Life concerns. The Chairperson will represent these views from the senate to the Student Activities staff. In the event that the Student Activities Office is not in existence, the SGA retains the right to reestablish the Social Chair position.

Section 5. The Officers of the Student Academic Board are the Vice President of the SGA and a clerk, who is chosen from and by the elected members of the SAB.

Section 6. The executive officer of the SCC will be the Chairperson. The Honor Board Chairperson shall be nominated by the President with the advice of the Executive Board and approved by a majority vote of the Senate (S)he shall carry out the responsibilities contained in the judicial codes.

Article 6 - Elections

Section 1. Elections shall be held as follows:

(a) All senators shall be elected within the first twenty days of the fall semester, and shall take office at the first senate meeting of the year.

(b) All Freshmen class officers shall be elected during the first six (6) weeks of the fall semester and shall take office at the first Senate meeting following election.

(c) Executive Officers of the SGA shall be elected two (2) weeks prior to Spring Break, and all Sophomore, Junior, Senior and Academic Board representatives shall be elected in April; and shall take office at the first Senate meeting after their election in accordance with this Constitution.

Section 2. All campus elections must be tabulated under the supervisor of the Elections Committee of the Senate, in the presence of a faculty observer.

Section 3. Requirements for all candidates for office:

(a) No person may be a candidate for any office in a campus election if not a member of the SGA.

(b) Candidates for all offices of the SGA must be taken from the rising Freshman, Sophomore, and Junior classes.

(c) Petitions for senate and class officers are to be filled out, all needing fifteen (15) signatures from their prospective constituents. The petitions should contain a list of duties and a signed agreement by the candidate to carry them out.

Section 4. Election Rules:

(a) The polling place for all elections of class officers and all campus wide voting will be determined by the Executive Council and notice shall be given one week in advance

(b) Completed ballots shall be deposited in a locked box.

Section 5. A candidate for office in any election may not assist at any time in the supervision of the polls.

Section 6. In elections of all officers, a candidate must receive a plurality of the total votes cast before acceptance as the duly elected candidate.

Section 7. In any campus election, all write-in votes that involve a student of the College shall be tabulated. However, a write-in spot does not have to appear on the ballots.

Section 8. Senators shall be elected in the following manner from dormitories:

(a) 0 - 45 residents: One (1) Senator.
(b) 46 - 90 residents: Two (2) Senators.
(c) 91 to 135 residents: Three (3) Senators.
(d) 136 to 180 residents: Four (4) Senators.
(e) 181 and above: Five (5) Senators.
(f) Off-campus Senators shall be elected in the same manner as Senators from the dormitories.

Section 9. The complete numerical results of all campus elections must be entered in the minutes for the meeting of the Senate at which the Elections Committee reports on the election.

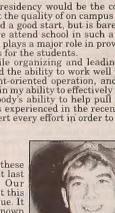
Balloting for the Student Government Association Executive Board elections will take place from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in the Casey Academic Center and from 4:30 p.m. to 6:45 p.m. in the Dining Hall on March 1.

Student Government Association Presidential Candidates

Robert T. Brown, Junior

My fellow students, we as a college community find ourselves now at a particularly precarious and somewhat intimidating juncture. Administrative changes, along with budgetary crises and faculty shake-ups have left a sense of instability lingering around us all. There is an ever growing uneasiness in the air as the new administration scrambles frantically to somehow correct the problems which continue to assault and erode the image and future of this institution..

It has become increasingly necessary that our student leaders be those who have a sincere and open passion for this College and its fate. Students who are willing to put themselves on the line for what they believe to be best for the students and what will help to maintain the good name of the College, whose reputation many feel is currently in jeopardy.



If elected president of the Student Government Association, my top priority would be the establishment of permanent and improved lines of communication between the student body and the administration, as I believe that communication is the key to problem solving and a better understanding between students and administrators. These improved channels would guarantee that the students' voices were heard, and that their views and suggestions for the betterment of their College could not be overlooked.

Another priority would be an improved partnership with the college faculty, with the purpose there being the prevention of student's desires being disregarded for the sake of someone else's financial or professional agenda. This faculty/student partnership would also be an advantage in cases where both parties felt the administration is doing something not in the best interest of the College as a whole.

The final primary priority for my presidency would be the continued involvement of the SGA in helping to boost the quality of on campus social activities. What is being done now is fine, and a good start, but is barely adequate for the student body's needs. Because we attend school in such a remote and rural area, it is imperative that the SGA plays a major role in providing enjoyable and worthwhile social opportunities for the students.

I believe that in the past year, while organizing and leading the "Save Fessler" movement, I have demonstrated the ability to work well with others, organize and maintain a strong student-oriented operation, and to take on large amounts of responsibility. I believe in my ability to effectively preside over the SGA, and I believe in the student body's ability to help pull Washington College out of the social doldrums we experienced in the recent past. I appreciate your support and promise to exert every effort in order to be the president you deserve.

Mark G. Reyero, Junior

"Change" seems to be the catch word these days. We saw an astonishing change just last November in the halls of Congress. Our beloved 213 year old institution is also at the crossroads of change. Our college is unique. It is situated in the land of pleasant living known as the Eastern Shore of Maryland just hours from three major metropolitan centers. However, times have changed since 1782. This special place which had been comparable to William and Mary and Harvard during the days of George Washington is now in the midst of many difficult challenges. In order to meet these complicated challenges, leaders must emerge from within the Washington College Community and lead Washington College into the 21st century.

What is the "Washington College Community"? This community that we hear so often referred to includes everyone. It is you the student reading this article, our treasured professors that inspire us, the administrators who take care of us, and the local business person whom we patronize. However, this community, like any community, will have its share of problems. It is during these times of stress that community is ever so important.

Thus far this semester, I believe that all members of the Washington College Community are beginning to feel a sort of revival. Our interim President, Dr. Toll, has launched an aggressive financial campaign which is already about 58% over lasts years final total! Our administration is very close to balancing the budget for the first time in I believe three or four years. Our Washington College Community, alumni, students, and faculty all gathered this past weekend to celebrate the birthday of our founder, George Washington.

My greatest and most memorable accomplishment as a member of the SGA was my first, Casey Time. It was on a cold and rainy Saturday morning in late October of 1993 when well over sixty alumni and students gathered behind Kent Hall to plant trees, get muddy and play with a giant mud fight. On April 8, I will again be organizing the Second Annual Casey Time in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Casey. The Washington College Community will be invited to help landscape the area around College Avenue and Anne Houses. The event will then be topped off with the Alumni Association possibly planting a new Elm on the very site where the original died four years ago. On that very same day, after Casey Time, the Junior Class will be sponsoring this year's Earth Day celebration. Like the previous two, Earth Day will hopefully be held at Wilmer Park down on the Chester River. I hope this will be equally be as exciting, if not more so than the previous two.

Finally, there is an important issue that the Washington College Community is failing to address honestly. As the semester approaches to an end, we, the student members of this community are about to lose a very valuable member, Professor Fessler. As I stated in my letter to The Elm last week, the Washington College Community is being cheated. Of late, many members of our community (including myself) have criticized the SGA's have given up on this issue. If we do this, we are ultimately giving up on ourselves. With the leadership of the current SGA vice president Sonja Wilson, there are still many of us in the SGA whom are refusing to let this issue die. It was the great Yogi Berra who once said, "It ain't over 'til the fat lady sings!" I hope our Washington College Community will not let the fat lady even warm up!

On Wednesday, March 1, I am asking you, the student members of our Washington College Community to be your voice. Not only do I wish to continue to contribute to this great College, but I also feel that it is my duty to continue to be innovative and create new traditions at Washington College. Before then, I urge everyone to attend the speeches that every candidate will be giving. This will be your chance to hear what we all have to say. It is your time to participate as a member of our community.

Elizabeth A. Likens, Junior

The SGA Executive Board election is quickly approaching, and I am soliciting your vote for the position of president. Based on my experiences within the SGA, I feel that I am the most qualified candidate for this position. An SGA president must maintain certain characteristics to be an effective leader and a guide to the student body. These include the ability to listen, interpret, develop and implement. Because I am cognizant and versed in the use of these characteristics, I feel that I would be the best person for the job. I would make it my priority to listen to the concerns of the students, interpret their meanings, and follow these actions with the development and implementation of ideas and solutions. It is my opinion that I have the ability to lead the student body in this fashion; the most effective and successful means to govern the student body.

If elected, it would be my goal to lead the SGA from the input of the students. With elected Senators serving as the voice for the student body, I, along with the members of the executive board, would govern the SGA based on the direction of the Senators and their constituents. The SGA exists within a larger community of Washington College, while the various groups of this school are concerned with different agendas and priorities, it is essential that the SGA sustains a cooperative effort with all of these groups. Our recent Birthday Ball represents this cumulative effort and how vital it is to the Washington College community. Working as one of the Ball Council organizers of the ball, I have further developed a relationship with members of the staff, faculty, and administration that not only resulted in one of the most successful balls ever, but also provided me with advanced preparation for the duties of president. Serving as the current SGA Treasurer, I am familiar with how this college operates and I know the administrative procedures that Washington college employs. I have a very good working relationship with many of the administrators at this college, and this would enhance my ability to accomplish the programs that the SGA chooses to address.

While I find it imperative to lead the SGA based on the student body input, I am also aware that the president must be able to make certain judgment calls and recommend the appropriate course of action for the Senate. As Treasurer of the SGA, I proposed and implemented a new program for club funding that has proven to be more effective and efficient. This proves my ability to foresee potential problems and take the corrective measures to solving these problems, an ability that must be a student with the president.

In addition to the ability of foreseeing problems and providing solutions, a president, under extreme deadlines and pressures, must be time oriented and diverse with respect to student relationships. I have managed many roles at Washington college: I am a RA, a member of the swim team, and Director of Student Activities in the student center. From these achievements, I have developed a dependable sense of time management and created a network of contacts throughout the student body. I can articulate the concerns of the student body based on the skills that I have developed through my school involvements and the relationships I have created with fellow students.

As mentioned, I would lead the SGA based on student input, but if elected president, I would like to see the continued advising role with respect to the newly installed Honor Code. With this year being the first year of implementation, it has been successful while experiencing the natural growing pains of any new policy. It is imperative that the SGA follows the Honor Code with consistency and stability. The current SGA administration has also revived our new student center, and I want to continue this trend, encouraging an atmosphere that the student body can develop, manage, and most importantly, enjoy.

Washington College has witnessed many changes within the past two years; the SGA has been the only stable entity that has withstood this institutional change. I have served the SGA for these two years, one of which as an executive board member. In order to remain the stable force that it has been, continuity must be maintained. I will provide that continuity that is necessary and lead the student body in achieving a role that is vocal, influential, and productive.

SGA Student Life Chair Candidate

Robert M. Moran, Junior

During the early fall of this school year, before the SGA really got under way, I was appointed by President Jamie Baker to the position of Student Life Chair. I accepted the position with the attitude of "sure I'll try it, all I can do is book a few good bands" Since then I have learned what is really required. Now I am running for another year as Student Life Chair, and this time I'm fully aware of the expectations and possibilities for the position.

Within the first two weeks on the SGA executive committee I realized I had to do much more than just book bands, although that is the most visible aspect of the job. I made goals, most of which I was able to achieve. My first plan was to draw crowds to the Cove student center, I felt that for all the money and talk the place was not really used, so I tried to have at least five or six events which really packed the house. I accomplished this with the Frogs, Public Service, the Winebottles (twice) and the Edwin McCain Band. As a second goal, I wanted to make sure what I was doing was what the campus wanted, so with the help of the secretary we came up with a survey called "Weekend Activities Survey" for all students, which is still in the process of circulating to students via dorm senators. I also worked to pass an amendment to the SGA constitution to protect events from poor attendance due to conflicting events. Most of all, I have participated in the SGA. As an executive board member I have participated not only in social events, but in the decision making process of all the issues that the SGA tackled in the past year.

If elected for Student Life Chair for a second year I'll be able to truly give students what they want, responding to the survey which was started this year. I'll continue to plan events to utilize the Cove, and for spring time events like the Bill Smith Lawn, and other outdoor locations. As a second year SGA executive, I have the experience to be a participating member of the SGA, and the knowledge to plan the events that students want. Thank you for me will be appreciated, and I'll do my best to serve the SGA for another year.

Elections are held March 1, please support the SGA by voting

Student Government Association Vice Presidential Candidates

Andre Taylor, Junior

When you walk around campus and see a short young man walking around, whose clothes look like they are two sizes too big, chances are I am that man. My name is Andre Taylor, proud member of the class of '95. Over the past couple of years I have had many opportunities to tone my leadership skills in ways to benefit myself and others around me. It is for this reason that I have decided to run for Vice-President of the SGA.

What is it that you want to remember after you leave here? I know many of us had ideals about what college life was going to be like. And I know that some of those ideals may or may not have been experienced here. One thing this college does have is its very distinct character that is illustrated not only by the ethnic diversity but of the varied interests we take up.

Twenty years from now when you look back at your college experience many things will go through your mind. Your memories might be of Finals, Birthdays, athletics or May Day. All these things and more make up Washington College as we know it. This mixture of academics and fun is what makes WAC so special to all of us. It is this mixture that I want to protect.

Talking to students over these last couple of years I have learned something. I have learned that students here do have about their rights. I care about my rights to enjoy my college experience as well as your rights to enjoy yours also. Together I really feel we can make a difference for today, tomorrow and twenty years from now.

SGA Secretarial Candidates

Steven L. Dashiell, Junior

My name is Steve Dashiell, and I am running for the position of Secretary of the Student Government Association. You may ask "So what is your platform?" and I will have to be truthful. I don't have much of one. In the truth, as Secretary of the SGA , you really can't have one. I cannot make any lofty promises of better bands or a better student budget; those aren't my responsibilities. As Secretary of the SGA, or any organization for that matter, I would have one basic responsibility and one basic promise I can make to the campus proper: better administration.

I've had a lot of experience in administration on the Washington College campus. As a freshman I served as Public Relations Manager for the Inside Edition newspaper. During my sophomore year I served as Parliamentarian for that organization, while being elected Secretary of Phi Delta Theta fraternity, Treasurer of German Club , and Secretary of the Student Association. During my junior year I was re-elected Secretary (and Scholarship Chairman) of Phi Delt and I was also elected Secretary of the Interfraternity Council. Throughout my three years at W.C. I have consistently participated in the Model Organizations of American States and been an officer of the Newman Club, the Catholic organization on campus. You're probably waiting for me to say what a great job I did in these various organizations; well, I won't. I've found in my experience that the individual is the worst judge of his endeavors. I could say I did great, I could say I did horribly, but I would recommend that you discuss my involvement with and under me about my personal efficiency. I would like to think that I left every organization I have worked with a little bit stronger, but the members are the best judge of that.

Do I ask you to vote for me? Do I ask you to elect Government administration that I would like to fix? No, not necessarily. What I see is an organization that I would like to assist, one that I think would benefit from the characteristics I would lend to it. That I am not asking to change to Student Government, but to keep it consistently running well.

I personally would appreciate Paula Ponder on her job well done, and hope that if I am elected Secretary of the SGA. I can do half as good a job as she. No big statements, no overwhelming changes. Simply a promise that if you elect me to the office of Secretary, that I will do my best to serve.

SGA Treasurer Candidates

Shrylneé M. Johnson, Junior

My name is Shrylneé Johnson and I am running for the position of Student Government Treasurer. Being a third year student, I have had ample means of involvement with several campus activities. Some of the activities I have been involved in are Residence Assistant, acting Vice-President and Treasurer of the Dale Adams Heritage Exchange, Treasurer of the Alpha Omicron Pi Sorority, participant in the annual phon-a-thon fund-raiser, and part-time employee of Stauffers of Eastern Shore. My past experience as treasurer of the above organizations qualifies me for the position of Treasurer. At this time I believe that experience alone is not enough: dedication and efficiency are also important in the Treasurer's job.

Serving as your financial representative for the students on Washington College's campus, I am willing to enhance the benefits for all by promoting efficient balances within the student activities budget, implementing budget plans and procedures that each treasurer will force me to interact with the president and the social chair(s). Being a liaison for the students, this position will bring unity among a wide range of student-run organizations. As a business management major, I will be willing to take some of my knowledge from the classroom and apply it towards future student activities. I feel that this position has been taught to me during the past three years, will enable me to tactfully approach the business sector of the Student Government Association.

Along with promoting unity among campus organizations, by being an African-American, I feel that I can also execute a feeling of diversity among the executive board. With this diversity, the executive board will have a broader sense of establishing diverse activities on this campus.

In conclusion, if elected, I will maintain a good financial standing with the student government association. I will also help determine decisions with the executive board, but will allow input from students. With this in mind, I will act upon decisions that will satisfy the student population. Commitment to keep a populous decision will enable me to promote essential and effective ideas. For commitment, experience and wisdom, vote — vote SHRYLNEE JOHNSON.

Douglas L. Beckworth, Junior

It is the time of year for you to cast your vote to elect the Executive Board of our Student Government. I am seeking the position of Vice President and would like your support. Because of my past experience I am well qualified to handle the responsibilities of this position.

For two years I served in an active capacity in the Student Government Association. The first year as Dorm Senator my eyes were opened to the significance of student leadership at Washington College. This year, I was appointed by the Executive Board of the SGA to serve as the Chair of the Honor Board. The Honor Code (in its post-reconstruction period) has attracted the attention of the student body; and by doing so it has promoted integrity and pride in the Washington College community. I have worked to make the Honor Code less intimidating, while establishing a code of which we all can be proud of.

Engaging closely with the Office of Student Affairs and Student Activities, I helped to improve the social life here on campus. Serving as Associate Director in the Student Center, I dedicated many hours to making it an enjoyable place to hang out and party. I have worked closely with the SGA's Social Chair and Student Activity Programmers to manage successful events. As a result, I am acquainted with the administration and with many fellow students.

As a member of this year's Executive Board I have acquired the resources to handle the responsibilities of Vice President. The Vice President is an appointed member of the Academic Council, which reviews issues of curriculum, and Chairs of the Student Academic Board which focuses on the State of the Academic Majors Reports. The Vice President is also the student voice at faculty meetings. The key component of this position is representing the student body. As the Vice President I will make sure that students have a significant voice as matters of faculty and administrative policies that directly affect the student body.

Erica Estep, Junior

As an active student, here at Washington College, I have had the opportunity to work with my fellow students, faculty, staff and even board members on some of the important issues affecting our college campus. Therefore realizing the support from these fellow associates, I have decided to place my name, Erica Estep, on this years SGA Ballot as 1995-1996 candidate for the office of SGA Secretary.

For those who may not know me or who may feel that I'm not qualified for this position, here is a list of positions that I hold on campus along with a statement as to why I feel I am the best candidate for the position:

Resident Assistant, President of Peer Educators, President of Dale Adams Heritage Exchange, Member of Student Activities Board Student Affairs Committee, Director of RA Continuing Education Committee, and former Sho woman Basketball Player.

I also work in the Student Affairs Office, which gives me direct contact with the Dean of Students and insight as to how to better campus life. All of this experience has helped me grow as a student as well as a caring individual who is able to voice their opinion as well as representing others.

W.C.'s Student Government is a very important element to the growth and development of our existing environment and I plan to further show my support to the SGA by becoming even more involved with the enter workings of the system. My main concern is for the student voices that are not being heard, because of either the lacking of time to listen or because of the intentional plugging of ears.

As a student I am aware of the time commitment that it takes to be a Campus Leader and am willing to devote my time to this position if elected. I have even attended some of the Leadership Workshops that have been offered here at the college and even attended the Leadership Workshop for one of the Workshops entitled, Time Management.

Overall, despite all my positions held and my other involvement on campus, the most qualification is that I am a concerned student with a voice that does not shy away from letting it ring out over a crowd, that may contain opinions. Being staff administrative myself, I strongly believe in human rights, and as a student WE have the right and the responsibility to ensure a safe and productive working environment for ourselves and for the others to follow.

For all of the essential above reasons, I ask you, the students, to vote for a fellow classmate that is aware, involved, prepared, and ready to serve!

Corey E. Stottlemyer, Freshman

Fellow students of Washington College, I would like to take this opportunity to tell you a few things about myself and my candidacy for treasurer of the Student Government Association. As you read through these articles, I am sure that you will find one common element among all of the candidates: they genuinely care about Washington College and the students. This genuine concern is my motivation for running for the treasurer of the Student Government Association. I have the experience, determination, and skills to successfully accomplish the duties of the office.

The experience which qualifies me for the office of treasurer comes from the years of committees which I have been on and positions that I have held this year. I am currently an active dorm senator. As a senator I have served on the Organizations Committee which deals with club funding. I am also a member of the Social Committee which plans for and works on SGA sponsored social activities. I am currently one of five student members of the Faculty Student Affairs Committee. This committee has been actively working on improving campus communications and enhancing many facets of student life on campus. I am one of five student representatives on the Board of Visitors and Governors Committee on Student Affairs. These are the things I have done to give the student body a voice at W.C. These positions have given me many opportunities to voice student opinions and hear first hand what is being done to improve student life at Washington College.

I am determined to accomplish several important things if elected treasurer. First, I will encourage wise management and use of money by the SGA and all who are given access to it. Second, I will encourage and do everything I can to ensure that we get a nationally recognized band to come to W.C. Third, as treasurer I will be lobbying to increase the hours of campus facilities, to improve inter-campus communication, and to increase quality social activities. In addition, I will lobby to create more opportunities for activities to do on campus. Finally, whether I win or lose, I hope to continue my work on both the faculty and the Board of Visitors and Governors committees. These ideas form the guidelines for my term as treasurer.

I can do these things without you. Therefore, I would first like to ask each and everyone of you to exercise your right to vote. Only with voter participation do the election process have meaning. I ask that if you want to improve Washington College and let the students take an active part in the its future, that you vote for Corey Stottlemyer for the Student Government Association treasurer.

To the Student Body,

As we approach the SGA elections, I would like to address the student body. In the last two years as President, I have learned a great deal about our school and the intricacies of the way it works. I believe that the annual SGA elections are one of the most crucial events for Washington College. The leadership team that emerges will set the tone for countless things around campus both in the current year as well as for years to come. The objectives, both set and achieved, of the SGA effects all students year to come, as well as all of us as Alumni. Policy decisions, from the mundane to the crucial, are made all the time; how the SGA handles the issues that effect the student body and the Washington College community as a whole can have major implications on the quality of education and life here at W.C..

It is for these reasons that I want to encourage all of you to examine all of the candidates closely and think seriously about the abilities of those running for office. I want to encourage all of you to vote, and vote thoughtfully. The decisions you make about all the candidates are worthy of much thought; this election will determine much of the success or failure of the SGA in many areas during the next year.

Good luck to all candidates, and remember, VOTE!

- James M. Baker, SGA President

Koon on the SGA elections:

Scott finally gets a chance to endorse candidates

I was very wary when Rachael asked me to do an op-ed piece on the upcoming SGA Executive Board election. Last year, when I edited this fine newspaper, I elected not to endorse any specific candidates. This was not because I had no opinion – if I had had no opinion, I certainly wouldn't have bothered to vote. It was because as the Editor I had a certain responsibility to maintain objectivity, or at least the pretense of objectivity. The Elm, by tradition, has not endorsed specific candidates for the SGA. Besides, several friends were running for office, and to endorse someone would have a blatant manifestation of personal favoritism.

Things are different this year. As a graduating Senior, none of my classmates have their names on the ballot. While I'm familiar with most of the candidates and their past activities, none of them are cronies of mine. As you read what follows, bear in mind that I am speaking only from my personal point of view. As the saying goes, opinions are like a certain nether orifice: everybody's got one. While I am going to endorse some candidates over others, I do so only on the basis of my personal knowledge. Any endorsement appearing below is in no way to be construed as an endorsement by The Elm. Also, my own knowledge of some of the candidates is deficient. After all, I wasn't even on campus last semester. I'm primarily working from the basis of the written statements prepared by the candidates. I also reserve the right to change my mind: after all, the candidates haven't given their speeches yet. Therefore I reserve the right to be wrong.

President

We have three fine candidates for the position of SGA President this year. All three have written lovely essays. The fundamental differences between the three lay in the issues they have chosen to stress. Bob Brown has stated that improving the quality of social issues will be his most important task, and has cited his leadership in the 'Save Fessler' campaign as an example of his willingness to address divisive issues in the face of tough bureaucratic opposition. Liz Likens has emphasized that she will be accessible to student concerns, and has pointed to her involvement with the Birthday Ball as an example of her ability to cooperate with others to improve the campus social scene. Mark Reyero says his administration will stress community spirit, and cites his pivotal involvement with the "Casey Time" programs as an example of his orientation towards volunteerism and community service.

Every candidate stressed accessibility to the students and the importance of student involvement. That's nothing new, as anyone who has read back issues of The Elm can attest. It is interesting to note the differences in the candidates' backgrounds. Roughly speaking, a vote for Bob Brown is a vote for a President who will get tough with the administration. A vote for Liz Likens is a vote for a President who will work to improve social life on campus. A vote for Mark Reyero is a vote for a president who will emphasize student service to the College community.

Trouble is, most folks want all these things wrapped up in one person. There is some overlap between the candidates on these issues, or at least what they've said about these issues. Campus social life has traditionally been the most important issue here, and both Brown and Likens stress this. A close second right now is the Fessler case, and both Brown and Reyero mention this issue.

On the most important issues then, Brown ranks ahead of the other candidates. For that reason, I'd like to endorse him.

But I can't. Bob Brown is an honorable man, and would make a good president. But he is not the best choice. He is the most underqualified of the three. In my sophomore year here I run for President on a platform similar to Bob's. I got the pants beaten off me by Jen DeNero, who was a far better president than I would have been. She had the qualifications for the job: I did not. The same problem surfaces when you compare Brown to the other two candidates.

Mark Reyero, on the other hand, is very well qualified for the job. He has done more as Class President than some members of the SGA Executive Board. But he also has problems. I was particularly unimpressed with the area of his article where he emphatically states that "Dr. Toll has launched an aggressive financial campaign which is already about 58% over last year's final total." This is simply not true. This year's Annual Fund raising effort is 58 per cent ahead of last year's pace, not last year's total. This may seem to be a trivial error on Mr. Reyero's part, but it is a major difference when one takes in to account that Mr. Reyero has touted the actual results of this effort by several hundred thousand dollars. How can we entrust the oversight of the SGA to someone who makes grievous factual errors while writing what should be a simple article, and then underlines these errors as if to show pride in being grossly misinformed? I for one cannot do so in good conscience. For this error does not speak well of Mr. Reyero's administrative abilities, or his ability to fully comprehend what he reads.

This, in my mind, leaves Liz Likens as the best candidate. She possesses the qualifications, administrative skills, interpersonal skills and emotional maturity necessary to be SGA president. However, she does not mention the Fessler case in her letter, and it is for this reason that I must qualify my endorsement. I am anxiously awaiting the speeches. If Ms. Likens is an in tune with student sentiment as she claims, then she will certainly speak out strongly in favor of retaining one of Washington College's most interesting and least fossilized professors.

Vice President

Much thought went into my examination of the presidential candidates, as they are all reasonably well qualified and have written fairly good essays. The same, alas, is not true of the Vice Presidential race. In his essay, Doug Beckworth mentions his impressive experience as a SGA senator, Honorary Chair and Associate Director of the Student Center. Andre Taylor simply mentions that we may have seen him wandering around campus wearing clothes which "look like they are two sizes too big." What we asked for in soliciting essays from candidates was a statement about their qualifications and positions, not their fashion sense. I'm disappointed in Mr. Taylor. I expect a better effort from a fellow Political Science major than the brief and vague statement he has offered us. It is for this reason that I give my unqualified endorsement to Mr. Beckworth.

Treasurer

The race for treasurer is one which is less lopsided. Both candidates have written fine essays. Nonetheless, however I am on the whole more impressed with Mr. Stottlemyer's. He has worked as an SGA senator, an SGA Organizations Committee member, a Social Committee member, a Faculty Student Affairs Committee member and a student member of the Board of Visitors and Governors' Committee on Student Affairs. In contrast his opponent, Shrylnez Johnson, has no SGA experience and no experience working on committees which serve the entire College community. Mr. Stottlemyer's superiority in this regard is made all the more impressive by the fact that he has been so active in the College's organizational structure as a freshman.

Besides this difference in the candidates' qualifications, there is a marked difference in the quality of their essays. Mr. Stottlemyer has enumerated specific objectives, such as fiscal responsibility, obtaining the services of a nationally recognized musician, long lengthening the hours of operation of student services and increasing the quality of social activities. Ms. Johnson's objectives are much more nebulous. In a sentence which is not a sentence, she assures us that she will be "Striving to improve the economic environment for students." What exactly does this mean? Is she going to lobby the Federal Reserve to persuade them to lower interest rates? Ms. Johnson also states that she "will allow input from students." That's an awfully generous thing for her to allow!

One quibble I have with both candidates is that Mr. Stottlemyer assures us that his management of the SGA finances will be "wise," and Ms. Johnson urges us that a vote for her is a vote for "wisdom." Now I have known many college students. I have known students who are knowledgeable, and I have known students who are smart. I don't think many students can make a legitimate claim to being "wise." In my book, wisdom is not something you acquire when you get a certain number of teeth.

That being said, I wholeheartedly endorse Mr. Stottlemyer. He has done more as a freshman on this campus than most seniors have, and is therefore someone to watch in the years to come, whatever the result of this election may be.

Secretary

This is another race which should be close. Both candidates are juniors, and both are well-qualified. We must remember though that the primary responsibility of the SGA secretary is the keeping of the minutes. Now compare the two essays. Which of the candidates would keep better minutes? In my view as a writer and an editor, Steve Dashiell is far superior to his opponent in this regard. His essay is readable and engaging, and his comment about how he doesn't want to say "I will do this, I will do that" in the positions he has held on campus is a refreshing change from the self-congratulatory and platitudinous tone which usually marks candidates' essays. Ms. Estep's essay is one which is not worthy of an SGA Secretary. The bottom line is that she doesn't write well. She doesn't have any plans to be involved with the "enter workings of the system." What the hell does this mean? Her essay is truly painful to read, and I'm glad I didn't have to edit it, for most of her grammatical problems are simply beyond all hope. For Christ's sake, before it was edited she spelled "insight" I-N-S-I-T-E. Who's going to edit her work if she gets elected?

I could continue, but I won't. I know I may come across as mean-spirited, but that's fine with me. Bad writing on the college level is one of the few things guaranteed to set my panties in a bunch. I therefore endorse Steve Dashiell for the position of secretary. Ω

The Return of the Coffeehouse

Luther W. Dudich

Last Thursday, some of you walking through the Cove on the way to get some food, or to the library may have noticed a large crowd of people in the Student Center area. They were the audience for the first WCMU Coffeehouse night. (Those have been around a couple of years may remember when the whole area was called "The Coffeehouse".) To be honest, there was a short dry run before an audience of about 10 (thanks, Cardinals B&C!) two weeks prior in order to get the arrangement of the equipment in the Cove worked out. However, this one was the first to receive any publicity.

What is the Coffeehouse Night, you might ask? The most straightforward answer is that it is an acoustic open mike situation sponsored by the Washington College Musicians' Union. However, it is much more than this. It is meant to be place where people can express themselves. The Musicians' Union was founded in order to allow the musicians of all kinds to meet each other, and so that they could have an opportunity to play with each other. While we have a room in Caroline (Watch for more news coming from there in the future!), it decided that something had to be done to make the WCMU more visible and allow it to accomplish its mission.

I also felt like personally doing something to try to put some life back into this campus. As long ago as my sophomore year, this place was happening. Everybody hung out together. In addition, the old coffeehouse, while being an admitted hole-in-the-wall, had a certain something to it that some of us miss. I decided to take a hint from W.C. Alumnus Seth Engel, and start up an open mike night. He did this at Newt's two years ago, and we all had a great time. As a member of the band that resulted from those nights, I felt a certain obligation to reclaim some of those good times.

The first Coffeehouse night had an audience at least twice what anyone expected. There were many highlights. One of these was Eric Dalessio and Eric Pikus's crowd-pleasing rendition of Pearl Jam's "Betterman." Dalessio later played with two different female vocalists. One of these was ("I am tempted to say 'of course'") Claire Pitt. Their cover of Frente's "Labour of Love" was truly nice.

The real surprise was the cover of Melissa Etheridge's "Come to My Window," sung by a girl from Kent called Cheech. Vocally, she sounded like "Hoop Chee" tera 10,000 Maniacs. Very good. Also well-received was Wenona Daniel, who sang "Fever" with amazing control. The audience started snapping their fingers to this one. She was also THE highlight of the trial run three weeks ago.

There was also a set of originals by Todd Lineberger and Chris Tull. This was a very gutsy move, but one which met with a decent reaction.

Then came the also Scott Culpepper and Ted Knight, whose jam with an army of percussionists and bassist Mike Buccino at the end of the night was something to see. Unfortunately, as the advertised hours were only 7-9, There was a very small audience (myself) for this portion.

Even with the successes of that night, there will be a few changes next week. First, the hours are from 7 until 10, and it could go much longer than this if there is still an audience. Second, I would like to encourage people to do poetic readings. If they so desire, it can be with musical accompaniment. I've designed this thing to be a more seriously artistic affair than the Newt's nights, and it would be interesting to see all kinds of creative people plying their art. Third, the first sets of everybody will have to be limited to a 20-minute maximum, so that everyone gets a chance. After everyone who has something together has gone up once, however, anything goes. Everyone who wants to play can do so. At the end, anyone who wants to play can just go ahead. The last portion will be a completely free and open "jam session." For those of you who aren't performers of any kind, feel free to come and just hang out. Those of you thinking about performing, Blitz me. It promises to be a good time. Q

Popcorn and Jujubes

A review of Highlander III: The Final Dimension by Chris Watkins

Let me say first of all that, unfortunately, this review will be somewhat incomplete. Due to scheduling problems, unexpected travel time, and other such paltry excuses, I missed the first 15 minutes of this film.

Now I've heard some friends express opposing opinions, but I have to say that Highlander III: The Final Dimension, starring Christopher Lambert (Highlander, Highlander 2) and Mario Van-Peebles (XXX), was a commendable and exciting installment in the Highlander series. Perhaps the most beautiful aspect of this movie was that its writers wisely chose to ignore the entire corny, wasted mess of celluloid that was Highlander 2.

For the uninitiated, the Highlander (Lambert) is Connor McLeod, a Scot who belongs to a race of immortals who have lived secretly among normal humans for centuries. An immortal can only be killed by decapitation of one form or another, and they have spent the last few millennia fighting each other until only a few remain. This is where the first movie picked up, with these survivors taking part in "the Gathering," where they fought for an ambiguous "Prize."

Naturally, Lambert won, and returned to the Scottish highlands with his new love. Then the second movie stumbled along and revealed that the immortals were actually all cheese-ball aliens from the planet Zeist (Zeist ... isn't that a malt liquor?), completely ignoring the events of the first film.

Thank the lord, somebody brought these people to their senses for the third installment, which returned to the original story-line (sans Sean I Connery and music by Queen, unfortunately). Next to the restored plot, the film's use of special effects is perhaps the major draw. A blend of morphing and light-effects gives Van-Peebles's on-screen sorcery a distinctly intriguing style.

There's not much to say for the acting. Lambert is no master, but he is believable – enough, at least, for a predominantly action-oriented film. The flashbacks common to the Highlander series are fairly interesting, and the writers haven't lost track of the unique brand of immortal humor. Van-Peebles makes a wonderful villain, even if he is rather cliché.

Now, this movie does indeed have its share of drawbacks. Most predominantly, experienced Highlander fans will notice that the plot of Highlander III is largely a repeat of the original Highlander. Even individual scenes, such as the wild car-ride with the villain, are repeats.

Also, characterization is weak. Connor is just the same as he used to be, and remains the same throughout. All the rest of the characters are stock material. Combine this with a mere one hour and 15 minute length and the package that is Highlander III seems more like an episode of a television series than a film.

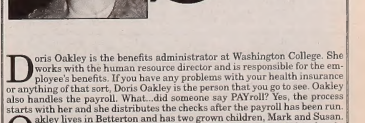
Still, the movie does moderately well for what it attempts. As an action film, it is one of the better choices out there, and as a recognition and apology for a big mistake, it is even better. The director did try a few new things, most noticeably with the cinematography in some of the scenes. Good judgment and taste were exhibited (he didn't go overboard with the surrealism.) Perhaps the fourth installment will give Highlander fans even more to look forward to.

All in all, this was a pretty good movie. In honor of action-film fans everywhere, I give Highlander III: The Final Dimension seven (count 'em, 7) Arnies:

Great production being performed in Tawes Theatre this weekend!!

DEATH AND THE MAIDEN

Directed by Cleo J. Patterson



February 23, 24, 25 at 8 p.m.

All are welcome!!

Saturday night's cast party will be featuring a live band: PIPE DREAM
Everyone is invited to come check 'em out!

Andy's

Friday, February 24
Linda McAdams
Another performer to add to our roster of notable musicians.
Country - rock - blues.
Saturday, February 25
Ray Weaver
Folk / rock / country - influenced singer - songwriter now residing in Nashville.
Tuesday, February 28
Fat Tuesday Mardi gras Party

Washington College Staff Profile

Doris Oakley is the benefits administrator at Washington College. She works with the human resource director and is responsible for the employee's benefits. If you have any problems with your health insurance or anything of that sort, Doris Oakley is the person that you go to see. Oakley also handles the payroll. What...did someone say PAYroll? Yes, the process starts with her and she distributes the checks after the payroll has been run.

Oakley lives in Betterton and has two grown children, Mark and Susan. Her son Mark lives in Massey with his three children while her daughter Susan lives in Worton with her little girl. Her grandchildren's ages range from two to 17.

When Oakley is not in the business office, she enjoys going to country western shows. "Mrs. Toy from downstairs will drag me off to the Blue Hen Mall in Dover to the concert theater. We have a lot of fun. I don't dance. I love to just watch and listen." Oakley also enjoys reading and traveling while in the summer she enjoys going to the Betterton beach.

She has been here at Washington College for 20 years and has done many different jobs although she has always worked in the business office. "I love my job. I love the people here. I love the students." Ahhhh...isn't she just the greatest? So the next time that you are having a bad day and you pick up that lethal pine cone to wing at some innocent bystander, be careful. That innocent bystander could be Doris Oakley and you don't want to mess with her or you may find yourself working without pay!

We Get You Discounts!

the Dynamic Discount Duo, Kevin and Jeff, roam Chestertown in search of bargains for students

This week we drove North up 213 just past the SuperFresh shopping center to Chestertown Pool & Games. We talked to owner Charles Hickman.

K: Do you get a lot of students in here?

C: A few.

K: What are the rates here?

C: It's $3 an hour per person.

K: Do you offer any kind of student discounts that might attract students?

C: I haven't as of yet, no.

K: Do you play pool yourself?

C: Yeah, I play some.

K: Are you good?

C: Fair.

K: Do you think you could beat my friend Jeff?

C: Anything's possible, I've been beat before.

K: Maybe we could get a challenge for a match here, Jeff. What do you think?

J: All right.

K: You think you're hot stuff?

J: Oh, yeah.

K: Are you up to a game of pool right now, during the interview?

C: Yeah, sure.

K: Awesome. We're gonna get a little pool game going here. Jeff, I just put $2 down. I'm betting on you, don't let me down.

J: Where's the pool?

K: Jeff, we're about to play pool. What are you talking about? Why do you have that towel with you, anyway? Have you noticed that this guy has a towel over his shoulder?

C: Yeah, I did.

K: Why would he have that there?

C: Maybe he was wet.

K: Jeff, are you wet?

J: No, I thought you said we were going to the pool.

K: I said we were going to play pool, Jeff. I didn't say we were going into a swimming pool. It's a little cold out for that.

J: I thought it was an indoor pool.

K: You gotta think first. I said we were going to play pool.

J: Well, this is indoor pool.

K: You gotta get your ears checked out. What are we going to play here? Eight ball? What do you say to eight ball?

J: Okay.

K: I'll hold your towel while you shoot pool.

J: That's good.

K: Jeff, you're playing for discounts for all Washington College students.

J: I didn't exactly win that pool tournament, so...

K: I hope this isn't too much pressure for you.

J: I hope it isn't either.

Now the game was in full swing, and Jeff was representing every man, woman, and child on campus. Jeff was our champion, the great discount hope, the man with the big stick and all the balls. He stepped up to the table again, with a determined look on his strong, hard face. The result of his shot was less than exciting ...

K: Jeff, you just set him up with two balls right near the hole there. Did you do that on purpose? Are you trying to give him a handicap? Do you really think you're that good?

J: Um ... okay. I played better in the pool tournament. I don't have any skill, so I guess it's just luck for me right now.

K: Jeff, you'll be lucky if I'm your partner after this if you waste this discount.

J: You're the one who had to put your $2 and the discount on this game.

K: That's another thing. You're going to lose my hard-earned $2.

J: Well I don't care about that, it's your money.

K: Thanks, Jeff.

The rest of the match went the same way – Jeff missing opportunities, giving his opponent easy shots, letting the discount slip through his fingers. He was washed up. He had drunk all his skill away in cheap bars with cheaper women. The sum total of all his extravagant living had finally caught up with him. He had failed when it mattered most. He had failed to get us a discount. Then Charles Hickman, the enemy, the man of the hour, came through with a crazy idea that set my heart on fire.

K: What was that? We get a discount anyway?

C: Yeah, I'll give you a discount.

K: What a good sport, how much of a discount?

C: Fifty cents a man per hour.

K: That's good. What do you think of that, Jeff?

J: Oh, that's just great. Does Steven Seagal ever come in here and rough up the customers like in "Out For Justice"?

C: I hope not. That'd be quite a mess to clean up.

Kevin still had a chip on his shoulder. Jeff had represented the discount team, the school newspaper, and really the entire population of Washington College. He had failed miserably. Kevin decided to make one last grasp at winning back the honor of our fine institution. Jeff apparently thought it wise to give a play-by-play account of the match, which we now join in progress.

J: It looks like you're going to lose. How does that make you feel?

K: I am not a loser. I'm a winner. I will survive.

J: Okay. I don't think so, but if you want to think that, it's fine with me. If you're going to shoot like that, you're going to look even worse than I do.

K: Jeff, there's no way I could look worse than you at this point. You just disgraced yourself and the whole Washington College community. The fact that I'm willing to step up after your failure makes me infinitely better than you.

J: No, it doesn't.

K: What was that stupid Steven Seagal question you were asking earlier? That was the stupidest thing I've ever heard of. At least I can do a proper interview.

J: No, it isn't stupid. In "Out For Justice," he came into the pool hall and started beating up all the people there.

K: Yeah, how do you like that one, Jeff? I'm putting the balls away.

J: Yeah, that's luck. How do you like that one?

K: I missed the ball entirely. I'm just setting him up for the big loss at the end ... giving him a handicap. He gave us a discount and everything, so I wouldn't want to make him look bad by humiliating him at pool.

But it was a lost cause. For all his bravado, Kevin fared no better than Jeff. Obviously they were dealing with a real pro. Then Mr. Charles Hickman did an amazing thing indeed. He gave Kevin back the $2 he had lost with Jeff's blundering. Kevin was shocked by this humble display of good sportsmanship.

Keeping the money just causes hard feelings and a lot of problems.

K: That's probably a good policy. I mean, if I had won, I would have made out like a bandit and been out the door before you could blink. But it's good that you gave me my money back. Jeff, I'm sure you have a lot of questions.

J: I noticed that poster over there, with those two guys on it. What movie is that?

C: The Color of Money.

K: What is your obsession with movies? This is a pool hall. This isn't a movie hall, Jeff.

J: Why do they call it The Color of Money? Why don't they just shorten the title and call it Green? Wouldn't that save room on the posters?

K: Jeff, this isn't about movies, this is about pool. And why'd you bring that goofy towel with you, anyway?

J: I thought we were going to the pool. That's what you said.

K: I said we'd play pool, not go to the pool.

J: Then why were you talking about Speedos the other day?

K: I never said anything about Speedos. I see a poster for the "Intimidator" pool stick. It looks like a medieval weapon. Do you have that kind of stick?

C: No, I don't. I'd hurt myself with it.

K: Are those things legal?

C: They've sold them, so I guess so.

K: If someone walked in with an Intimidator, would you let them play?

C: I'd have to keep an eye on them. That blade looks like it could play hell with the table.

K: That could scratch the table up.

C: Or worse. The top of it's pointed at the wrong part of his body.

K: And then what if you got mad at him? "Hey pal, if you're going to bring a stick like that into my joint, you'd better just walk out the door!" He might whip it out and start swinging it around like some sort of barbarian.

C: It could happen.

K: I really think that thing should be illegal. It looks like a dangerous weapon to me. Jeff, what do you think?

J: I don't know. It looks like that thing might hurt.

K: You also have an arcade back there. What kind of video games do you have?

C: We have Mortal Kombat II.

K: Mortal Kombat. Finish Him Fatality.

C: Lethal Enforcer Two. Pit Fighter.

K: Wait a minute. Pong?

C: Well, it's kind of like Pong. I can't remember the name of it.

K: You have Pong?

C: It's a real similar game to it.

K: The Pong? Two paddles. One ball. Pong.

C: One paddle. One ball. Blocks up on top of the screen.

K: Jeff, do you like Breakout?

J: I've played Breakout on my computer for a couple hours and got over a thousand bricks. It's ... really fun.

K: Yeah, you would like Breakout. wouldn't you? Do you like to bring your towel when you play? Make sure you don't get wet?

J: Yeah.

We lost the battles of pool, but we won the battle for discounts. While the College does have a few tables for pool in the student center, you just can't beat Chestertown Pool and Games for atmosphere. Besides, they have Breakout! What more could you ask for? Ω

HOROSCOPES

Aquarius (1/21-2/18) • If you let them, they will make you destroy yourself. In order to survive them, you must first survive yourself.

Pisces (2/19-3/20) • Use the Force, fish-child!

Aries (3/21-4/19) • They found the bodies. Next time, consider cremation as an alternative to dumping them in the river.

Taurus (4/21-5/20) • Your flirtatious ways can cause trouble when someone gets the wrong idea. Be more considerate in the future.

Gemini (5/21-6/21) • Look, it's people like you that cause unrest.

Cancer (6/22-7/22) • You never wanted to do this anyway. You wanted to be... a lumberjack.

Leo (7/23-8/22) • Stop being so neurotic. You don't need to check your BlitzMail every hour.

Virgo (8/23-9/23) • Put that thing back in your pants, we don't want to see it.

Libra (9/24-10/23) • Is it wrong? Is it right? Stop asking so many damn questions and go with the flow.

Scorpio (10/24-11/22) • You have suffered the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune long enough. The time is right to exact your vengeance on those who have done you wrong.

Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) • Planetary forces have conspired against you. Make a concerted effort to live a troglodytic existence for a week or so.

Capricorn (12/22-1/20) • The world is your Pop Tart, so stick it in the toaster and butter it up!

By Shade and Gorax Prydar, Procto-Magnax of Knargh. Ember didn't feel like doing them this week.

laundry Park drycleaning
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620
room size carpets
next to the court house

Cleopatra's Daughters: Redefining the meaning of sisterhood

Erica Estep

Cleopatra's Daughters means many things to different people but to the sisters of this distinctive organization, it has represented the survival and the unity of women of color on the Washington College campus. Originally founded by 10 women in 1992, we now have 12 members whose ethnicity represents the entire globe. This organization stands on seven principles: sisterhood, love, respect, unity, peace, patience, and pride. We strive to educate ourselves on the contributions of women of color both nationally and internationally. With the assistance of Dr. Ruth Shoge, our campus adviser, we have overcome many obstacles and we are still continuing strong.

Knowing that there is always someone there for you is an essential aspect in defining sisterhood. There is always someone to tell you that you are wrong, but who is there to tell you that you are right??? One of our new members, Chantell Jones, had to say this about joining the organization:

"Family is an important network. It is the backbone, the spine that supports and connects each individual vertebrae. The vertebras work together to form a sturdy foundation for the central nervous system. People are just like that. It only takes one false move and a vertebral disc can become ruptured. This causes a permanent in the spine and, therefore, in the family. Being that there are not many blacks, black women on the Washington College campus, it is essential that we make ourselves a unit."

These are just some of the things that The Cleopatra's Daughters represent on this campus. The members of Cleopatra's Daughters would like to thank everyone who bought candygrams from organization for Valentine's Day and those who supported us throughout the year. Ω

c.r.u.d.

creative ranting under duress.

by Brandon Hopkins

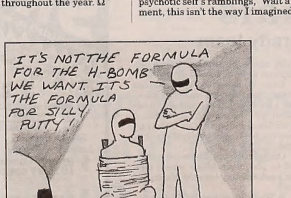
I have the awful habit of being entirely overly-dramatic about almost everything. My tendency sometimes carries me to the vast valley of exaggeration or the lofty heights of hyperbole, where all too often I find that my fictitious life is far more fun than the life I really lead. Real life (that boring jumble of lackluster everyday experience, unspiced by the sorts of titillation found in some of our favorite literature) is an intrusion — and it makes me nervous, especially when it succeeds in destroying the way I've pictured a scene in my head ...

It is during this overlapping of fantasy and reality — when one is most nervous about whether or not the "real" is going to measure up to the "fantastic" — that one takes on certain psychotic manners, such as talking to himself, day-dreaming aloud, imagining scenes in his own life which include other people not present. And in these scenes — an argument or a conversation, a romantic endeavor, perhaps — he becomes the hero paramount: invariably finding the perfect things to say, the best rebuttals, extraordinarily witty comments.

When it comes to an actual situation, one similar in every aspect to the imagined scenario, everything goes wrong. Very soon, he discovers the unpredictability of another's comments — and he realizes that the reason for his heroic performance in his day-dream was allowed because he gave himself room enough to be as condescending as Socrates and as quick-witted as Woody Allen. While being entirely taken down in the real conversation — after having been whipped by several quick quips from a rapier wit or being astounded by someone else's profundity — he thinks to himself, in slight regression to his psychotic self's ramblings, "Wait a moment, this isn't the way I imagined it!" or, "Hold on, I was supposed to say that!" And when else does one find himself admitting, "You've got a point there" and "I, um ... agree — " with such frequency, allowing himself to compromise against his will?

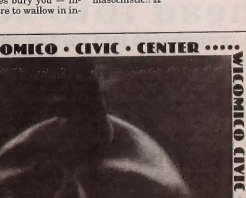
When this happens to you, you probably feel as though you've lost something. Not just an argument, not just your dignity — but the chance to do to a person what he's just done to you. The only thing you can see yourself having gained from the experience is the shame of letting someone second-best you.

Perhaps there is some unconscious desire hidden away in the Id of every individual to lay down in humiliation friends and enemies alike. And even if we despise this desire consciously, it still becomes entertainment for solitude.



The worst is when you try to gain back what you've lost. Beaten down, but with an unbeatable spirit to fight back, you try a second time to rail the lucky bastard that just finished his task of pinning you to the floor. However, these second tries are almost always doomed to failure. And when you attempt to launch the next salvo of return fire at the enemy you end up shooting yourself in the foot. Maybe you forget that brilliantly cutting remark you had perfected loaded but a moment before, or you merely foul up your timing and send yourself spinning off into listless, defensive prattle. This soon turns into a streaming of nonsense, during which your mind begins to slowly drift away from the job at hand.

Then you hear yourself, but your mouth is doing the speaking while your brain is just listening. Hearing what you're saying, you think about how like an idiot you must seem to others. Your heart begins to race. Your eyes water. You break out in a cold sweat. You want to stop talking — but without the mind's aid, your mouth has dug you a hole so deep that, even as you scramble through sentence after sentence trying to get out, you can really only hope that soon someone will bury you in this pit so that you don't have to bear their eyes glaring in fascination at your dumb-struck face. But no one ever does bury you — instead you're left there to wallow in internal self-deprecation. Once you've stopped talking, you realize the mouth has exhausted all possibilities of salvation from this abysmal social scene.



The conversation moves on ... Everyone simply ignores what you've said, dismissing the tirade as temporary lunacy or a moment of mind-boggling euphoria brought on by too much oxygen rushing to the brain. And there you sit — immovable, unable to continue the discussion, unable even to listen; stuck, seemingly eternally, in that moment of utter abject, insurmountable humiliation, feeling mocked, ridiculed, and laid low. The crowd, which had once been on your side, stands before you now snickering mutely and forcing themselves not to point at you their ridiculing forefingers!

There is yet another part to this ongoing explication of disparagement. The crowning insult to the ego. The ultimate crushing blow to the humbled Self. The final punch in the gut, boot to the head; the last kick in the pants that makes you fully realize how much of like an ass you feel. The French have a phrase for the it (or at least they used to, I asked a Frenchman if he knew what it meant and he hadn't the slightest idea): Esprit de l'escalier — "the wit of the staircase." This is to say, "that feeling that one gets after the party or the conversation as he is walking outside or going upstairs to bed — after he has been stripped of his pride, his self-regard — after all his cleverness, his wit, his intellect have been made a smear beneath the shoe of the clown — when he thinks of the perfect come-back to the enemy's remarks. Or when he remembers what he had wanted to say but didn't ..." This is that very moment which leaves a lingering frustration that is as annoying as an itch in the center of your back, right where you cannot reach it.

Why do we do this to ourselves?! Even after experiencing this episode three or four or a hundred times, not one of us seems to get it through his head that things rarely turn out the way we imagine them ... We can't always have things the way we dream them ... Still, we have to stick to day-dreaming ... Living in reality is too masochistic!! Ω

DISCOUNTS INCREASED HEAVILY 15% To 40% OFF
Patagonia
Columbia Sportswear Company
Old Towne Canoes & Kayaks
Whole Earth Outback Felt Hats
JANSPORT
UGG'S
BAY TO BAY TRADERS
207 Cross Street, Chestertown, MD (410) 778 - 3442

Sho'men basketball takes it to Swarthmore, falls to F&M

Peggy Busker

The Sho'men Basketball Season has come to a close with a win against Swarthmore and a loss to the number one team in Division III, F&M.

The Sho'men came out strong against Swarthmore. Ben Harris took the tip-off from Jerry Davis and made the lay-up to put the Sho'men on the scoreboard first. Washington made eight points before Swarthmore could sink one.

Jerry Davis motivated the team and the crowd early by getting an uncontested slam dunk.

The first few minutes of the game belonged to Jerry Davis as he played hard on the offense making basket after basket and on the defense making strong rebounds. Davis was all over the place as he made another dunk, then hustled back and playing solid defense.

Ben Harris drew man-on-man defense by Swarthmore and still blew by them to get lay-up after lay-up, including a crowd-pleasing three-pointer.

Ed Hicks made a great offensive rebound, followed shortly thereafter by a steal. He then passed the ball to Davis who notched his third slam dunk of the evening, bringing the crowd, along with the Washington bench, to their feet.

Davis followed this with another block and an easy lay-up to keep the Washington lead.

Mark Awantang played aggressively on defense grabbing several tough rebounds and showing off his air time and strength.

Freshman Joe McDonald came in and played hard offensively with a steal on one end and a good rebound on the other.

As the half approached, Ed Hicks made great rebounds as well as excellent shots from inside and out of the paint.

The Sho'men led at the half 33-31. All they had to do was hold on and continue to play aggressively in the second half.

Swarthmore came out to tie the score in the first few seconds of the final half. Ben Harris quickly scored two, followed by basket by Hicks and Burkhart. Jerry Davis played smart offense early on in finding Burkhart and Harris inside several times for the easy lay-up.

Several minutes into the half, with Washington up 41-33, Bradd Burkhart found his spot and sunk a three-pointer, to increase the Washington lead to 11.

Ben Harris followed with another three-pointer, his second of the game. Washington continued to dominate and move the ball around well. The Sho'men stepped up on defense, as Poe got ahold of his two steals of the game. Jerry Davis did not commit a foul until the middle of the second half. Washington was playing smart defense and making many important shots.

Ed Hicks was unstoppable as he got the ball past Swarthmore with either a pass or a shot again and again.

Swarthmore drew a technical foul and Ben Harris made both shots for the Sho'men, ahead now 56-45.

Ed Hicks, Bradd Burkhart, Jerry Davis, and Ben Harris continued to pound Swarthmore on inside with accurate passes and strong lay-ups.

Ed Hicks defensively blocked a Swarthmore three-pointer to send the crowd into hysterics once again.

With less than two minutes remaining, Washington was ahead 68-57. Poe made a baseline jumper to make it 70-57. Then Swarthmore seemed to come alive, as they made three-pointer after three-pointer to put fear into Washington, who had dominated the entire game and was not about to give it up in the remaining few minutes.

Washington made almost all their final shots to keep the lead. Bradd Burkhart drew an offensive foul to take the ball out of Swarthmore's hands.

With 21.1 seconds left the score was 78-73 Washington. Harris was fouled and made both free throws. Swarthmore made another three, their fifth within two minutes.

80-76 was on the scoreboard and Washington had the ball. With 10 seconds left, Poe was fouled and made both shots Swarthmore got the ball back but could not score anymore.

The final score was 82-76, Washington.

The high scorers of the game for Washington were Ben Harris with 27 points, Jerry Davis with 20 (4 slam dunks), Bradd Burkhart with season best of 16 points, and Ed Hicks with 13 points.

Jerry Davis racked up nine rebounds, three blocks, and two steals. Bradd Burkhart grabbed seven rebounds while Ed Hicks had six with one block and one steal.

Adam Poe had two steals and two rebounds, with six points. Poe was also four for four from the foul line.

The Sho'men had more than three fouls, which could have been the difference if Swarthmore had gone to the free-throw line more.

Washington only shot 27.3% from the three-point line and 46.9% from the field, while making 70.4% from the free-throw line, keeping their lead in the remaining minutes of the game.

Friday of that same week, the Sho'men faced number one in Division III F&M. The Diplomats have an All-American as a guard, the match was much anticipated and would be a Conference as well as Division shake up if the Sho'men were to break F&M's perfect winning record.

Washington came out strong but it was short lived. The Sho'men scored the first six points of the game, but F&M then took control as well as a double-digit lead. Three made free throws at the half-time buzzer increased the F&M lead to 58-38 over the Sho'men.

For the first 10 minutes of the second half, Washington slowly closed the gap to nine, but they lost their momentum as F&M began a 27-6 scoring run over the Sho'men.

With under seven minutes in the game, Washington's hope of an upset dwindled as F&M had a 32-point lead.

Washington went on to score several more points as did F&M, for a final score of 96-69.

Ben Harris played well with 17 points, three rebounds, and four steals.

Derek Cuff had one of his best games in several weeks, scoring 14 points and getting four rebounds.

Mark Awantang finished his season best with 10 points and three steals. Greg Metrinko made two rebounds for a new season high. Jerry Davis had five rebounds, three blocks and one steal.

Freshman Joe Burke played aggressively, grabbing a rebound. He and Paul Kenny hustled on the court for the Sho'men.

Washington was only 13% from the three-point line and 41.8% from the field, but continued to make free throws, with 65%.

The game was disappointing to fans who were looking forward to an upset, but the Sho'men played hard and dedicated as they finished their season. They are graduating only one senior, Jerry Davis, and though he will be missed greatly, the team is rather young and looks to do serious damage next year to the rough and tough Centennial Conference. Ω

Sho'women basketball head into semifinals

A remarkable feat for the second year varsity team

Erika K. Ford

Two seasons. After only two seasons as a varsity sport at Washington College, the women's basketball team is heading into Centennial Conference semifinals.

On Wednesday night, the team travels to play Johns Hopkins, the number one ranking team in the Centennial West.

Hopkins has a 19-5 record, and have a record-given nine winning streak. The Sho'women are hoping to bring that streak to a screeching halt on Wednesday in Baltimore. In the Conference, Hopkins is 12-2.

A three game winning streak has rocketed the Sho'women to a 13-12 record. In the East division, Washington ranks second behind Ursinus. Their Conference record is an even 8-8 following Monday night's wild card game.

On Monday, the Sho'women took on Muhlenberg at home with the support and cheers of a large home crowd behind them. Washington won 83-84. Leading by 22 points at the half, Washington finished the first half 55-33. The team out rebounded Muhlenberg, 51-30.

Sophomore guard/forward Lee Ann Lezzer led all players with 25 points, a personal best. 21 of Lezzer's points came from the seven three-pointers she amazingly kept making on the court.

"She'd make one, then a little bit later another one, and then she just got four threes in a row." The crowd went nuts," a fan in the stands remarked. Lezzer also had five rebounds for the night.

Kristen Snell and Megan Miller each had 13 points for the Sho'women, while Snell added 10 rebounds too. Alison Wentworth had 10 points, and shot 80% from the free throw line. Karen Sieger and Eboni Taylor contributed 12 points apiece, and Shannon Rump had a basket. Hilary Rainey grabbed an offensive rebound for Washington.

Head Coach Lanee Cole said she always knew the chance for a playoff spot was possible.

"We knew from the beginning that we had a shot," she said. "From the start of the season one of our team goals was to reach the playoffs."

"I really want to commend the eight players who've dedicated played for the season," Cole said. They've really come together as a team and played with a lot of heart."

"They deserve this post season opportunity to play."

Last month Washington played Johns Hopkins, but fell to them, 86-70. That fact is no deterrent to the Sho'women though, as they seek a win to propel them into another game this weekend.

"We're definitely the underdog here," Coach Cole said, "so there's no pressure really. The other teams are regionally ranked, so we're glad to be there for the chance."

Last week both Allison Wentworth and LeeAnn Lezzer both made the Centennial Conference's Academic Team for their outstanding academic as well as athletic achievements. Sophomore center Eboni Taylor made the All-Conference second team as well, a great distinction.

Last Wednesday Washington hosted Swarthmore and ran away with a 55-41 win. Their victory, in addition to the men's, created a Swarthmore bus full of unhappy campers leaving Chestertown that night.

On Saturday the Sho'women traveled to play Bryn Mawr where they won a solid victory over the Mawrters, 71-47.

A Washington win on Wednesday night would give them a spot in the Conference championship Saturday night. A win against Hopkins on Wednesday would match the Sho'women up against the winner of the Gettysburg-Ursinus game also on Wednesday. If the Sho'women played against Gettysburg, the championships would be held at home on Saturday night. If the Sho'women played against Ursinus, the championships would be held there on Saturday.

After reaching the semifinals after just two varsity seasons, you just never know what might happen with those Washington Sho'women. Ω

SKI
INTERCOLLEGIATE SKI WEEK '95
There's only one...
PARTY IN THE SUN & SNOW !
ONLY
$209
MT. ORFORD QUEBEC, CANADA
(JUST ACROSS THE VERMONT BORDER)
SPRINGBREAK '95
Sponsors include: Labatt's & Molson Bonsoir Quebec
5 NIGHTS LODGING, LUXURY CONDO
• FULLY EQUIPPED KITCHEN
• PRIVATE BATH
5 DAY SKI & SNOW BOARD LIFT TICKET
• 40 SLOPES, 5 MOUNTAINS
• 1800 FOOT VERTICAL DROP
5 DAYS & NIGHTS OF INTERCOLLEGIATE PARTIES, CONTESTS & ACTIVITIES.
* NOTE: THE LEGAL AGE TO CONSUME ALCOHOL IS 18
TRAVEL UNLIMITED
GROUP LEADER DISCOUNTS
PARENTAL & STUDENT DISCOUNTS
1-800-999-SKI-9

Humphrey's Point Farm
639-2832
on scenic Swan Creek near Rock Hall offers a full care event horse facility with a private atmosphere. We have two stalls available at reasonable rates. Also TB event horses for lease and for sale. Instruction, trailering.

Washington making waves at '95 Championships

Dave Kraft

"On a quest to be the best" was the motto of the Washington College swimming programs, who both laid serious claims to that position last weekend at the Centennial Conference Championships. The men's team (8-2) repeated its second place finish of a year ago, but this year trailed perennial champion Gettysburg by 64 points, rather than by approximately half that. That was the closest they were the most ever scored by a W.C. men's team, and a 134 point improvement over last year. The men also avenged their regular-season loss to Swarthmore, who finished 98 points behind the Sho'men in third place. There were 14 records broken, seven individual medalists, four relay medalists, and personal bests by virtually every person in every event.

"Being the best is something difficult to accomplish when you're in a conference this difficult," said Co-Captain Chris Freisheim, "but the swimmers gave it their all and once again performed above and beyond the expectations of many people, other teams included."

The women's team (10-2) had similar success, placing third overall, up from eighth last year. Gettysburg won the women's title again with 802 points, Swarthmore followed with 452, and W.C. took third with 414, a tremendous improvement on the 181.5 points they scored last year. The women had 13 school records broken, three individual medals, four relay medals, and again, a large number of personal bests.

The men's team opened up the meet in similar fashion as last year, with a silver medal in the 200 Freestyle Relay, just a fraction of a second behind Gettysburg. The team of Tim Parent, Peter Ward, Jason Campbell, and Dave Potter broke the school record (1:27.4) and were under the previous Conference record, but were beaten by Gettysburg's 1:27.2. Co-Captain Dave Cola placed second in the 500 Free, while Drew Fritch, Dan Woodall, and Erric Hetzer also placed in the top 16, all recording personal best times. The 200 IM saw Scott Steinmuller break the school record in the trials (2:01.8) and go on to place seventh in the finals. However, Ward bettered the mark (2:01.6) as he won the consolation final and placed ninth. Rob Cronin and Freisheim also placed in the consolation finals, each in personal bests. The Sho'men picked up many points in the 50 Free, where they had four of the eight finalists.

"It was 100% pure adrenaline," said Parent, "To have four people in one event is amazing." Parent broke the elite 22 second barrier by placing third in a school record 21.96; Potter took fourth, Woodall seventh, and Perry Holland eighth.

"I was so nervous I just went crazy," said Holland. Tyler McCarthy also placed in the top 16, and all five recorded best times.

The second day of competition opened in the fashion for the Sho'men, as the 200 Medley relay team of Ward, Campbell, Parent, and Potter took first place in school record and conference record time, the Sho'men's first ever conference record. In the grueling 400 IM, Freisheim set a school record, placing fourth in 4:27.6. Woodall placed seventh, Dave Cwaka also placed in the top 16, then, along with Holland, repeated that feat in the very next event, the 100 Fly. The Sho'men also had three finalists in the 100 Fly: Parent, who placed third in a school record 53.7, Steinmuller (fourth), and Potter (seventh). All had best times. In the finals of the 200 Free, Cola placed fourth and Hetzer placed eighth. The Sho'men also had two men place in the consolation finals: Fritch, who won the heat, and Dave Kraft. Campbell then swam the finest race of his career in the 100 Breast trials, shattering the school record in 59.8 seconds; just eight one-hundredths of a second from national qualifying time. He placed third in the finals, and Julien Gaudion followed in seventh. Ben Shroer placed in the top 16 in the 100 Back. Ward took fourth in school record time (54.8). Cronin placed fifth, and McCarthy eighth. Kraft took ninth by winning the consolation final for the second straight year, and Tim Whitner and Dave Cwaka followed closely behind. The night closed with a bronze medal in the 800 Free Relay, another school record time achieved by the team of Cola, Fritch, Hetzer, and Freisheim.

Woodall, Czekaj, and Hetzer swept the consolation final of the 1650 free on the third morning of competition, and Cola took second in the nighttime final. The 200 Back produced similar results as the 100. Cronin took ninth, winning the consolation final in a then school record 2:02, but was bettered by Ward who placed fourth in the final with a 2:01.6. McCarthy, Kraft, and Czekaj also placed in the top 16, all in personal best times. Four Sho'men again were in the finals of the 100 Free, where Potter placed third in a school record 48.9. Parent took fourth, Freisheim seventh, and Fritch eighth. each of the four, plus Holland who also placed in the top 16, recorded personal bests. Campbell took third in the 200 Breast, breaking the school record in 2:13. Gaudion placed tenth. Steinmuller placed fifth in the 200 Fly, and set a new school record in 2:01. Kawai placed in the consolation final. The Sho'men were determined to go out with a bang, and did so by handily winning the meet's final event, the 400 Free Relay. With swimmers at each side of the pool and parents screaming in the stands, W.C. cheers filled the air as Cola, Ward, Potter, and Parent won gold in a school record 3:14.

The women's meet provided just as many highlights. The 200 Free Relay team of Casey Bane, Barbara Murphy, Jenn Voss, and Meredith Bathgate took third in a school record time of 1:44.3. Megan Bradley placed in the consolation finals of a tough 500 Free field. Bathgate placed sixth in the 200 IM in school record time (2:17.6), while Colleen Roberts placed in the consolation final. Danielle Sullivan lowered her school record in the 50 Free, placing fifth in 26.02. Bane also placed in the top 16. The day ended with the 400 Medley Relay team of Bathgate, Darlene Schaub, Bradley, and Sullivan taking the bronze in a school record 4:13.9, each with season best split times.

The same team of Bathgate, Schaub, Bradley, and Sullivan won an identical bronze in the 200 Medley Relay in a school record 1:56.6 to opn in the second day. Denise Hakanson and Erin Miller placed in the top 16 of the 400 IM, each in season best times. Bradley and Co-Captain Jen Dow both were finalists in the 100 Fly, placing fourth and seventh respectively. Co-Captain Amy Draper also placed in the top 16. Sullivan's 2:02.6 in the 200 Free was good for another school record; again Bane placed in the top 16. Schaub took third in the 100 Breast with a school record 1:11.8, becoming the first W.C. woman to medal in three years. Roberts won the consolation final, placing ninth, and Voss placed in the top 16 as well. Murphy won the consolation final of the 100 Back in a school record 1:04.3, but was bettered by Bathgate, who placed sixth in the finals with a 1:03.6. The 800 Free Relay team of Sullivan, Bane, Bradley, and Murphy placed fourth.

Dow and Hakanson placed in the top 16 of the 1650 free on the third morning. Bathgate broke the school record in the 200 Back (2:18.7) with a sixth place finish; Miller placed in the consolation final. Sullivan lowered her 100 Free record to 56.6, taking sixth. Murphy and Bane took 1-2 in the consolation heat (ninth and tenth overall), both in personal best times. Schaub won another bronze in the 200 Breast, breaking the school record in 2:37.1, while Roberts also placed in the consolation final. Bradley then won bronze in the 200 Fly in a personal best time, while Dow placed seventh. Draper also placed in the top 16. The 400 Free Relay team of Sullivan, Bane, Murphy, and Bathgate ended the meet on a high note, taking third in school record time.

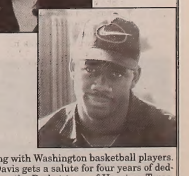
W.C. distinguished itself from other teams in a number of ways. In the pool, Coach Kim Lessard's effective Sho'men taper caused time drops more dramatic than any other team in the conference. The team also outdid the other teams in spirit, largely due to the tremendous support of the W.C. parents. The parents cheered not only for, but with the swimmers. At many times during the meet, Swarthmore's Ware Pool sounded more like a crowded Casey Swim Center. W.C. also unofficially led the league in many intangibles such as best haircuts (from fashionably bald to some nut with a big 'W' on his head), most interesting psyche-up music (from Cypress Hill's "Pigs" to Pulp Fiction's "Ezekiel 25:17"), and by-far, worst razor burn. It can safely be said that everything fell into place for the Sho'men this weekend, ending in incredible season.

Coach Lessard said it best: "This was a coach's dream weekend. Everyone did what they had to do." Ω

Sho'men Skaters take it and give it on the ice

Dave Kraft

The Washington College Ice Hockey Club played host to the Catholic University Cardinals on Tuesday, and played to a 5-5 tie. Freshman Mike "Ponch" Mullen was the team's offensive leader, scoring a hat trick to take the team lead in goals with six on the year. Freshman Rodney Roman had a big game, registering four assists. Roman leads the team in assists (six) and points (10). Freshman goalie Jeff Logatin had another solid game, making 25 saves, raising his save percentage to 81.7%, and evening his record at 1-1-1. The Sho'men, as a team, grew apparent by the fact that every single skater scored at least one point. Another positive was that the Sho'men stayed out of trouble, only receiving five penalties — an unofficial record.



Mullen opened the scoring with a quick goal, assisted by Jon Paine and Todd Barto. Catholic, again the larger team, tried to wear the Sho'men out early by rushing the puck with their defensemen, and scored the next three goals. The Sho'men knew they needed to get back in the game quickly, so Mullen turned a Dave Kraft pass into a beautiful upper-corner goal. He then completed his hat trick with a goal assisted by Roman and Tim Reardon. The score was 3-3 after two periods.

In the third period, Scott Dervaes scored a hard-fought goal in the goal mouth, his third of the season, assisted by Roman and Reardon. Chris Daily also scored in the third, his fifth of the season, assisted by Roman and John Moreland, but the scoring ended there.

The teams played a short overtime period, in which Logatin and the team's defensemen: Kraft, Moreland, and Reardon, were tested a number of times. Yet as time ran out, the score remained 5-5.

We thank the fans who have come out and supported us. Ω

POW

Washington College's Player of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an athlete displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

This week the POW list is bursting with Washington basketball players.

On the men's side, senior Jerry Davis gets a salute for four years of dedication to Sho'men b-ball. Hailing from the Rocket-town of Houston, Texas, the 6'4' center has been a key man on the court. Last season he was voted the team's Most Improved Player, but Jerry's always been one to get the crowd loud and screaming with his slam dunks.

On Monday night's wild card game against Muhlenburg, sophomore LeeAnn Lezzer had seven, count 'em, seven three-pointers, boosting the Sho'women to a 94-84 victory. As the game went on, Lezzer just kept canning them to the fans' delight.

Sophomore Eboni Taylor was named the Centennial Conference's Women's Basketball Player of the Week, so she'll be the Elm's POW too. She had 41 points and 30 rebounds in wins over Swarthmore and Bryn Mawr last week, and shot 48% from the floor.

Go W.C. sports!

Photo by John Pinola, courtesy Sports Information

LeeAnn Lezzer takes her time on her patented three-pointer.

Scores

Women's Swimming

3rd place at Championships

Men's Swimming

2nd place at Championships

Men's Basketball

Washington 82
Swarthmore 76

Washington 69
F&M 98

Women's Basketball

Washington 71
Bryn Mawr 47

Washington 66
Johns Hopkins 78

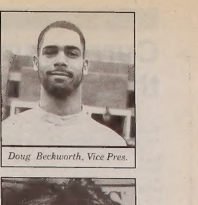
Men's Lacrosse

Washington 17
St. Mary's 5

Editor's Note

The Winter Sports are over for 1995, so if you never got out to see a swim meet or a basketball game you must be kicking yourself now. The Women's Basketball team is cleaning up the Conference after only two years of varsity play. The Men's Basketball continued to draw large crowds and not disappoint them, as they played in a tough Conference and played with dedication. The Women's Swim team had an awesome season, coming in third at championships, their best yet, and look to win next year. The Men's Swim Team continued to kick butt in the Conference and set new records at championships to come in second to Gettysburg. The Elm extends its thanks to all the winter athletes who dedicated their time and efforts to do W.C. proud, we enjoyed following your progress all season.

The Washington College



ELM

Volume 66, Number Nineteen

Serving the College Community Since 1930

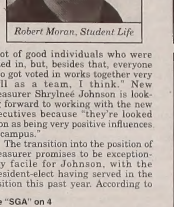
Elizabeth Likens, President

Doug Beckworth, Vice Pres.

Likens elected SGA President

William Denton, III

We the students have chosen the 1995-96 Student Government Association Executive board. Current SGA treasurer Elizabeth Likens will replace Jamie Baker as President, current Honor Board Chair Douglas Beckworth will replace Sonja Wilson as Vice-president, Shrylnee Johnson was elected to Likens's former position as Treasurer, Erica Estep will replace Sharla Ponder as Secretary, and Rob Moran will remain Student Life Chair.

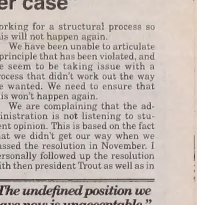


The new Executive board is certainly experienced in the area of student leadership. Three of the five elected officials served in the Executive board this year. All five currently serve as resident assistants; Johnson was an RA last year as well.

Voter turnout was higher this year than in past years. 549 students cast votes in the presidential race. Said new Vice-president Doug Beckworth, "I was really surprised about the voter turnout. I think that means a lot to the SGA." Likens remarked that this year's voters were "the most we've had in a long time, and I was really excited about that."

With three current executives preparing for service next year, a smooth transition is expected. Said Likens, "I think our new Executive board is phenomenal. I think that, with Doug, Jess and Rob, we have that consistency. It'll be a really smooth transition for that reason." All the new Executives seem quite pleased at the results of the other races. Said Secretary-elect Erica Estep," I was really happy to see which candidates were chosen because they were people I really wanted to work with." Student Life Chair Rob Moran said, "there are a lot of good individuals who were voted in, but, besides that, everyone who got voted in works together very well as a team, I think." New Treasurer Shrylnee Johnson is looking forward to working with the new executives because "they're looked upon as being very positive influences on campus."

The transition into the position of Treasurer promises to be exceptionally facile for Johnson, with the President-elect having served in the position this past year. According to



See "SGA" on 4

Robert Moran, Student Life

Erica Estep, Secretary

Shrylnee Johnson, Treasurer

Senior Campaign exceeds goal:

Class of '95 gives record amounts to W.C.

Jay Derbis

The 1995 Washington College Senior Campaign is progressing at a record-breaking pace. Designed to promote class unity in advance of graduation and to prepare seniors for the role they will play as alumni, the Senior Campaign encourages seniors to make a contribution toward the Class Gift that will be presented to the College during commencement weekend.

Since the vitality of the College depends upon the annual support of alumni through gifts to the College's Annual Fund, the Senior Class Gift is an important gesture by seniors of giving back to help maintain the school which has given them so much.

Unless the Class decides otherwise by the end of the semester, funds raised for this year's Senior Gift will be put toward the College's Annual Fund.

Only about 75% of the cost of a Washington College education is covered by tuition, and the rest is made up by the Annual Fund. The Fund helps pay for such things as library books, faculty salaries, lab equipment, and even financial aid itself. As a result, every alumni gift to the Fund is important — whether $1,000 or $5, they all add up to provide crucial institutional support.

This year's Senior Campaign began with a goal of $3,000, and kicked off its drive with a highly successful Senior Dinner last November. The Dinner was attended by more than half of the Class of '95, and their strong enthusiasm led to the Campaign's goal being surpassed in a single night.

More than $3,400 was raised, compared with the mere $1,550 raised by the seniors at last year's dinner. This total included 29 seniors who made gifts or pledges at the Jr. 1782 level.

The 1782 Society is a group of individuals who give $1,000 or more to the College every year, but for Seniors it is possible to join with a gift of $100 or more. This is particularly easy for most Seniors to do because the gift can simply be deducted from their security deposit (which many would probably never really get to pocket anyway).

Membership in the 1782 Society includes such benefits as the use of the Fitness Center and other facilities for the year after graduation, invitation to exclusive special events, such as the College's lavish black-tie 1782 Spring Gala Dinner Dance to be held at the Harbor Court Hotel in Baltimore this April! (an excellent opportunity for networking), and other special privileges.

Seniors may also receive the new Washington College license plate frame that's been appearing on cars all over campus by making a gift or pledge of $25. The license plate frame is available to alumni, parents, and others who make a first-time gift to the College this year, but is also being offered on campus exclusively to Seniors.

See "Campaign" on 3

Baker proposes SGA redefine its position on "Fessler case"

Kate Meagher

At Tuesday's Student Government Association meeting, SGA President James Baker proposed that the SGA change its stance on the "Fessler case" and concentrate its efforts on the modification of official procedure with regard to the hiring and firing of professors. Declaring the "Fessler case" beyond the control of the student body, Baker said, "The impact of Audrey Fessler's departure from Washington College is not at question – She will be sorely missed. The issue here is one of procedure. We can work to insure that this type of procedural flaw will be avoided in the future.

... The stakes are now much more than one position.

We need to work with the administration to make sure this is not repeated. I believe Audrey Fessler to be an exemplary educator, but at this point, I don't think she can be retained.

... Support is not clearly evident any more. I am uncomfortable continuing without clear articulation on what we are to do. There are students voicing their opinions, but the support has not congealed.

... The decision to release Fessler was made in our collective best interest. They are not freely choosing to insult our interests as students and injure the integrity of this institution. Though I have some reservations about this paternalistic attitude, I believe that the SGA would be better off working for a structural process so this will not happen again.

We have been unable to articulate a principle that has been violated, and we seem to be taking issue with a process that didn't work out the way we wanted. We need to ensure that this won't happen again.

We are complaining that the administration is not listening to student opinion. This is based on the fact that we didn't get our way when we passed the resolution in November. I personally followed up the resolution with then president Trout as well as in numerous other meetings. All the meetings and forums after the resolution are evidence that the issue was further thought out. If we continue to fight, we are doing the exact thing that we are accusing the administration of – not listening.

... We need to redefine our position for the new SGA Exec. board. The undefined position we have now is unacceptable.

I recommend that we learn from the Fessler issue. Our collective experience can be the basis of productive dialogue between the SGA, the Faculty, and the administration so that the student body has its due say in how we receive our education and

See "Fessler case" on 4

"The undefined position we have now is unacceptable."
- James Baker

Inside This Week's Elm

Thinking through... the balanced budget amendment. Paul shares his thoughts. 3

Positive student response to TAFFY
Students react to TAFFY proposal with suggestions and support. 4

Dropped a Whole Degree
Aaron reviews the Lou Reed box set and finds it rather good. 7

We Get You Discounts!
Need a new flowerpot? Our discount boys get you a 10% discount on a tuba. 9

Curriculum envy and the graduating senior

Timing is everything. This is something that has taken me years to figure out. Timing is of utmost importance in everything from getting the right job to finding a mate for life. Apparently, it is also key in getting a wonderful education.

I guess you could say I'm suffering from "curriculum envy," as Kevin Coveney put it. I've been following the proposed changes to the freshman year and distribution from the beginning with much interest and I must say, I want to be a freshman again! (Well, maybe not. I mean, I would love to have been able to be a part of this new program, but I don't think I really want to do it all over again. Can you understand?)

Granted, I didn't have to take Forms of Lit. and Comp., or any history and I could have gotten away without taking any math too, but I still think I would rather have been forced to take eight courses of my own choice rather than ten.

Just think about it. I would have been able to focus on the culture and literature of Maryland in my freshman year, then broaden the scope to include a global perspective. Chances are I wouldn't be having such a problem now trying to draw connections between my disparate English courses while studying for comps. In addition to my Gender Studies and Art minors, I would probably have an Anthropology minor as well. I wouldn't have taken Physics and sure would have avoided Calc. My GPA would be pristine!

Despite my enthusiasm for the proposed programs, I do have a few reservations. I firmly believe that decent writing skills are essential for anyone in any field of study or work. While I know for a fact that Forms doesn't necessarily produce good writers and the Sophomore Writing Obligation is, for some, a joke, I wonder if each of the different professors teaching each of the different courses are going to be as attentive to writing skills as warranted.

As far as I am concerned, being able to clearly and concisely express one's self is of paramount importance. Regardless of how much a person knows about a given field, if said person is unable to clearly express the ideas and concepts involved in that field then no good will come of that knowledge. It is only through expression of knowledge that one benefits from it.

Every good program has a few faults, and no plan can be perfect. I do believe, however, that if everyone involved makes a concerted effort to provide the freshmen and sophomores with a coherent, comprehensive education in their field of choice as well as in the skills need to discuss and write about that field, then the proposed program should be a success.

A program of this nature could be the deciding factor in bringing students to this institution. It is innovative, comprehensive and, at least in my oppinion, interesting. It shows that Washington College is taking a serious look at its curriculum and is serious about making benificial changes. It also proves that professers are willing to put in the extra time and energy need to make a comprehensive program such as this one work.

A big round of applause goes to all those involved in putting together this proposal and a big envious look to all those who will benefit from it.

Correction: Apologies go to the members of Cleopatra's Daughters who wrote last week's article titled "Cleopatra's Daughters: Redefining the meaning of sisterhood." The article was mistakenly attributed to Erica Estep.

Get active! Get involved! Edit the paper!

Applications are now being accepted for the positions of editor of The Elm and The Pegasus. Those students interested in the positions should send a letter of application to Dr. Richard Striner, Chair of the Board of Publications, via campus mail.

The deadline for application is Friday, March 31. Interviews will be conducted on Wednesday, April 12.

For more information contact the offices of The Elm (x. 8585) or The Pegasus (x. 8584). Any interested student is encouraged to apply.

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink
News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Co-Editors
Mindie J. Kaplan and Sarah Bell
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Erika Ford

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Joshua T. Lawrence, IV
Office Manager
Scott Ross Koon
Photo Editor
Kelli Youngblood

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and crud do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or pursued over BitchMail. No/unsigned items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8585.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

To the Editor:

Student organization of Birthday Ball applauded

Congratulations to Washington College! The Birthday Ball was an outstanding success. Compliments to Liz Likens for her leadership in restoring this event to a height beyond its former levels. Congratulations as well to her accomplices in this heroic effort. The memories they created for themselves and for all who attended will endure for a long, long time. The happiness and the spirit surrounding the Ball was timely as well, in that it complimented the good will and tension free atmosphere prevailing throughout the campus community during the weekend.

It goes without saying that the new campus leadership may be having an uplifting effect on all of campus constituencies. Congratulations to Dr. Toll and to all of us as well. the hard work is still ahead, but the leadership is there to follow.

-Thomas J. Maher, Member
Board of Visitors and Governors

More people to thank

In my letter last week I thanked a number of groups and individuals for their help with the Birthday Ball. In this I forgot to mention two other groups that were essential parts of this year's ball. These are Dale Adams and friends for their Jazz performance, and the members of the buildings and grounds staff. In very different capacities, these two groups were extremely helpful. I want to thank them as well, and apologize for leaving them out of last week's letter. Thank you.

-James Baker, President
Student Government Association

The "Fessler case" questioned

In one of this semester's Elms (Feb. 17) there were no less than four letters to the editor regarding the failure of Washington College to retain one of its most valued professors. What has been dubbed the "Fessler Case" has reached gigantic proportions. It's overshadowed every other issue of a rather tumultuous year; indeed, this is the biggest and longest standing debate that I've witnessed in my four and a half years at this institution.

Stu Neiman didn't get this much press when he shot himself in the leg. Gene Wubbels' financial shenanigans didn't inspire as much outrage. Tex Andrews - whose mentorship was also cited as a reason for the retention of students majoring in his department - didn't get half this support when he got canned, and he was comparably more valuable (as he was one of two profs teaching studio art as opposed to one of six full time profs teaching English Lit.).

The mention of Tex brings up a point that I don't think has been adequately addressed with regards to the Fessler Case. How long has she been a full time professor here? Long enough to enable the by-law that stipulates that a professor here shall receive tenure after a certain number of years (six, I believe) teaching in a full time position? If this is the case than the debate escalates to whether or not the college should give Fessler tenure.

In the last six or so months, I've heard more positive remarks about Fessler's teaching than in my entire tenure here at the College. Previously, I knew her only as a prof. that some of my friends had taken a class with once or twice, and subsequently avoided because they were not particularly challenged by the level of discussion therein. I have recently (this semester) heard similar comments regarding the less-than-stimulating nature of one of her courses from an English major who is nonetheless strongly in support of keeping Fessler here. I'm not writing this as a letter 'against' Fessler - far from it. But since the representation of her classes that has reached my ears has been neither positive nor negative, I'm curious as to what the fuss is all about.

Neither positive nor negative until this year, that is. Either there were a large amount of closet "Fesslerites," or the prospect of her loss has changed some opinions about whether or not she is valuable in her own right. The phrase 'bandwagon jumping' comes to some minds, but I hardly think that such an important issue should be treated this lightly. The question remains: is she valuable enough to keep around for the next twenty to thirty years?

See "Fessler" on 3

This Week on Campus
March 3 - 9

Film Series
Quiz Show
Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.

Friday 3

Saturday 4

Sunday 5

Monday 6
The Percussion Group
8 p.m., Tawes Theatre

Tuesday 7
Human Rights: A Global Update
Dr. Schuls, Executive Director, Amnesty International, 7:30 p.m., Hynson

Wednesday 8
A Living History Demonstration on the Women's Suffrage Movement
Casey Forum, 7 p.m.

Thursday 9

Thinking through ...

the balanced budget amendment

by Paul Briggs

As of this writing, the future course of the United States government hinges on the actions of one unknown senator. By the time you read this, however, it will already have been decided.

The balanced budget amendment, which passed the House last month, is now in the Senate and will be voted upon on Thursday. Senate Majority Leader Dole, who opposes the amendment, has twice postponed the vote on the amendment, choosing to wait until he has enough votes. The amendment is extremely popular - one poll shows the amendment with 80% approval ratings - and the Democrats are negotiations for more punishment. Dole now says the amendment is within one vote of certain passage.

A few weeks ago Senate Republicans defeated an effort by Senator Reid (D-NV) to amend the amendment to exempt Social Security from budget calculations. This would, of course, have made the job much more difficult, not only because it would have become impossible to reduce the deficit by cutting Social Security, but also because Social Security surpluses would no longer count against the deficit. The result: the last anyone come to the conclusion that this means the GOP is seriously considering an attack on income entitlements, there is talk of repealing the 1993 changes in the tax code that made pensioners whose incomes exceeded a certain point liable for taxes on 85% of their benefits.

There are now three possibilities. One is that the amendment will pass in the Senate and be ratified by the states.

Another is that it will pass in the Senate, but fail to win-over the requisite 38 state legislatures. The third is that it will be killed in the Senate.

If the amendment becomes part of the Constitution, it may not have any effect right away. By the time it has taken effect in 2002, however, it will have had an enormous effect. In virtually every area, programs will be cut or abolished beyond anything "deficit hawks" ever asked or wished for. Most people's taxes will go up. (Recall how unpopular the 1993 tax increases, which affected less than two percent of the population, were.)

Frankly, there is no way to judge how people would respond to this. No one has ever dared to propose the kind of taxes and cuts that this amendment would require. But if it does not happen by the will of the President or Congress, it will happen by the will of the courts. The thought of a federal judge mandating tax increases is a frightening one indeed, and it is one of the reason why quite a number of relatively conservative people have expressed serious reservations about this amendment.

Another reason is that there are occasions when the government really does need the ability to spend large amounts of money, such as natural disasters, wars and financial crises. At such times, under the amendment, it would be possible to engage in deficit spending by a three-fifths majority in both houses of Congress. This has raised the alarming possibility of a political minority using a disaster as an opportunity for holding the nation hostage to its own demands. From what I have seen of Congress, I believe it.

If the amendment should fail - either in the Senate or in the states - the public would become very angry, at least for the short term. However, it would by no means be a triumph for the status quo. On the contrary, it would almost certainly increase the pressure to achieve noticeable results this year. This might mean, for starters, an end to any talk of increased defense spending or tax cuts. It might even mean a serious look at the major sources of federal spending. Under these circumstances, at least, Democrats would not have much to lose by taking the initiative.

Right now the GOP has that initiative. They have already proposed some $17 billion in cuts in social programs, including such non-controversial programs as school lunches and law enforcement. In return they propose giving money to state and local governments earmarked for these purposes. This is called giving "block grants" and is in keeping with the general spirit of transferring power from the federal level to the state level. Cynic that I am, I strongly suspect that in a few years, with budgetary constraints growing ever stronger and the public memory getting ever shorter, these "block grants" will be declared "pork," execrated, and cut from the budget, quite possibly by the same people who are now recommending them.

Supporters of the amendment believe that it is necessary, like Shakespeare's Coriolanus, "to [rink] a body with a dangerous physic / That's sure of death without it." For the past few years, in the absence of any constitutional amendment, the government has wrestled with the problem of the budget deficit, and the results give about as much reason for despair and hope. Frankly, if that one vote in the Senate were mine, I don't know what I'd do. Ω

To the Editor, continued

Thanks for the support

I would like to take this time to thank all of those individuals who supported me in my campaign for SGA Secretary. I want to let everyone know that their concerns are noted, and the votes that I did receive are still appreciated. If I could, I would like to take some time to thank some individuals and organizations that supported me throughout my campaign. To my brothers in Phi Delta Theta, I want to say thank you for your support and encouragement. To the sisters of Cleopatra's Daughters, your opinions and votes were always valued. To the faculty who took time out of their busy schedules to ask me about my campaign and wish me good luck, thank you. To those people who congratulated me on my Elm essay and speech, your comments were appreciated.

What I realize is that although my campaign is over, it does not mean my campaign promises must die with it. What I promised the student body was service, and I will be a man of my word. Thus I promise the College that in the seven organizations I am currently involved in (five in which I serve as an officer), I will continue to serve to the best of my ability.

I congratulate Erica, Liz, Doug, and Sibrylnée on attaining their new offices, and wish them the best of luck. I offer thanks to Jamie, Sonja, Sharla, and Ken for jobs well done. To the campus and those that supported me, my undying gratitude.

- Steve Dashiell

Kevin and the airwaves

The purpose of this letter can be summed up in one sentence: I want a radio station. I think it would just totally rule to have a campus radio station. For one thing, it would add a new dimension to the entertainment scene at Washington College. We've had a lot of complaints about the lack of activity. I could go all high and mighty here and pretend that college students wouldn't drink if they had something better to do. But that's just a lie. I just want a radio station! I want one bad! It would be great for the college, because they could run public service announcements and increase the communication network on campus. We've already got a big radio tower parked out near Caroline, so I think we should use it. We should all rally together and get a radio station. It would be so fun. Give me a radio station! I want one! Thank you for time.

-Kevin James Hoffman

"Fessler" from 2

I'm far from certain that the tenure issue has any bearing on the Fessler Case. However, given the painfully inadequate justifications supplied by 'the powers that be' (as cited by Mr. Walton, Ms. Chiarchiaro, and Mr. Reyero in the above mentioned issue) we are left to speculate as to the 'real' reasons on our own. I myself will join in the plea of Max, Mitsuyoshi, Christina, and Mark in demanding a clear explanation of the decision. But I would also entreat everyone involved to ask themselves why they want Fessler to stay. Is it because she is a great professor whose classes challenge students to a greater understanding of literature? Or is it because she is a great person whose friendship makes us reluctant to see her go?

-Brian Matheson

The McLain Program in Environmental Studies presents
Fish Habitat Assessment in Maryland Streams and Estuaries
Dr. Ronald Klauda, Chesapeake Bay Research and Monitoring Division, DNR
Wednesday, March 8, Hynson Lounge, 7:30 p.m.

"Campaign" from 1

To date, the Senior Class has already raised $5,525 from 67 Seniors, which amounts to a 43% participation rate, and 42 new Jr. 1782 Society members committing $100 or more.

Last year's Senior Class raised only $2,441 by graduation weekend, and could muster only 28% participation. Apparently more motivated and united, the Class of 1995 is now striving to make itself the Senior Class with the most successful Campaign in Washington College history. Achieving this goal requires the support of every senior, however, for participation is more important than the total number of dollars raised.

The Senior Campaign Committee would like to thank those members of the Class of 1995 listed below who have already made a commitment to the future of their alma mater and to encourage those who have not yet done so to consider making a gift or pledge when they are contacted by a Committee member. (Don't forget a pledge can simply be signed off as part of the security deposit!) Ω

Class of '95 Senior Campaign contributors

Renee Alten
Tiffany Altizer
James Baker
Amy Barrell
Christy Belliveau
William Bloom
Paul Briggs
Dawn Brown
Lisa Brown
Charles Bucknor
Cheryl Bull
Alicia Carberry
Diana Clausen
Chadwick Cunningham
Susan Czechowski
Yang Da
James Delahay
April DeMar
Joseph Derbis
Paula DeStefano
Beverly Diaz
Jennifer Dougherty
Amy Draper
Rachael Fink
Suzanne Fischer
Christopher Freisheim
Alexandra Geller
David George
Iline Goldsmith
Kenneth Griffin
Jennifer Hagey
Amy Hanes
Chris Hargett
Laura K. Heidel
Anthony Higgins
Susan Himmelheber
Susan Huntley
Victoria Kealy
Cary Kelly
Julie Klein
Brett Kopay
Renee Kuhnel
Jemima LaClair
Lindsey Ledwin
Caren Lee
Richard McKee
Nancy Millhouser
Keith Morgan
Marcia Mowbray
Jason Myers
Andrea Nolan
Jason Paige
Cleo Patterson
Sharla Ponder
Deepak Raja
Catherine Rogers
Brett Showalter
Debra Spence
Amy Swain
Jason Truax
Kim Van Keuren
Nicole Van Wheel
Tina Welch
Melissa Wentzell
Mary Price Wick
Amie Wiseley
Allison Worrell
Karen Wright

Students respond to TAFFY report

Kate Meagher

Students met with the members of the Task Force for the First-year Experience on Tuesday to ask questions and make suggestions regarding the task force's plan, tentatively titled "Connections to an Expanding World" (see the entire plan in the February 17 issue of The Elm), which will be presented to the Faculty for a vote at Monday's Faculty meeting.

The task force, which consists of Dean of Student Affairs Maureen McIntire, Assistant Professor of the Department of Psychology Kevin McKillop, Assistant Dean Beverly Wolff, Assistant Professor of the Department of Mathematics Louise Amick, Vice President for Admissions and Enrollment Management Kevin Coveney, Dean Joachim Scholz, Chair of the English Department Bennett Lamond, Chair of the Sociology Department Steven Cades, and W.C. sophomore Leanne Cole, Siu Yee Ng, and Catherine Langan, solicited student reaction to the plan on which it has been working all year.

Mark Reyero was the first student to speak. He asked whether the Sophomore Writing Obligation had any place in the proposed program.

McKillop answered that SWO will be replaced by the "Global Perspective" courses for second-year students. These classes will be "highly writing-intensive," said McKillop.

Tara McKee expressed concern about the fact that the program focuses on the geographical region in which Washington College exists. She found the perspective narrow for a liberal arts school.

Wolff answered that the program will provide students with the opportunity to explore all aspects of the region, which, as Lamond pointed out, includes the urban centers of the District of Columbia, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Wilmington.

Sonja Wilson suggested the Customs House, located on the Chester River, as a good facility for study of the region. Scholz answered that it was a "marvelous place" for study, but that the ownership of the Customs House remains unsettled.

Bob Brown inquired about the suggested use of adjuncts in easing the strain on departments. He was concerned about the quality of education provided by adjuncts.

"Your concern is a valid one," said Scholz. He assured Brown that adjuncts hired will be qualified, as have all hired in the past. Scholz said that the use of adjuncts is no long-term solution, and that departments should be able to absorb the extra courses eventually. With few exceptions, adjuncts will not be hired to teach courses in the new program.

Cades pointed out that adjunct help does not mean inferior help. He mentioned Almon Barrell and Beth McCoy as valuable teachers as well as adjuncts.

Tara McKee asked whether all of the professors teaching courses in the new program would be required to use the same approach and curriculum. Cades outlined the three common threads which will run through every TAFFY course. Every course will fit the overall theme of the program; every course will be the brainchild of the professor, thus the subject will be one which is exciting to the professor; and every course will include a skills component. The skills component includes formal instruction in effective analysis of information, use of computers in course work, and use of the library.

Several students asked about AP and transfer credits. The new program would not affect the treatment of these credits. Students entering Washington College in their sophomore year will not be required to take the freshman courses.

Brown asked if the proposed program was considered a good program for higher education on the whole or if it was one designed with only Washington College in mind.

Coveney responded, saying that TAFFY examined the first-year programs of various peer institutions to get an idea of what would be good for Washington College. Aware "that it would not be prudent to try to copy" another school's program, TAFFY created "something that was appropriate for Washington College," said Coveney. He predicts that current students will be suffering from "curriculum envy" when the new program is implemented. A first-year program like the one proposed by TAFFY is something "that we can publicize, market, and promote," Coveney added.

A student asked if TAFFY had considered eliminating the requirement that a two-semester sequence be completed to fulfill distributives. Without this requirement, a student would be able to take one semester of history and one semester of psychology in order to fulfill the social sciences requirement. McIntire said that, in looking through the catalogues of other schools, it was found that many do not require students to complete the two-semester sequence in order to get distribution credit. TAFFY will consider eliminating the requirement in future meetings.

Several students expressed their support of the plan, and SGA Vice President Sonja Wilson proposed a resolution supporting the TAFFY plan, and the resolution was passed unanimously by the SGA.

The task force welcomes input from students. Contact a member of the task force or BlitzMail "TAFFY" with any questions, comments, or suggestions. Ω the new Treasurer, "I'm really looking forward to working with Liz Likens as President. She's now the new SGA Treasurer, and she's basically been the wind beneath my wings as far as my run for Treasurer." Johnson will inherit a treasury which is in relatively good standing. According to the new Treasurer, "the budget is almost balanced."

"SGA" from 1

With all the events of the past year, all the new Executives plan to make student input a very high priority. Beckworth said one of his goals is to "work at getting more people involved, and not just have the Executive board do everything. Like I said in my speech, I'll be listening for the concerns of the students." After a year's experience as the Student Life Chair, Moran looks forward to doing "a more efficient job, because I'll spend less time worrying about the incidentals like how to get stuff registered and how to actually book a band," therefore being free to devote "more energy into new ideas." Moran can also look forward to the benefits of the SGA Weekend Activities Survey. "I'm going to have the survey, hopefully, behind me, so I know, when I do something, it's what some percentage of the student body requested."

Some of the new officials have already begun to construct an agenda for the approaching future. Beckworth is planning to make it a top priority to intensify the SGA's involvement with the Student Academic Board. Said the new V.P., "I feel that is another way students can voice their concerns." Citing the example of improvements in the Psychology department in 1992 (Dr. Acocella was hired and more equipment was purchased, as proof of the SAB's potential efficacy, Beckworth said that "the SAB is a communication link that we could have used more (in the past two years), and I want to try to use it more next year." Likens is "looking into doing some procedural changes of student input and evaluation." The current and future Executives will hold a joint meeting on Tuesday. According to Likens, "we're going to sit down and just brainstorm on ideas." One of Moran's main goals is to "start something where I can pass on some sort of rigidity to the next (Student Life Chair), just so it'll be more of an office and less a band-hiring thing that it's been before."

The new Executives will work in tandem with the current board from now until Spring Break, and they will take over the reigns of the SGA when classes reconvene. Hopefully, all the experience and ambition of these new officials will translate into a productive year in W.C.'s Student Government. Ω from whom. The specifics of this will be worked out by next year's SGA, which I hope will contain many of you. I encourage any students to continue to voice all of our support for Audrey Fessler, but I think it inappropriate for that to come from this body.

"Fessler case" from 1

PROPOSAL- The following is my recommendation- This will be an issue for the next SGA exec board to address through this year and into next. The responsibility of implementation will fall to the senate.

I propose that we use existing college channels to involve student voice in a systematic way. Existing aids to this end are the Academic Council, Student Advisory Board, and the Departmental Honor Societies. Using these and expanding on them can enable the SGA to make damn sure this current situation will not be repeated. This is a goal to which the SGA should aspire.

In my two years as president, my primary interest has always been the student body. In my experience and judgment, and as your president, I truly believe this to be in the best interest of the students of Washington College."

"I agree with a lot of what you said," said Bob Brown. He said that the SGA should work to "guarantee that next time a position is threatened, that we as a body have a system we can implement."

"I feel that we got played like a violin," said Tyler McCarthy. "We could've stayed a cohesive body, but the administration gave us the run-around, and we listened to them. We got beat because we didn't stand up when we should've."

Baker pointed to the transition from the administration of President Charles Trout to that of Acting President John Toll as "the thing that really did us in." Baker said that Toll said from the beginning of his presidency that he would not change the decision made by his predecessor.

McCarthy noted that Toll's stand "was the first straight answer" the students received. Referring to Trout's forum with the SGA, McCarthy said that Trout "came in and said 'I'm wonderful; I'm leaving; I'm sorry.'"

McCarthy asked what Baker proposed. Baker suggested that the SGA establish "something like Academic Council" through the Student Academic Board. He recommended establishing a dialogue with the administration in advance of the occurrence of any hiring and firing questions.

McCarthy pointed out that the fight was one for the retention of one professor, not a position.

"We were fighting for Fessler," said McCarthy. He added that it may be 10 or 20 years before another such situation occurs. Brown said that a valuable teacher is lost every year, and that the SGA can work now to make sure it will not happen again. Ω

In Chestertown for the summer?

Need a job? Work for WCDS!

Applications are now being accepted from students interested in working for the Washington College Dining Services - Summer Conference Program. Applications are available in any WCDS office and must be returned to the Dining Hall by Friday, March 31. Summer Conference employment will begin on Monday, May 15 and end Thursday August 17. If you have any questions please feel free to contact Darrell Jester at x. 7785.

The William James Forum presents

Human Rights: A global update

A lecture by William F. Schulz, Executive Director, Amnesty International USA

Tuesday, March 7, 7:30 p.m., Hynson Lounge

Loyola

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

laundry drycleaning

Park

RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD. 21620

room size carpets

next to the court house

c.r.u.d.

creative ranting under duress

by Marianne Culbertson

The May Pole has rotted and fallen from grace and the Freshman prospective English majors are non-alcoholics that frequent Night Shift (a nudie bar) instead of the Literary House. Blackheaven was dead because everyone was sick or went home or was setting up for Birthday Ball. The Great Gatsby Gala was great except for the drunken idiots who puked all over the place. Aside from actual vomiting, there were alcoholic fools who totally screwed up the Flapper dance. Why no one stopped them I don't have any idea because it made our College look like it had regressed to the level of a high school. I don't think anyone appreciates paying money to attend a classy event. No one wants to get dressed up to watch drunks try to be the center of attention by falling on their faces.

The English department is losing the high esteem that it had when I arrived because there are so many Chemistry and Biology majors. I realize that the College is trying to become more rounded but at this time I am addressing the literary programs at this Liberal Arts college. The Elm is practically begging for writers and no one wants to write for the paper. Where are the people who came to Sophie Kerr weekend last year? I know that if they are studying 24/7 they should at least take a break to spend some time doing something that they came here for. I am absolutely sure that Freshmen do not have half as much work as Seniors and should be able to assert themselves in the social literary community. Why do all these people come here for the English and Literary majors if they don't care enough to contribute their work? If all the people in Kent are as "Artsy" as they present themselves to be, why are most of them not doing anything with the work they produce? I know of several people over there who are writers but have not as of yet been shown up to share something with the Literary community. Is everyone else just faking it? The Visual Artists' Union is basically non-existent at this point and I know that all the Art majors did not disappear with Tex.

I believe that this is all due to lack of motivation on the part of the student body. The only motivated groups of people on this campus seem to be the SGA and the Musicians' Union. I can't believe I'm finally justified in saying this, but this year has been the best year for the SGA. They brought the Winebottles twice and all kinds of freaky stuff like Virtual Reality to the Cove. In addition, I hear Earth Day is going to blow us out of the bong little town we're all stuck in. The Musicians' Union has brought a fantastic act in Thursday nights at the Open Mike Night at the Coffeehouse where writers and musicians alike have the chance to display their talents.

I believe that it is a privilege to have the opportunities that we English majors and writers do. We have a whole house, a Writers' Union, the chance to win the Sophie Kerr Prize at the end of our four years here, and the Writers' Union Award. The Writers' Union provides funding for all students who want to put out literary magazines. Only two people have successfully put out their own lit mag, and they work together so it's only one magazine. I know that there are people out there who could put an entire magazine together of students' artwork. The students should want to work together to make this College a funky and exciting place to be. I know that after paying $21,000 to go here I want to have a reason to come back. Ω

Campus Voices

Question by Kevin Hoffman. Photos by Kelli Youngblood. Question administered by Sarah Bell.

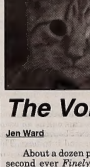
This Week's Questions: What would be the best part of having your own cult? As a leader of that cult, what talk show would you choose to go on?

People would listen to you with an open mind. They wouldn't think you were a kook. I would go on Jerry Springer.

Amy Hoffman, Freshman

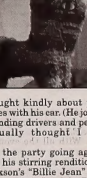
That they would think I was God. Definitely Ricki Lake.

Aubrey Fox, Freshman



As the great pharaoh Benjamin T. Hinkle once said, "Foot massages make everything worthwhile." I'd go on any talk show except Oprah. She's too much like a mom to me. I'd feel guilty.

Mike Buccino, Freshman



The best part would be brainwashing everyone, and I would go on Jerry Springer.

Gretchen Blitz, Junior

The chicks. Ricki Lake; she's a babe... but I usually prefer blondes.

Truman Youngblood, Sophomore

The health and dental benefits. I would go Conan O'Brien because I don't want too many people finding out about me.

Purple Pedro, Elm mascot

The Vomit Vender: Part Deux

Jen Ward

About a dozen people attended the second ever Finely Calibrated Vomit Vender reception last Thursday, February 23. Held at the Lit House, the reception started at 8 p.m., and honored the second publication of the famous Vomit twins, Jodie Clark and Ryan Walker.

This issue of The Vomit Vender differs from the first one primarily in its format: three pretty colors of paper are folded in an enticing array of page numbers, contents, and the name of the publication. The truly unique aspect of the 12-page magazine, however, is the sandpaper binding along the left side. This ingenious marketing technique enables the pamphlet to assume much more than just the role of magazine: you can shape your nails, sand furniture, and even file your way out of jail, if necessary. ("Mom, Dad, I'm in jail. Send me some Vomit Venders!") Even Kevin Hoffman, who made a brief appearance at the reception, commented, "New magazines. New format. Nice." Mike Kaylor, Lit House printing god, was a bit more prehensive: "Uh-oh. The Puke Purveyor."

Featured in this issue are the works of Paul Briggs, Pat Geissel, Jen Ward, Rob Moran, Katie Degentesh and her mom (who is 72% cooler than YOUR mom), George Washington, and Andrea Nolan. Each writer was awarded commemorative T-shirts displaying The Finely Calibrated Vomit Vender insignia and its catchy slogan, "72% Cooler Than Your Mama."

The evening got off to a turbulent start when Andrea Nolan threatened Jodie Clark that her first boyfriend could beat up Jodie's first boyfriend any day of the week. Jodie, pursing her lips and looking at the floor, reluctantly agreed. Tension mounted when Aaron Pierce walked in and bet both Andrea and Jodie that his grandma could beat up both their grandmas with her hands tied behind her back. No news yet as to this one, but rest assured that when and if the story breaks, The Elm will be on top of it.

Conversation then turned to a lighter note. Andrea described (in remarkable detail) a National Geographic special on elephants she had seen. (If you see Andrea around campus, ask her to tell you about it. Pay particular attention to her hand motions — they're incredible ...) The elephant discussion led the way for other interesting animal shows. One reception-goer boasted of a special on a species of bird which has intercourse in mid-flight. "I think I've seen that," Paul Briggs commented.

Paul, in fact, entertained the reception with several anecdotes from his family history. If you see him, ask him to tell you about his Uncle Robert in the Navy, Tony and Luke (who are not in the Navy), Grant the psychiatrist, and Marshall, the man with PMS. (Paul's hand motions run a close second to Andrea's ...) But don't ask him to hum, though. "Humming is not my forte," he said.

This realization came about when renditions of the "Lassie" theme song went around the room. While Katie Degentesh whistled it, Andrea remembered the days of old when she had a crush on Timmy. ("Studmuffin" was the precise term she affectionately used.) This retrospect led to mass reminiscing: ET was a popular topic, as was Pacman, Atari, Apple IIEs, and 3-2-1 Contact.

There was one teary-eyed moment during the reception when Jodie and Pete Torigoe discovered they were long lost relations. This came out with the realization that they both had relatives who called them "Sweet Petuti." Their reunion was best summed up in Jodie's immortal words: "No way! I thought I was the only Sweet Petuti!"

As the evening wore on, there were a few lulls in the conversation. Katie pined for "Seinfeld" while Jodie wistfully dreamed of diagramming sentences. Andrea remembered the hall picture she was missing, and Ryan, the Expert Emergency Braker of W.C., thought kindly about past misadventures with his car. (He joked, "[The surrounding drivers and pedestrians] actually thought I had brakes!")

Paul got the party going again, though, with his stirring rendition of Michael Jackson's "Billie Jean" and the theme song from "JJ and the Zips." (Paul, by the way, sings a lot better than JJ and the Zips.) In any case, the crowd went wild. Jodie laughed so hard that she remarked, "Oh, I really think I'm going to vomit."

That would have been a rather poetic way to end the evening. However, some less fortunate souls left The Vomit Vender reception rather distraught. Eva Kaplan-Leiserson moaned, "Oh no. Now I have JJ and the Zips stuck in my head!"

Ryan Walker later reflected on the evening: "It was jolly. Best thing since creamed chipped beef. But there should have been more llamas." Ω

From the editors of The Vomit Vender:

Hopefully we will regurgitate once more by the end of the semester. Please take advantage of what may be your last chance to spew. We will wash the cars of those published; if you lack a car, we'll offer a comparable substitute.

Frederick Douglass: An Eastern Shore native

Erica Estep

If the name Frederick Douglass does not ring a bell with you, than you must take a visit to our Literary House, where a portrait of him can be found, hanging amongst the other historical portraits and documents. There is also a merit-based scholarship named after Douglass, awarded to qualified African-American students on the basis of academic and personal achievement.

Besides the above-noted presence of Douglass, he can also be found within W.C.'s classroom walls, where professors and students read his many powerful works.

For those who may not know exactly who Frederick Douglass is and why he is seen as such an important part of our nation's history, here is a brief summary of his life and his accomplishments.

Frederick Douglass, a Black American, was born to a slave mother on Maryland's Eastern Shore, in Talbot County, in February 1817. It is presumed, according to Douglass's own works and other historical documents, that Douglass's father was a white plantation owner. Douglass's early life was spent in slavery on Eastern Shore plantations and at the age of eight he was sent to Baltimore, MD as a house servant, where he in turn learned to read and write, a skill long prohibited to slaves.

On Sept. 3, 1838, disguised as a sailor, he escaped from his bondage and married Anna Murray, a free black woman who helped plot his escape. Douglass devoted his life to abolishing slavery and later to winning full equality for all African-Americans. In doing so, he became one of the most influential black leaders of his generation.

Some of Douglass's accomplishments were the publishing of his own narrative (which he did under great risk of reenslavement as a fugitive slave) and publishing, as a follow-up to this narrative My Bondage and My Freedom, in 1855. With money from lectures on slavery and women's rights, Douglass raised enough money to buy his freedom. Upon return to his native shores, he founded the famous newspaper The North Star. Responding to the outbreak of the Civil War, Douglass assisted President Lincoln in recruiting the celebrated 54th and 55th Massachusetts Negro regiments. In 1871, during the Reconstruction period, he was appointed to the territorial legislature of the District of Columbia; in 1877, after a short term as police commissioner of D.C., he was appointed marshal.

Eight years later, in return for his support of the presidential campaign of Benjamin Harrison, Douglass was appointed U.S. Minister Resident and Consul General to the Republic of Haiti. However, when he saw his efforts being undermined by American businessmen interested solely in exploiting Haiti, he resigned his post.

East of the Anacostia River, Douglass had purchased a fine estate, Cedar Hill, it is here that this fine upstanding American citizen died in 1895 knowing that a good many blacks were not much better off than they had been.

These are only a few of Douglass's accomplishments, but his legacy of being in eloquent opposition to this country's racial prejudices serves as inspirational platform for the Civil Rights Movement of the 20th century.

On Aug. 3, 1869, Douglass delivered one of his finest and most famous speeches, "We Are Not Yet Quite Free," stating:

"It is true that we are no longer slaves, but it is equally true that we are not yet quite free. We have been turned out of the house of bondage, but we have not yet been fully admitted to the glorious temple of American liberty. We are still in a transition state and the future is shrouded in doubt and danger."

Frederick Douglass, a Black American citizen, writer, lecturer, and abolitionist deserves, along with hundreds of other important African-Americans who believed in racial and human equality, acknowledgment not only in the month of February, but throughout the year. So often we as individuals and a nation as a whole forget the number of human beings who had to suffer under the threat of brutal physical and mental torment.

Frederick Douglass was one of many former slaves who took the initiative to write and speak on the effects of the peculiar institution, on himself as a black man, and on others. For this reason, and for many others, Douglass should be commemorated for his efforts trying to uplift the black race and trying to instill good solid moral values, which our country should live by. Ω

Editor's note: Information for this article was gleaned from the Washington Afro-American Newspaper and The Negro Almanac.

Summer Jobs:

Here, there, and everywhere

Beth Moser

Once again the knowledgeable staff of the Spanish House's Career and Development Center are looking out for W.C.'s employment situation. On February 23, Vicky Sawyer held her second informal meeting in the CAC Forum. This time she was concentrating on summer job opportunities. Her table held only a small percentage of the numerous possibilities found in the Career Center.

The opportunities ranged from cruise line employment (both on and off the water), to the old-time favorite of camp counseling all around the country. For the cruise lines there is an entire book concentrating on skills and contacts. I can personally guarantee that there are more jobs than one ever imagined.

The Federal government is always looking for willing participants in many of their offices and branches. As with many federal applications, they need to be in near the beginning of March. It is a very wise idea to look into any summer positions around the beginning of the spring semester.

For all you beach bums, there is an abundance of jobs available in Ocean City, MD and New Jersey as well as in Delaware. Again, time is the deciding factor. As with internships, look for something you will enjoy, although money is also important.

However, if money is not your primary concern or you have a generous relative in the picture, jobs abroad are available, legally. These jobs can be found in hotels, restaurants, and even agricultural sites throughout Australia, England, Germany, and many more places. If you have a sincere interest or talent with languages, this could be the opportunity you are looking for. The Career Center is in possession of an entire book focusing on employment found just in Great Britain and another on countries worldwide. Knowledge of a foreign language may even aid you in finding a job teaching or assisting with foreigners at home.

The old reliable YMCA is, as always, holding numerous summer camps varying from sports to arts and crafts. Lifeguards, here is a good place to look. Some camps even offer college credit for your participation.

The diligent workers at the Career Center also have a 24 hour, 7 day a week number to call for jobs: the "Job Hotline." The Center is open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, with additional hours on Wednesdays from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. It is never too early to start looking. School is out in roughly 10 weeks. Ω

A little help makes all the difference

Alison Parks

Interested in a career of teaching? Want to make a difference for a young student? Need credit hours for community service? Well here's a chance to get involved in a great cause that is not only fun and easy to do but helps the Chestertown community as well. What is this beneficial program? Target Tutoring, of course. Although the focus of the program is to help those students grades 3-6 at local elementary and middle schools, the program is looking for students of all majors who are willing just to spend time with these kids and provide a role model for better learning. In this rewarding experience the tutor and student are matched on a one-on-one basis to provide a comfortable atmosphere. The bond between the tutor and student is encouraged to form through many of the games and snack times that the program provides, paid for through our own SGA's funding. Furthermore, this program only requires a commitment of one to two days a week to be a friend and teacher. Sessions include: Mondays and Wednesdays, 3:30 – 5 p.m., and Tuesday and Thursday, 4 – 5:30 p.m. The facts from a recent survey taken by a W.C. student show that this program works and has increased the performance of local children in elementary and middle school. As a result of this success, neighboring schools have asked to join our Target Tutoring Program, but to provide the level of achievement that the program ensures, more tutors are needed. Take advantage of this wonderful experience and help out! All it takes is a little dedication and a lot of care. To join, get in contact with Penny Chaney, Shawntel Fitzgerald, Miriam Farkas, Amanda Barnes, or Amanda Kirby. Ω

We Proudly Serve STARBUCKS COFFEE

COFFEE ANYONE?

The "Filler Up" Club - Buy 6 coffees, get 7th FREE.

The Ugly Mug Club - Leave your mug here and we'll discount your coffee.

What's in the bakery this week...
•Focaccia •caramel cheesecake •quiche
•bagels •"big" cookies •nut rolls •mocha brownies •oatmeal blueberry muffins
•chocolate pecan tart •fruit pastries
•apple tart •mini angel cakes

10% discount with student I.D.

the Cellar
coffee bar & bakery

NOW OPEN DOWNSTAIRS AT THE IMPERIAL HOTEL 778-5600

Take a Stroll down WINE ALLEY

ALL WINES DISCOUNTED EVERY DAY

Wine Alley features over 175 wine selections from around the world!

Featured Vineyard of the Week
DeLoach, Sonoma County
White Zinfandel '94 $6.75
Gewurztraminer E.H. '93 $7.75
Fume Blanc '93 $9.00
Chardonnay '92 $14.00
Cabernet Sauvignon '90 $14.74
Zinfandel '93 $11.50
additional 10% off all case orders

Inquire about the wine society. Casual tastings, great comraderie, good fun. Glorious wine dinners matching Rodney's great American food with the great wines of the world.

Zagat's 95 calls these dinners "unsurpassable"

Wines available from $4.99 to $70.00 a bottle
Discounts for case orders.

The Percussion Group

Al Otte, Jim Culley and Rusty Burge from the College-Conservatory of the University of Cincinnati

Monday, March 6, 8 p.m., Tawes Theatre

"Their virtuoso command of every instrument, superb sense of timing, and above all, their unfailing sensitive response to the expressive content of each work made this unusual concert a thoroughly rewarding and intensely musical experience." - The New

Dropped A Whole Degree

Aaron Pierce

And it was All right … Uncle Lou and the Boxed Set of Doom …

Lou Reed rocks my world. As far I know, and as much as I care to sus- ect, I am the only person in Chestertown who actually owns his oxed set, Between Thought and xpression: The Lou Reed Anthology. asir, the Rock n' Roll animal himself as his own boxed set, and I can say ith all honesty that not a week goes y where I don't listen to at least one f the three disks included in it. It is a osterful retrospective of one of the eats of Rock n' Roll (Note: I don't re- ly care what you have to say about Brian).

Between Thought and Expression executed with utmost professional- m, the same professionalism that I ore come to expect from Uncle Lou. ranged chronologically, the set eaves from his post-Velvet nderground work (seven of the 15 ucks on the first disk were solo Velvet tunes), to some of his more ob- cure later work. The handy booklet hat is included with the set provides ertinent skeletons of background in- rmation, pictures, quotes, and mis- llany to make the heart of every Lou eed fan beat a little faster.

Perhaps the true beauty of the set es in its honesty. Unlike most boxed ts that serve as little more than haracterless collections of a band's greatest hits, the Lou Reed anthology is a true retrospective. As much as I hate to admit it, Lou has done some BAD stuff in his time (I wince every time I think of Street Hassle). This an- thology doesn't ignore Lou's lesser work. Instead, it presents to the lis- tener an honest and overall complete picture of his musical life and times, both the good and the bad. The good thing about this is that you have the opportunity to preview key songs be- fore you go and shell out the 12 to 15 dollars for the whole album.

Don't get me wrong, though. The bad tunes are few and far between. The majority of this set is Lou at his best. There are even a few surprises to be found. Among these is a live version of the Velvet Underground classic "Heroin" that tops out at around 12 minutes. This version, the "Super Smacked-Up Version" as I have dubbed it, is heavier and more intense than the original. Lou drags a bit, but the drag is in character (I mean come on, it's a song about shooting heroin).

Some of the tunes on this set are serious classics. "Oh Jim" goes from a bass driven, funky-horn kinda num- ber into an easy acoustic semi-ballad that will stick with you for days (the reverb on the vocals really give the song its charm). As would be expected, "Walk on the Wild Side," "Satellite of Love," and "Sweet Jane," take their places amist some of Lou's lesser- known stuff. Perhaps the best tune on the album, however, is "Kicks." This is THE Reed sound at its finest: under- stated guitar, subtly funky bass, and mellow vocals driven by the kind of drums that could make a grown man cry. Ah, Lou is the man.

The list of songs included in this set is extensive. I've never bothered to figure out exactly how many minutes of music you get, but it's got to be near three hours worth. Obviously, I would suggest buying this set, but if you don't have the funds or are not a die- hard Lou Reed fan, you might want to check out some of his other albums. Try the classic Transformer, produced by David Bowie. Or, for the less ambi- tious, there's always Walk on the Wild Side: The Best of Lou Reed. Normally, I try not to endorse "Best of" albums, but this one is actually worthwhile. Or, if you think you can take it, try Metal Machine Music … it's good stuff, trust me. Ω

Lehman Engel:

Teacher, friend and creator

by Weissman

Lehman Engel was a teacher. Lehman taught musical theatre. For those students who are trying to de- cide what and with whom to study, Lehman provides a model and a guide to that choice. Of any teacher a poten- tial student should ask two questions. Who were and are your other stu- dents? What do those students think of you after your control over their lives (in the form of grades and other evaluations) has ended? Why these two questions? They speak to the most important concerns a student can have: "Who am I to become?" and "How will I feel about those who made or that way?"

Lehman's students have written (book and/or lyrics and/or music) such shows as A Chorus Line, Nine, Little Shop of Horrors, Beauty and The Beast, The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas, and Jelly's Last Jam. (This is just the short list.) Another of his stu- dents has written the definitive book on the musical theatre, Better Foot Forward, and yet another one is the leading producer of Broadway cast al- bums. Still another is currently the as- sociate director of "Sunset Boulevard." I have a wonderful picture of him working with a very young Barbra Streisand as she was becoming Miss Marmelstein and a star.

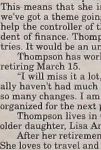
Students loved Lehman. He could make you furious. He was maddening, opinionated, and, worst of all, usually right. He was bitchy, ruthless and, best of all, totally devoted to his chil- dren. He created his own language of discourse. Ask any of his former stu- dents what "green sequin dress" means and they can tell you in far fewer words than it took Aristotle in The Poetics. Lehman used to say his students were his family. We were and still are. When Lehman was dying of cancer, week after week, twenty-four hours a day, at least one of his stu- dents was with him. They ranged from a young new writer to a Pulitzer Prize winner. We did it because we cared; we also did it because we couldn't bear to miss a tidbit of either wisdom or gos- sip.

Lehman Engel lived from 1910 to 1982. He was musical director on Broadway of decades of musicals. He recorded many others. He founded the BMI musical theatre workshop (now the BMI/Lehman Engel Musical Theatre Workshop). He worked with many of the major talents of the golden age of musical theatre. Yet he devoted most of his last twenty years to students. He knew it took a long long time to create a musical theatre writer. He knew that many of his stu- dents would only blossom long after he had died. That never seemed to mat- ter to him.

How does one evaluate a teacher? Ask him or her students. You will know who those people are — they will in- clude the leading people in that field. That answers the first question I posed. The answer to the second is as easy, those former students will be de- lighted to let you know who taught them.

Eudora Welty said that Lehman knew how magic was made. He did and he let his students in on the se- cret. Ω

Andy's



Friday, March 3 • Sarah Greene
NYC singer-songwriter, blues - pop
Saturday, March 4 • Pete & Maura Kennedy
"Pete is the quintessential guitarist" - Nanci Griffith
Thursday, March 9 • Billy Breslin
The man with the trick dog is back!

Come join in the laughter!

Comedy Night

Student Center, March 3

9:30 – 10 p.m. • Student Jokes.
Microphone open to students-If you have any good jokes or funny stories, or impersonations.
10 p.m. – • Professional Comedians!
The Rev. John Payne.
He is "a young Seinfeld on crack", "a handsome young Dangerfield" and a college student in Baltimore.
Opening act - Joel Klein.
This ex-clown dazzles and delights audiences as he turns balloon animals into latex sex toys while having the audience participate in his creations and mortifications.
Headliner -Cindy Heidel.
She has worked nationally, has been doing stand-up for the past seven years, and has done numerous television appearances.

Washington College

Staff Profile

Barbara Thompson is the administrative assistant in the business office. This means that she is in charge of bookkeeping and payroll (hey, I think we've got a theme going here). She also performs operating statements that help the controller of the college to send more statements to the vice-presi- dent of finance. Thompson also finances the budget and makes journal en- tries. It would be an understatement to say that she was busy.

Thompson has worked here at Washington College for 41 YEARS! She is retiring March 15.

"I will miss it a lot," says Thompson. "I have enjoyed bookkeeping. I re- ally haven't had much time to think about my retirement. There have been so many changes. I am just trying to keep my work up so everything will be organized for the next person who comes in here."

Thompson lives in Chestertown with her husband Willard. She has one older daughter, Lisa Ann, who graduated from Washington College.

After her retirement, Thompson is leaving for Florida with her husband. She loves to travel and her ambition is to see all of the United States. She is also an avid shopper, her favorite campsite being Martin Neck State Park and Holiday Park. Besides traveling, she enjoys doing yard work and playing with her flowers.

Thompson belongs to the Eastern Star, a charity organization that does projects for Heart and Cancer Funds and Hospice.

There will be a reception for Barbara Thompson on March 15 and all are invited.

"As I said before, I like bookkeeping because when you finish, you know what the end result is. I would like to express how grateful I am to have the kind of co-workers that we have in the business office. We all have worked to- gether to produce the final product. And we have all pulled together to make the business office function properly."

Well Mrs. Thompson, we will all miss you and good luck in your quest to see the world.

Notes

by Andrea Nolan

On Tuesday, as I was stomping through the mud and pondering many great thoughts, I nearly stepped on a butterfly. I noticed it soon enough, and diverted my step around the motionless creature perched on the ground. Not a remarkable act in any way, and yet the question exists — why bother? My sparing that butterfly's life will not make the ecosystem any sounder. Quite possibly another person strolling by crunched it, or it alighted into the air, only to be snatched by some hungry bird looking for a snack. Why, then, should I avoid crunching that lowly insect?

It is easy to understand why one shouldn't slaughter an animal to extinction. When a species is extinguished the loss is immense. In this species loss, the ecosystem loses an element of its bio-diversity, thereby weakening the web of life. Furthermore, extinction forever wipes a species from the earth. It does not allow that species to evolve, to be naturally re-speciated through the eons. Rather, it takes the unique genetic make-up of a creature and banishes it forever from the earth. This is a murder above all murders — a crime against the earth of immense proportions.

But what of killing a single butterfly, one of millions? What is terribly wrong in that act which would not appear to adversely affect anything, except for perhaps the butterfly itself. I propose that what is affected is the human soul. Through a wanton disregard for life, killing when not necessary, something happens to the consciousness of a person. A sense of respect for life is diminished, and that diminishment of respect is easily transferable to humans rather than a mere butterfly. Too often, damage done by humans is a result not of deliberate malice, but rather a consequence of thoughtless acts. A conscious respect for life needs to be ingrained within every human being. By life I mean all life, not just the human form that we are so vain to consider superior over all.

I am not proposing universal vegetarianism — that would hardly be fair to all the defenseless plants out there. Rather, give some thought before you kill. Eat steak, but remember the cow that provided the meal, and the range-land that fed the cow. When fishing or hunting kill quickly to lessen your prey's pain. Do it for yourself, if not for the animal. If all humans lived a life of conscious respect, one would suppose that there may be a few less problems to contend with. Conscious thought is a distinguishing mark of the human race. Do not deny yourself that mark of distinction. Live a life of respect so that you do not shrivel into an uncaring, unthinking boar. Leave those butterflies alone, and save your boot-stomping for the dance floor. Ω

W.C. student involved in Public Leadership Education Network seminar

Jessica Dindino

For the first two weeks of January I was involved in a wonderful experience which I can truly say has made an impact on my life thanks to the financial support of the Goldstein Program in Public Affairs and the encouragement of Professors Premo and Sherbondy. The seminar was orchestrated by PLEN (Public Leadership Education Network) Preparing Women to Lead. The title of the seminar was "Women in Public Policy." I, along with about 50 other females and one male, met some of the most successful and impressive women in Washington, D.C. The list of speakers included such women as Janet Murguia (Special Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs), Melody Barnes (Director of Legislative Affairs at the EEOC), Ruth Bader Ginsburg (US Supreme Court Justice), Ambassador Gentz Hawkins Rimmer (Director General of Foreign Service) and Dr. Antonia Novello (Former US Surgeon General). There were also many other fantastic speakers from whom we heard. Topics discussed included welfare reform, the struggle for the ERA, foreign service, jobs on the Hill, non-profit organizations and, most importantly, networking. I was able to meet people that most people will never have the chance to meet and I was able to develop a network with these ladies that will probably be my best advantage in obtaining a job in Washington, D.C. As an added bonus to the seminar, I was able to attend Newt Gingrich's celebration party where I was able to meet him and Bob Dole.

I would highly encourage anybody who is interested in public policy or just wants to learn more about the workings of the government to consider any of the numerous seminars PLEN offers. The seminars are extremely women-friendly and they do an excellent job to promote women in the world of politics. Ω

The Riverside Players: Love of drama to build a bridge

Mary Hoffman

The mission statement of the Riverside Players is "To bring the College and the community closer together through a mutual love of theater." The Riverside Players is a theater group that involves students and residents of Chestertown. Often these two intertwined communities are very distant. This group is hoping to change that and bridge the gap.

The group was formed last semester by the theater management class taught by Dale Daigle. Richard McKee, president, feels good about the way Professor Daigle is helping the group. McKee says, "He (Daigle) gives us leeway ... we make the decisions, we run it." The hope of the original and newer members of this group is that it will continue long after even the freshman members have graduated.

Members of the theater management group are the original members and the ones who lead the group. They are: Lisa Christie, Steve Fuchs, Cary Kelly, Caren Lee, Richard McKee, and Kelli Youngblood. The group has a president, Richard McKee; vice president, Caren Lee; treasurer, Steve Fuchs, and secretary, Lisa Christie. All of the original six members have equal control. It is hoped that eventually there will be a board of directors, but for now elections will be held. These positions can be held by any member of the group, not just majors.

Members of the Riverside Players do not have to be majors or even actors. A lot of things are needed for this to be a successful theater group. People are needed to do technical work, build sets, stage manage, direct, write original plays, act, and be audience and patrons. The group is open to anyone who is willing to work and try to involve both communities. The Riverside Players are hoping to do at least two productions each semester.

They started off small with one production last semester. Kelli Youngblood directed An Actor's Nightmare, the first production done by the group. The cast and crew were mainly composed of students, with one town resident as an actress. Many town people who came to see the play as well as giving donations. The show traveled around the campus and the town in its three day run. It was performed in The Cove, the public library in town, and Norman James Theater. This first attempt was a success, in spite of inclement weather because of which the sets had to be moved.

Youngblood is now on to all the productions when she said, "Working with the troupe - and I do mean working - hasn't always been easy or 100% fun, but it has been tremendously rewarding. The directing experience during Actors Nightmare was priceless, especially as a sophomore. The opportunity for experience is one of the great features of a student run community theater group.

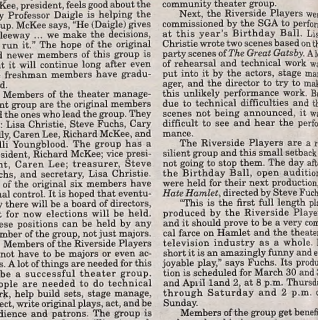
Next, the Riverside Players were commissioned by the SGA to perform at this year's Birthday Ball. Lisa Christie wrote two scenes based on the party scenes of The Great Gatsby. A lot of rehearsal and technical work was put into it by the actors, stage manager, and the director to try to make this unlikely performance work. But due to technical difficulties and the scenes not being announced, it was difficult to see and hear the performance.

The Riverside Players are a resilient group and this small setback is not going to stop them. The day after the Birthday Ball, open auditions were held for their next production, I Hate Hamlet, directed by Steve Fuchs.

"This is the first full length play produced by the Riverside Players and it should prove to be a very comical farce on Hamlet and the theater/television industry as a whole. In short it is an amazingly funny and enjoyable play," says Fuchs. Its production is scheduled for March 30 and 31 and April 1and 2, at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday and 2 p.m. on Sunday.

Members of the group get benefits and membership is open to anyone in the College and Chestertown community. Members receive advanced notice on auditions, discounts on tickets, group rates on trips to professional productions, and an invitation to a dinner at the end of the year. The membership fee is only ten dollars a semester, which supports this new group. Right now, it has club statutes and SGA support. The hope is to become fully independent of the school some day. This new organization might finally turn out to be what builds the bridge for both communities to work as one. Ω

The Women's Poetry Film Festival presents



Anne Sexton

O'Neill Literary House, 6:30 p.m.

HOROSCOPES

Aquarius (1/21-2/18) Here Fishy Fishy. Don't swallow so much water silly; your gills are long gone. You are going strong; keep up the gentle strokes.
Pisces (2/19-3/20) You will experience a sense of balance this week. Try your best not to tilt the scale or everything will go down like hot peppers and vodka.
Aries (3/21-4/19) Keep your eyes open wide to the changing skies. You may see something that you are not ready to accept.
Taurus (4/20-5/20) A bottle of red wine is nice but it really doesn't cut it. Tell them to stop twisting words into something they are not.
Gemini (5/21-6/21) I know this thought that haunts your mind "You're so pretty when you are faithful to me." You will find the truth.
Cancer (6/22-7/22) Talking too much is definitely a problem with you. Perhaps you should learn to listen to what others have to say and step back from the forced limelight.
Leo (7/23-8/22) Hurt again? Don't forget that everyone is a liar and there is not one person who won't seek to burn your soul.
Virgo (8/23-9/23) You are possessed by obsessive urges and unfaithful thoughts. Stay true to what you know and don't lend out personal belongings.
Libra (9/24-10/23) Finally you have figured out that they don't really care about you. Now you have to tell them you don't care either.
Scorpio (10/24-11/22) Questions snake through your brain about everything because you think too much. Remember your philosophy on life and just let things go.
Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) Pictures of you are always perfect but take a closer look in the mirror and realize that there are flaws.
Capricorn (12/22-1/20) You are tied to the Earth but not to the green grass or new blooms on the trees. You are tied to the hot molten core and you need a river to solidify your liquid rock.

by Ember, mistress of the Zodiac. Shade is sliding guitar strings this week.

K: Can you give us your name?
H: Howard Dean.
K: And this is the?
H: Chesapeake Pawn Brokers.
K: Pawn burgers?
H: Chesapeake Pawn Brokers.
K: Burgers?
H: BROKERS!
K: Oh, Brokers. So you don't sell hamburgers?
H: No, Sorry.
K: Jeff, I'm sorry. You're going to have to go hungry.
J: Darn.
H: There's a Burger King down the road.
K: Speaking of copyright infringement, I noticed that you have a sign out in front with Super Mario on it.
H: That's not really Super Mario. That's me, with my mustache, giving money away.
K: Did you pose for that picture?
H: No, I don't know where we got that picture from.
K: I'll give you a hint. It came from a Nintendo box.
H: It does look like Mario, but it wasn't intended to be that way.
K: But you do have Super Nintendo games, as well as games for other systems.
H: You notice he's got money in his hand. The real Mario doesn't have money.
K: That's right, the real Mario takes our money, but you're giving it back, ain't ya? You also sell a lot of other things. Can you give us a brief rundown of the kind of items you carry?
H: Like they say, if you can't find it in a pawn shop, we don't have it.
K: I notice you have a lot of bows and guns and stuff.
H: Yeah, hunting equipment, electronics, housewares, tools, musical instruments. You name it, we have something in there. If you don't see it, wait a week. Somebody will bring it in.
K: What's the weirdest thing ... that anyone's ever brought in and asked if they could sell to you?
H: A tuba.
K: They brought in a tuba? Did you buy it from them?
H: No, they wanted too much money.
K: You didn't want the tuba?
H: I would have liked to have it, but he wouldn't go with my price.
K: Do you play the tuba?
H: No, I'd just like to have one. It's a nice conversation piece.
K: How about you, Jeff? Would you like to have a tuba?
J: Oh yeah. That'd be great. I can't play it or anything, but I could just have it sitting around my room.
H: You could put flowers in it.
K: That's a pretty expensive flower pot.
H: Yeah, but it's also a conversation piece. We just had a popcorn machine in here. We just sold that.
K: A popcorn machine? Awesome. Do you get a lot of students in here, that are selling their textbooks or something?
H: No, probably the only students that get in here are the ones that are looking to furnish their dorms. And we don't have a lot of furniture here, other than a couple couches and maybe a refrigerator here and there.
K: We have a student right here. This is Mr. Josh Farley. He's my roommate. It looks like you just bought something to furnish our dorm room.
Josh: Yes, I did.
K: How do you like it?
Josh: It's good, has all the stuff we need.
K: Did you get a good deal on that?
Josh: Yes, I did.
K: Are you satisfied with your pawn shop purchase?
Josh: Yeah, it's my first time for a pawn shop, and a good deal.
K: Is there anything else you're looking for? Maybe a tuba? ... or maybe a ...
Josh: No, no tuba.
K: It'd make a good conversation piece.
Josh: Yes, it would.
K: How would that go? Would you walk in and say: "I see that you have a tuba ..."? Jeff, what would you say under those circumstances?
J: Uhhh ...
H: How much would you sell that tuba for?
K: You're always thinking about money.
H: And profit.
K: What about the beauty of music?
H: Yeah, but you also have to pay the rent.
K: That's true. That's always something you have to consider. How about you Jeff?
J: I just noticed they have CD's over there, including "Shaq Diesel." How much do I have to pay to get some Shaq Diesel?
H: Six dollars.
K: Do you have a lot of the current groups that are real popular right now?
H: I think there's a mixture in there.
K: Do you have any Green Day?
H: You're asking about popular groups, and I'm back there with Nat King Cole. You know, way back. So don't ask me what the popular groups are.
K: How about Madonna?
H: Yeah, there's a couple Madonnas in there.
K: How about Michael Jackson?
H: A couple Michael Jacksons, sure.
K: His "bad." He's a "thriller." Are you into Michael?
H: No, I like "Thriller." That's about it.
K: "Thriller"? Could you sing a few bars for us?
H: No.
K: "Thriller" ... How does that song go, Jeff?
J: I don't know. I wasn't around back then.
K: "Alone at night ..."
H: It wasn't that long ago, was it?
K: Doesn't seem like it.
H: No. Five, six years ago.
K: They had the Vincent Price video. Did you ever see that one?
H: Yeah.
K: He had yellow eyes. I don't know about you, but that really frightened me the first time, seeing Michael Jackson with yellow eyes. Did that scare you?
H: No. That wasn't really scary with the things that Michael Jackson did.
K: Do you think he molested that kid?
H: I couldn't tell you. I really don't think so. I don't know. I have no idea. I know he's "different." But his "different" may not be as bad as some people's "different."
K: Look at Jeff, for example. This kid is obviously not normal, am I right?
H: You know Jeff better than I do.
K: You don't even have to know him. Just look at him. You couldn't even sell this kid in a pawn shop. Most of his clothes came from a pawn shop.
H: Good. He's got some good clothes there. How much you want for that jacket? What's it say there? Is that your name? "Zippy"?
K: Could you sell that jacket in here?
H: Probably.
K: You could sell anything.
H: No. Well, yeah. I guess. There's always somebody looking for something. It may sit around for 10 years, but somebody will eventually buy it.
K: Have you ever considered offering a student discount, or anything like that?
H: Yeah, we have.
K: Did that ever work out?
H: Well, not really. Like I say, we just started here in August, so we're still working on it.
K: Would you consider maybe offering a student discount through our column?
H: Possibly.
K: What kind of discount are we talking here?
H: Five percent.
K: Five percent off everything, or just five percent off tubas?
H: You find a tuba and I'll give you ten percent off.
K: Five percent off normal products, ten percent off tubas. That's a good deal. How about that computer, will you sell that?
H: No, it's mine.
K: How about that watch? How much?
H: My watch?
K: Yeah, your watch.
H: I need it to tell time.
K: How about your phone over there? How much can I get that for?
H: The phones for sale are over there, on that shelf.
K: I want that one. I want the phone you have.
H: That's my pride and joy. Fits my hand just right.
J: If you enact the student discount, when would you enact it?
H: Probably in the spring.
K: So we have a five percent discount?
H: No, I'll consider a five percent discount. How many students do you have over there?
K: We have at least ten thousand.
J: I think it's more like three million.
The End. Ω

We Get You Discounts!

the Dynamic Discount Duo, Kevin and Jeff, roam Chestertown in search of bargains for students

Beneath the Lit. House:

In the depths of the House, Mike teaches the love of books

Perry Schatz

"My best teachers are my hands, my heart and my books," says Michael Kaylor, master printer at the Literary House Press. These words serve as the basis for the task that he attempts to accomplish every day through hands-on work with history in the press. Mike, as he is endearingly called by the Lit. House cronies, considers himself more of an historian and an enabler than a teacher. He shows the students "what's there, why it's there, and how to use it."

The Press, housing about five working "dinosaur presses" and an overwhelming amount of type, is the College's sort of graphics art department. It is the stomping ground for many of the publications on campus, including The Review.

The presses and all of Mike's books and scattered printing paraphernalia provide students with the tools to learn an art which has since been replaced by computer graphics and highly advanced industry that allows us to mass produce information at the push of a button.

In this period of accelerated change in communication and technology, appreciation for the written word in its basic structure and form is taken for granted as we stare into the screens of our Macintoshes or IBMs. The printer, from the Medieval European scribe to the turn of the century American press worker, no longer exists as we travel deeper and deeper into the computer age. These are the barriers historical preservationists such as Mike Kaylor have overcome.

In his workshops, Mike teaches interested students everything from book binding to typesetting, serving as a rich source of information for the layman. From year to year the interest level varies.

"This year's workshop is one of the best in years," says Mike. Last semester he had to plan to hold a second night a week in order to accommodate the enrollment.

Each workshop evolves on its own. If the interest level is more on the side of paper-making and book-binding, then a semester may be spent primarily on these skills. In order to learn the trade and get some hands-on experience printing, Mike requires his students to come into the press and work for two hours as a kind of payment plan.

Students who take Mike's workshop learn quickly that they are apt to increase their knowledge about more than just printing. Anyone who has worked with Mike would say that he is the type somebody who has followed his heart. He regards his job as "not a living— but a life." ("Rarely a living ..." he says under his breath chuckling a little).

In the future, Mike hopes to attract a more varied range of students to the Press.

"This is a piece of American History that would not have been salvaged without us." He would like to see a series of talks on book art or the history of printing in a more central area on campus besides the Lit. House.

"It's important to put people in touch with what it's taken to get words into print," says Mike. "If you don't know where you've been, you don't know where you are and surely you can't know where you're going." Ω

GALA

Gay and Lesbian Alliance of Washington College invites you to a meeting!

Gay men, lesbian women, friends and supporters are welcome to attend.

March 21, 9 p.m., CAC, Commons room.

Sho'women tennis falls to Salisbury

Paula Sierra

The women's tennis team started the season with a tough defeat. A new change in NCAA rules was a key factor in the the Sho'women loss. Doubles were played first (each one worth one point) and singles were placed later in the fourth, fifth, and sixth positions first and then the rest of the singles.

Two Freshmen, Anabel Flores and Paulina Sierra, played number one doubles, crushing the Gulls, 8-2. Anabel Flores shook off the competition easily, winning 6-0 and 6-4. The Salisbury gal started the second set very aggressively and she was up by 3-0, but Anabel came back in the second and won what was going to be a tied set. Paulina Sierra beat number two craftily, 6-0 and 6-3. Paulina and Anabel played aggressively, going to the net in most of the games. For their first season play, they look ready to take on anybody.

Diana Clausen and Meghan Brumby played hard, but fell to the Salisbury Gulls' number two doubles team by 3-8. They worked the points wisely and never gave up, but the opponent had the lead and took the win.

Amy Rizzitello and Vicky Roth, in doubles, were up by 5-1. They started strong but lost confidence and let the Lady Gulls pass them to win 9-5. Amy Rizzitello played fourth on the team. She played against a tough opponent. Rizzitello tried to step up but could not get ahead, and lost in the third set 6-2. She started the match confident and playing her game, won it 6-4. The second set belonged to the Lady Gulls. Ann-Marie Malena, a sophomore, played very well. She tried to get ahead of the Gulls but lost in two sets 6-2, 6-3.

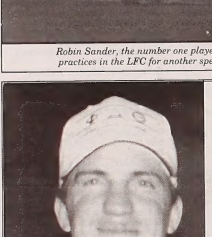
It was a good showing for the young team. The Gulls are a tough rival and this gives the Sho'women a goal to work towards. Ω

Robin Sander, the number one player in Division III, practices in the LFC for another spectacular season.

Two victories for Sho'men tennis

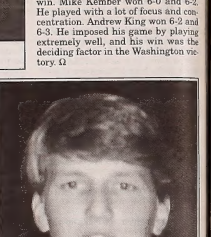
Paula Sierra

In their second match the tennis team defeated George Mason University by 5-4.



Robin Sander and Damian Polla won number one doubles by imposing their game and forcing the opponent to make the mistakes.

Buba and Miro played number two doubles, winning by 8-3.



Andrew King and Mike Kember played number three doubles and, although they played aggressively, lost their match. Robin Sander retired during his match, due to a knee injury.

Damian Polla won against the second player of George Mason. Damian attacked the net and played consistently to win the match. Miroslav Beran played well, but could not win the match. He was not into the game in the first set and tried to come back in the second, but his effort did not allow him to come back to win. He lost in two sets 6-2 and 6-7.

Buba played the fourth position on the team and lost. He put a good effort into his match, but could not take the win. Mike Kember won 6-0 and 6-2. He played with a lot of focus and concentration. Andrew King won 6-2 and 6-3. He imposed his game by playing extremely well, and his win was the deciding factor in the Washington victory. Ω

POW

Washington College's Player of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an athlete displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

This week, two men have astounded the Washington College community in their game of tennis. Andrew Moffat and Andrew King both played exceptionally well as they defeated two Division I foes: University of Pennsylvania and George Mason. The decisive matches came down to the two Andrews and they both helped to launch with a win another Sho'men season on the courts. Both men were reserves last season in the Championships in California. These two matches proved what they are capable of as they played Division I opponents and came out on top.

Andrew Moffat, a first semester junior, won a tough singles match against Division I University of Pennsylvania to give the Sho'men the victory. He is currently seeded seventh with the Sho'men and is a strong lead doubles contender for the Sho'men. While not on the courts he is studying Business Management.

Moffat hails from Randpark High School in South Africa. Before a match, Moffat enjoys a hefty portion of W.C.'s vegan cutlet, for that extra energy.

Andrew King, a sophomore from Salisbury School in Connecticut, played his heart out in front of the home crowd on Saturday as he kept his calm and won the last match to notch the Sho'men victory. King is currently seeded sixth among the Sho'men and looks to be a key singles player. He beat the George Mason Guy 6-1, and 6-4 in two grueling sets, with the whole match resting on those two sets. King is pursuing a degree in History. King really believes that drinking the Beast before matches and giving his favorite lacrosse player (women's) a kiss make his game the level that it is.

W.C. Rugby: Prospects hopeful

The game this Saturday against St. Mary's College of Maryland marks the Spring season opener for the newly reorganized and rejuvenated Washington College Rugby Football Club, affectionately dubbed The Warthogs.

The squad is sporting new faces as well as the seasoned veterans, and all are expecting a strong showing against St. Mary's. The Washington side has been conditioning and drilling vigorously this week and the pride and energy of the players shown is encouraging and remarkable. Each individual is lending his best to the team. Given a few more days the squad should evolve into a well-drilled and coordinated fighting machine. All are encouraged to come out to Worton Park this Saturday, March 4, at 1 p.m.

to support the Warthogs! It promises to be a good time for all, so spread the word and gather up a caravan.

DISCOUNTS INCREASED HEAVILY 15% To 40% OFF
Jack Brubos
Atlantis
patagonia
Comfort Walking Canes
Columbia Sportswear Company
Old Towne Canoes & Kayaks
Whole Earth Outback Felt Hats
JANSPORT
UGG'S Wide Variety of Colors & Styles For Ladies & Men
BAY TO BAY TRADERS
207 Cross Street, Chestertown, MD (410) 778 - 3442

Humphrey's Point Farm

on scenic Swan Creek near Rock Hall offers a full care event horse facility with a private atmosphere. We have two stalls available at reasonable rates. Also TB event horses for lease and for sale. Instruction, trailering.

639-2832

A wrap-up of the '94-95 basketball season

Peggy Busker

Well another season of fine action on the courts is over. The Sho'men gave Coach Tom Finnegan his 200th season, and the team played well with an overall record of 12-12 and a .500 record in the Conference as well, with seven wins and seven losses.

The young team graduates one senior, Jerry Davis.

Davis had a fabulous final season, constantly improving his play and always inspiring the team with his spirit. Davis had a personal best of 22 points in one game against Wesley College. Davis topped himself again and again in the rebound category and grabbed his most, 12, three times. He got four steals against Western Maryland. Jerry has contributed much to Washington over his four years here and will definitely be missed.

Ben Harris, a sophomore and the team's Captain, was all over the court this season as he continually impressed teams with his three-pointers. against Western Maryland, he had 35 points. His rebounds were highest three times with six, and he had six steals against Ursinus College as well. Harris never fouled out and started every game, along with Davis. Together, their presence on the court amazed the fans and caused many teams to stutter.

Juniors Ed Hicks and Adam Poe also intimidated many teams this season. Hicks was the silent-but-deadly player who racked up many points easily from the inside then when the opponents picked him up inside, Hicks would sink it from the outside. He snagged 13 boards by Ursinus and got nine rebounds against Wesley.

Adam Poe had the speed to blow by the offense and sink the lay-up or pull up and make a crucial three-pointer. No one will soon forget Poe's three-pointer at the buzzer against Muskingum on December. Poe had his best game against Ursinus with 27 points, and his best game defensively against Johns Hopkins with 11 rebounds.

Derek Cuff, another sophomore starter, improved his play this year as he made 20 points against John Carroll, and 15 rebounds against Muskingum. Cuff always put everything into every game and made excellent steals.

Another sophomore, Mark Awantang, stepped up this year. He continued to maximize his size as he grabbed nine rebounds against Ursinus and made 10 points against the Division III leaders Franklin & Marshall. Mark sparked the defense when he came in the game and together with Davis created the twin towers under the basket.

Junior Ken Lapp continued to use his height and long arms as he grabbed seven rebounds against Division I Delaware. Lapp made 12 points against Western Maryland for his season high. Lapp hustled on the court and made some crucial rebounds for the Sho'men, especially up against some big guys.

Paul Kenny had a good season with a good game against Muhlenberg, where he played solid offense and defense. The crowd was always behind him as they eagerly awaited him to let loose with a nothing-but-net three-pointer.

The Freshman components of the Sho'men team were major contributors this season.

Bradd Burkhart saw a lot of playing time, and proved he could hold his own as he scored 16 against Swarthmore, and got eight rebounds at Gettysburg. Burkhart could break down any offense and find the basket or a pass to finish the drive.

James Carpenter, a crowd-pleaser, always shook things up on the court. He was always looking for the steal and often got it. It was against Gettysburg that all the starters were taken out and Carpenter, with three other freshmen (Joe McDonald, Matt King and Bradd Burkhart) and sophomore Mark Awantang, came in and got the Sho'men lead back in a matter of minutes. Carpenter had his season high of two assists and two steals in this game.

Matt King started his Sho'men career well with impressive stats across the board, scoring, rebounding and stealing. He was always hustling and focusing on the ball. He had several opponents quivering with his determination to get the ball.

Greg Metrinko was another force to be reckoned with. He had the moves to get by the big guys under the basket, and the eyes to get off the perfect pass.

Joe Burke, a 6'5" giant, looks to be a major threat next season with his size under the basket and his dedication to the Sho'men. Jerry Davis will teach him how to intimidate the competition.

The outlook for next season is good, with 13 returning players and active recruiting for freshmen. The Sho'men are ready to take this season and learn from it to move forward next year and go to the play-offs. They will still be in a tough half of the Conference but they will dominate next year. The crowd will still be there to support them at all home games as well as road games. Of course the crowd will be at a loss too, with the graduation of dedicated and vocal fan Chris Hargett. Ω

Women's basketball ends season with 13-13 record

Erika K. Ford

Last Wednesday the women's basketball team ended their season after a semifinal game against Johns Hopkins.

Although the Sho'women lost 78-46 to Hopkins, the second season varsity team went farther than many could have predicted.

Joining the Centennial Conference's East division in the 1993-94 season, the team impressively advanced to play a quarterfinal game against Muhlenberg last week.

Beating the Mules 59-54 at home, Washington advanced to take on Johns Hopkins, the top ranking team in the Centenial West in Baltimore.

Washington dominated inside play, with the team scoring almost all of its points within 10 feet of the basket.

The Sho'women stayed active on the floor, out-rebounding Hopkins 53-47.

Center Eboni Taylor led all players with 27 points, and was the backbone of Sho'women play.

Her 27 points set a new Centennial Conference playoff record. She also had 12 rebounds. Taylor went seven-for-10 at the free-throw line.

Washington cut a nine-point Hopkins lead to one in the 2:56 left to play in the game. Hopkins retaliated with a 13-point run that ultimately gave them the win.

Karen Sieger had 13 points and 13 rebounds for Washington.

Allison Wentworth had 12 points and grabbed 14 rebounds.

Megan Miller and Kristen Snell each added four points.

Kristen Lezzer contributed six points to the Sho'women's score. She made Washington's only three-pointers in the game.

Behind 43-32 at half-time, Washington was nearly tied with Hopkins in second half scoring, with 34 points to their opponents' 35 points, due to poor shooting on the part of the Hopkins team.

Washington shot 40% overall in the game, and made 14 of 26 shots from the line.

Eboni Taylor finished the season leading the team with an average of 17.5 points per game. In a game against Muhlenberg she achieved a personal best with 31 points.

Taylor also had a personal best 22 rebounds against Hopkins in January.

Allison Wentworth averaged 12.2 ppg. She had 28 points against Haverford last month and 16 rebounds against Gallaudet.

Karen Sieger averaged 8.2 ppg. She had a high of 20 points against Swarthmore in January, and twice had 13 rebounds in a game.

LeeAnn Lezzer also averaged 8.2 ppg. She reached a best of 25 points against Muhlenberg in the Conference playoffs. Lezzer had nine assists in the semifinal game against Hopkins.

Megan Miller averaged 7.3 ppg. In January she had a best 14 points, and got 12 rebounds against St. Mary's early on in the season.

Kristen Snell averaged 6.7 ppg. Her personal best scoring was 16 points against Swarthmore. Twice she had 10 points and five assists in a game.

Tara McKee averaged 3.0 ppg. She had six points against Randolph-Macon in a November game.

Hilary Rainey averaged 2.0 ppg.

Twice Rainey had eight points for the Sho'women, and she had five rebounds against St. Mary's at the start of the season.

Shannon Rump averaged 1.6 ppg. Against Dickinson she contributed 10 points, and twice she had four rebounds in a game.

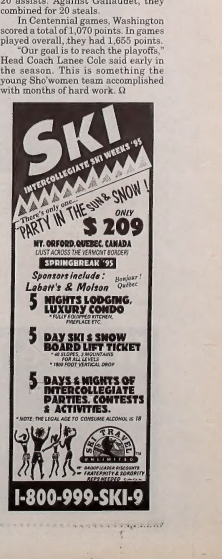
Cherie Gallini, who played in five games at the start of the season, had a 1.6 ppg average. Anne Petracco, who played in three games, had two rebounds in November.

The Sho'women had a season-high 93 points in last week's playoff game against Muhlenberg.

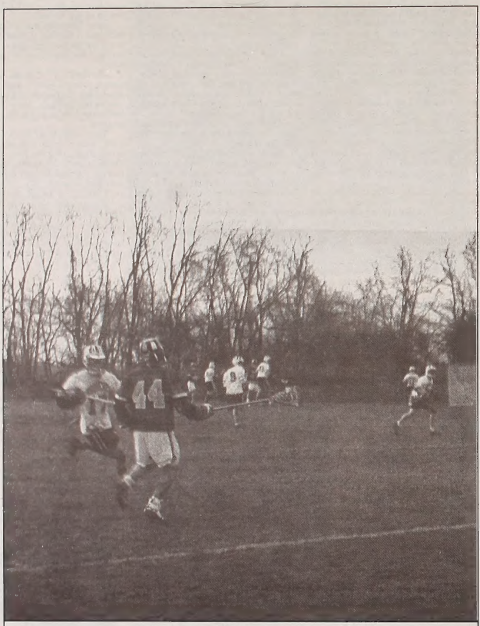
The Sho'women had the most rebounds in a game back in November with 61 against Randolph-Macon.

Against Goucher early in the season, Washington players combined for 20 assists. Against Gallaudet, they combined for 20 steals.

In Centennial games, Washington scored a total of 1,070 points. In games played overall, they had 1,655 points.



"Our goal is to reach the playoffs," Head Coach Lanee Cole said early in the season. This is something the young Sho'women team accomplished with months of hard work. Ω



Athletes make good students too

The Athletics Department is pleased to recognize the academic accomplishments of our student-athletes. We are tremendously proud of the academic successes that Washington College varsity athletes continue to achieve, and want to recognize those successes as often as possible. With over 130 student-athletes achieving semester G.P.A.'s over 3.0, and 8 student-athletes currently on the Centennial Conference Academic Honor Roll, our hats are off to the job that these students are doing.

Bryan Matthews, Director of Athletics

J.D Albright, Matthew Distler, Michael McDermott, Greg Miller, Thomas Rombach, Kyle Bowers, Jarrett Pasko, Brian Rush, Kevin Roland, Max Walton, Nathaniel Tyler, Mark Awantang, Bradd Burkhart, Derek Cuff, Paul Kenny, Matthew King, Ken Lapp, Joseph McDonald, Adam Poe, Mike Beardsley, Christopher Camillo, Federico Da-Pieno, Aran Downes, Harrison Gallagher, William Gibson, Steve Kim, Shayne Bates, Geoffrey Bley, Chris Daily, Chris Downs, Mike Gill, Chip Helm, Scott Helm, Jesus Hernandez, Thomas Hiebler, Andrew King, Long Le, Shawn McMahon, Eric Mosley, Benjamin Jason Mundell, David Cola, Robert Cronin, Chris Preisheim, Chris Fritch, David Kraft, Tyler McCarthy, Tim Parent, Scott Steinmuller, Michael Kember, Damian Polla, Robin Bander, Cherie Gallini, Melissa Kordula, LeeAnn Lezzer, Allison Wentworth, Ronnetta Church, Tiffany Glenn, Helen Thomforde, Stacey Waicker, Lisa Brown, Jennifer Dougherty, Amy Elliot, Stacey Hammond, Eileen Hunter, Tonya Howell, Sarah Kirby, Lauren Levine, Erin Miller Robin Mitchell, Kathryn Mullan, Melisa Olsen, Taber Overall, Amy Peterson, Jayme Ricketts, Lisa Swann, Shelly Waltimyer, Erika Wilson, Lisa Athey, Margaret Bunker, Nicole Chmura, Kouri Coleman, Jennifer Hanifee, Cynthia Matalucci, Shannon Metcalf, Nicole Mills, Jessica Neaton, Jill Schultz, Stephanie Self, Natalie Smith, Tanya Bennet, Michelle Chin, Elizabeth Doppler, Danica Heath, Bridget Maloney Laura Meerholz, Nicole Zemanski, Amy Draper, Liz Likens, Colleen Roberts, Darlene Schuab, Jennifer Voss, Robin Woollens, Diana Clausen, Melissa Ellwanger, Ann-Marie Malena, Kim Prettyman, Amy Rizzitello, Victoria Roth, Catherine Barrett, Beverly Diaz, Mariah Geissler, Laura Heidel, Kari Lee, Courtney Myers, Tina Smith Becky Stephens, Paulina Sierra .

Freshman Brian King rushes a Navy lacrosser in the first Sho'men game of the season.

Scores

Men's Lacrosse

Washington 1
Navy 12

Women's Tennis

Washington 2
Salisbury 3

Men's Tennis

Washington 4
Univ. of Penn. 3

Washington over George Mason
(Score unavailable)

Where You Need To Be This Week!

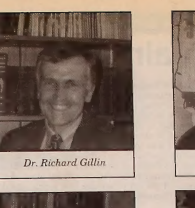
Saturday, March 4

Baseball vs. Iona College, 1:30 p.m.
Rugby vs. St. Mary's, 1 p.m.

Tuesday, March 7

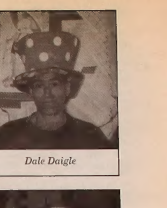
Softball @ Goldey Beacom, 2:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 8



Men's Lacrosse @ Johns Hopkins, 3 p.m. (Conference Opener!)

The Washington College



ELM

Volume 66, Number Twenty

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Dr. Richard Gillin

Dale Daigle

Four new chairs named

Kate Meagher

Four Washington College professors have been named department chairs, while three had their positions as chairs renewed. Dr. Richard Gillin will take over as chair of the English department, replacing Dr. Everett Hamond. Dale Daigle will be the new chair of the Drama department, taking over for Timothy Maloney. Dr. Amzie Parcell was named chair of the Music department, assuming a position now held by Dr. Garry Clarke. Dr. George Shivers, current acting chair of the Modern Languages department, was named director.

Dr. Steven Cades, Dr. Al Briggs, and Dr. Rosette Roat will continue as chairs of the Sociology department, the Mathematics department, and the Chemistry department, respectively.

The position of department chair is a three-year appointment. Because Shivers has been acting chair of the modern languages department for a year since the resignation as chair of Dr. Thomas Pabon), he has two years remaining in his term. Dr. Joachim Scholz was named chair to replace Pabon; but was then named Dean and Provost after the departure of Dean Wubbels. Shivers was then named acting chair.

Gillin said that the position of chair is something he had neither anticipated nor sought.

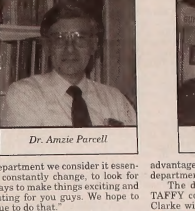
"It's like being a Christian Scientist with an appendicitis attack," said Gillin. "It's going to take a lot of faith."

He described the position as "a big responsibility to the College, the department, and the students."

"I have a lot of misgivings about it," said Gillin, "because my real interest is in teaching and not administrating. Teaching is my first love and my first priority."

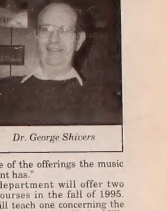
Gillin plans to take the best of tradition and integrate it with changes that are taking place in education.

"I think right now the College, and indeed American education, is at a crossroads," said Gillin. "Changes are taking place rapidly." He pointed to the fact that the Faculty has just approved a new curriculum for the freshman and sophomore years. He called the new curriculum "very exciting," but that "the implications for the English department are not clear yet."



Since he began teaching in the sixties, "there is a lot more material that has to be absorbed and treated," said Gillin. He believes there is a need for a balance between traditional American and English literature and new courses in new literature that is being studied, such as postcolonial literature, literature dealing with gender issues, and African-American literature.

Daigle, new chair of the Drama department, describes his department as "egalitarian."



"We make decisions as a group," said Daigle. "The change doesn't mean a whole lot."

"We [the Drama department] are in the middle of a whole curriculum change to be approved at the next faculty meeting," said Daigle. The three members of the department, Daigle, Maloney, and Jason Rubin, have worked on the plan for several years.

"We're lucky," said Daigle, "because we all work together really well.

Dr. Amzie Parcell

Dr. George Shivers

As a department we consider it essential to constantly change, to look for new ways to make things exciting and interesting for you guys. We hope to continue to do that."

One way in which the department will attempt to do that is through a course in the TAFFY program called Theater in Performance.

"It will be an introduction to the theater through attending performances," said Daigle. "We thought it would be an interesting way to introduce people to what we do." Rubin will teach the course, but all three drama professors will be involved in it.

The Music department is also egalitarian, according to Parcell. Its members meet weekly.

"My plans are basically to continue the efforts of the current chair," said Parcell. "We will attempt to implement some of the recommendations of the department's self-study of the fall of 1993. We will be addressing problems and trying to make some changes. We will try to make the department more visible to students, so that they feel as if they want to take advantage of the offerings the music department has."

The department will offer two TAFFY courses in the fall of 1995. Clarke will teach one concerning the geographic region, while Kathy Mills will teach one involving gender issues.

"I am very much in favor of the TAFFY program," said Shivers. "It will be problematic for [the modern language department], because we have lots of commitments." There are many language courses that must be offered every semester.

The Modern Language department will offer two courses for the TAFFY program. Thomas Pabon will teach The American Film Experience, while Christine Pabon will teach Issues in American Life for non-native speakers of English. Shivers said the department has developed a new curriculum plan to be voted on at the next faculty meeting. Ω

Faculty approves TAFFY plan

Budget problems also discussed

Kate Meagher

After much discussion and disagreement, the Faculty passed TAFFY's proposed program for the freshman and sophomore years.

Dean Joachim Scholz presented the proposal to the members of the Faculty at the March 6 faculty meeting. There were questions raised regarding the proposed advising system as well as the idea of a second-year program.

Scholz mentioned the two faculty forums and the one student forum that were held to discuss TAFFY's proposal. He said that the proposal put before the faculty was the result of those forums and subsequent revisions made by the members of TAFFY. The issue was then opened to faculty discussion. Chair of the Department of Political Science and International Studies Dr. Daniel Premo was the first to comment on the proposal.

"I find much to be commended in the first-year experience [proposed in TAFFY's plan]," said Premo, "but I am gravely concerned about the scope of the second year." He suggested that TAFFY present a working model in order to ensure the feasibility of the proposed program.

Scholz assured Premo that some courses now in existence could be adjusted to become TAFFY courses.

Premo expressed concern that the classes now offered for majors will become TAFFY courses, then making it necessary for the department to offer another section of the course to serve the majors. Scholz answered that the TAFFY courses would go to fulfilling the major as well. Professor of Spanish and Acting Chair of the Modern Languages Department Dr. George Shivers said that since there are currently courses which count for both distribution as well as the major, there is no reason why the TAFFY courses, as part of a new distribution category, could not count toward the major as

"Faculty" on 4

Wickes free on $25,000 bond

Peeping tom has prior conviction for rape

Scott Koon

Yesterday Wayne Frizelle Wickes, 31, waived his right to a preliminary hearing on charges stemming from an incident last February in Worcester dormitory. The case will now be heard in circuit court.

Wickes has been charged with burglary and trespassing. Wickes allegedly gained access to Worcester and entered a second floor bathroom where he allegedly peeped in at a female student in a shower stall. A few days later this reporter observed him as he was being arrested by Chestertown Police outside of Worcester. Wickes is currently free on $25,000 bond pending his next court appearance. According to Jerry Roderick, director of Public Safety, the case was investigated by the Chestertown Police, the Maryland State Crime Lab, and the Department of Public Safety.

On March 28, 1979, Wickes was charged with two counts of rape, assault with intent to carnal knowledge, and assault and battery. According to court records, Wickes initially plead not guilty to all counts, but later changed his plea to guilty of one count of rape in the second degree and not guilty to the other charges. On July 5, 1979, Wickes was sentenced to 20 years in prison. At the time, Wickes was 15 years old.

In an unrelated case, Jerry Roderick reports that charges have been filed in a case stemming from a late-night fracas outside of Hodson Hall. Gary Darnell Lewis, 24, of Chestertown has been charged with three counts of assault and battery. Lewis was allegedly engaged in a brawl with another man when he assaulted three Public Safety Officers who were called in to break up the fight. He has "been advised not to return to campus," according to Roderick. Ω

Inside This Week's Elm

Thinking through...

the possibility of the United States easing sanctions on Cuba. 3

Model United Nations

W.C. sends 17 students to Harvard to participate in the Model U.N. 4

Net Surfing

Mindie explores the wonderful world of the BBS. 6

We Really Do Get You Discounts!

The guys come through for us! A hundred dollar discount on a used car! 8

Enough already

I would hate to be accused of beating a dead horse but, well, this is an important dead horse. It came to my attention early this week that Bob Brown had compiled some information concerning the involvement of students at several universities in the governance of those institutions. Later, while reading Bill Denton's SGA report, I found that in all five cases Bob investigated students had considerably more involvement in almost every area of college governance than we have here. I have to admit, I was not surprised, not even remotely.

I do have to question one thing concerning Bob's information though. Nowhere in his report does he address the reality of student involvement. His information deals primarily with the official procedures and the official place of student voice in the decision making process. I am left to wonder how much actual student involvement there is, and to what extent the student body had to petition and fight for their official place.

It is true that Washington College students do not have as much official voice in the running of this College as students at other colleges and universities. It is also true that, with few exceptions, there has not been much outcry over this fact. In my four years here I have witnessed only two instances of active student protest to actions taken by the administration. In one case, the voices were indignant but few and far between and in the other the voices, while loud and many, managed only to work the entire College into a frenzy. Which is not to say that either instance was unimportant or unnecessary. It is to say that this case by case reaction on the part of the student body is simply ineffectual.

In order to achieve the amount of involvement and control that we as consumers want and deserve, we have to not only work for it, but work with it. Being involved in every aspect of governance requires a great deal of active participation, commitment and willingness to go above and beyond the call of duty. Being involved in the governance of this College is not simply a matter of creating more student position on College committees. It is not simply a matter of familiarizing the means by which these committees receive input from the student body. It means taking an active part in the decision making, before during and after the major decisions are made. It requires sustained commitment from more than a handful of students.

It may be that with more institutionalized means for constructive interaction between the student body and the rest of the College community, students will rise to the occasion and become active and involved. It could happen, really. On the other hand, it may be that we as students would not take advantage of further institutionalized means of involvement in the same way that we do not fully capitalize on the opportunities currently are offered.

According to the Faculty Handbook of this year there are a total of 16 Faculty committees which include students as members. The student positions on these committees number roughly 50, and most are appointed by the Student Government Association. While there are no students on the Advisory Committee on Appointments and Tenure or on the Faculty Finance Committee, there are three students on Academic Council, three on the Admissions and Academic Standing committee and three on the Student Aid committee. Granted, all of this may change as the Faculty considers the restructuring of the committee structure, I think it does show that there is a considerably large opportunity for student involvement.

It has been said time and again that there are just a handful of students involved in everything that goes on at this College. It seems impossible to expect a handful of students to fill 50 committee slots, plus classes and other extra-curriculars. In order for us to take an active roll in the governance of Washington College, more of us have to take advantage of the current opportunities and fight for new ones.

On a lighter note, spring has sprung! Well, in the lower half of the United States at any rate. Spring break was wonderful. The weather was simply spectacular. By the number of people running around campus with tans, I would guess that a few people agree with me. Spring is a wonderful time at Washington College, when it gets here that is. Golf on the lawn. May day. Poetry readings on the Lit. House porch. Sun bathers on the Minta deck. And best of all - Graduation!

Thanks this week go to Steve Brown for beating our computer into submission and to Anthony Hecht for the assist. Thanks also to Jen Hammer for the cookies.

To the Editor:

Respect for the individual must be maintained

Washington College is a special place where all individuals are welcome. We are proud of the mutual respect for many different cultures and persons that live together in a supportive academic atmosphere. However, a member of our community has reported to have had an offensive symbol written on the memo board to his room in one of our residence halls. The graffiti was immediately removed. I want to emphasize that the Washington College community finds any such offensive behavior to be highly objectionable. Should an individual responsible for such acts be identified, he/she will be subjected to the College's disciplinary process. I urge all members of the College community to reject words or deeds of hate. We must continue to maintain an environment of tolerance and civility.

-John S. Toll, Acting President

SGA still fighting for Fessler

In The Elm of March 3, the article about what has been named the "Fessler case," reported on of my remarks and selected comments from the senate. There are two relevant pieces of information that were not included in the article. The first was that the senate unanimously voted for the SGA to address the possible procedural changes. The second was that there was a motion from Senator Hargrove to have the SGA write an open letter of recommendation for Dr. Fessler. This also was unanimously approved. Given the nature of this issue, I believe that these kinds of actions from the SGA accurately represent the student body's desire to both address the internal issue, and to voice our praise of Dr. Fessler.

-James Baker, 94-95 SGA President

Giving thanks

For those who read the rest of The Elm: Everyone is always writing to the Editor to tell about the great or not so great effort someone has made on this campus. The individual hands in a bunch of thoughts on paper and by Friday afternoon she (or he) are reading it and bragging to all their friends. These individuals have no idea what that little ego booster and all the other articles have gone through from the time of creation to the moment of distribution. All the reading, editing, layout, re-editing and printing plus the time, effort, hard work and brain power it takes to produce each week's Elm goes unrecognized. This will not be the case this week. I am writing to compliment and commend the writers, contributors, and most importantly the official staff of Washington College's Elm. This year The Elm has been extremely informative and entertaining as well. It has given us the scoop on the comings and goings of Professors, staff, and the President of our institution. It also has let us know what events to look forward to, where to get discounts, crud, sports, and reviews of movies, music, and plays. It also deserves extreme praise for its improvement. Not that last year's Elm was bad, however, anyone who has looked at an Elm of last year then read one from this year can find an extremely noticeable improvement in content, editing, pictures, layout and overall appeal. Those involved in bringing The Elm to the W.C. community each week have done an excellent job and are encouraged to continue doing so. Thank You Rachael, Kate, Mindie, Sarah, Peggy, Erika, Charles, Josh, Scott, and Kelli.

-Christina Chiarchiaro

Editors' note: Awwww. Gee, ya' didn't have to. blush Thanks Christina!

Get active! Get involved!

Edit the paper!

Applications are now being accepted for the positions of editor of The Elm and The Pegasus.

Those students interested in the positions should send a letter of application to Dr. Richard Striner, Chair of the Board of Publications, via campus mail.

The deadline for application is Friday, March 31.

Interviews will be conducted on Wednesday, April 12.

For more information contact the offices of The Elm (x. 8585) or The Pegasus (x. 8584). Any interested student is encouraged to apply.

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink
News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Co-Editors
Mindie J. Kuzdan and Sarah Bell
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Erika Ford

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Joshua T. Lawrence, IV
Office Manager
Scott Ross Koon
Photo Editor
Kate Meagher

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and cruel do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BlitzMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8585
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

The Countdown has begun!

41 days until the last day of classes
42 days until senior comps
45 days until final exams

58 days until Commencement!

This Week on Campus

March 24 - 30

Film Series

Eat Drink Man Woman

Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.

Friday 24

Saturday 25

RECORDING BOOTH in the Student Center

Sunday 26

Monday 27

The Meaning of the Human Face From Deep Look to Media Image

Lit. House, 4:30 p.m.

Tuesday 28

The Women's Movement in Siberia: During the Soviet Era and Now

Sophie Kerr Room, 7:30 p.m.

Wednesday 29

Thursday 30

Advising Day - no classes

Among the many little rumors, ideas and suggestions that drip down from within the Clinton administration like crumbs from the mouth of a messy eater, there was one rather interesting one a couple of weeks ago, reported in The Washington Post. It was one of those ideas which most of the foreign-policy experts have long thought sensible, but which has always been sort of tabooed among those who must personally face the voters. The suggestion was that perhaps the United States should consider easing the sanctions on Cuba.

Our policy towards Cuba has never made much sense. Up until last August, practically anybody from Cuba who made it to the Florida coast would have been welcomed as a political refugee (whereas, for instance, Haitians would have been turned back forcibly.) The result of this was that quite a lot of people left who were simply unemployed and desperate in Cuba's deficient economy. People were also fleeing political persecution, of course, which was only natural. From the point of view of someone who might want to see Castro gone, however, it was discouraging to see all his potential opponents in what amounted to self-willed exile. There was only the rather grim comfort of knowing that Castro's stubborn "socialism or death" policy was most likely creating enemies faster than we could absorb them.

This policy was scrapped by the Clinton administration last August when the U.S. was faced with a gigantic influx of Cuban boat people. At that time, supposedly as a way of forcing Castro to crack down on people attempting to flee his country, the U.S. government also placed severe economic sanctions on Cuba. Under these sanctions, Cuban-Americans are not prevented from sending money to their relatives in Cuba. Travel to Cuba from the United States was also restricted. This was not the first time Clinton "got tough" on Castro. The

Thinking through ...

36 years and counting

by Paul Briggs

year before, he had signed legislation prohibiting foreign subsidiaries of U.S. companies from doing business with Cuba. In fact, this may have been what triggered the refugee crisis in the first place.)

Recently, unnamed foreign policy experts have proposed that the sanctions imposed last August be dropped, on the grounds that they have succeeded in their stated purpose of stopping the flow of refugees. These experts have also suggested that the administration issue a list of steps which Castro could take which would bring forth a "calibrated response" from the U.S. In a time when heavy-handed government regulations are more unpopular than ever, it would seem only natural to get rid of a rule which has served its purpose and is no longer needed. We all know, however, that there is more to it than that. As a rule, no restriction against Cuba, once made, is ever abandoned without a compelling reason.

Most dictators want to fence themselves off from the outside world. The more cruel and ruthless the dictator, as a rule, the stronger their desire to allow as few people as possible to enter or leave their land, and to allow even fewer facts in or out. In the case of Castro, being well-nigh cut off from the outside world is very much a mixed blessing. It gives him a ready opportunity to lay the blame for Cuba's dismal economic state from his own political policies to the sanctions. It also prevents him from doing much about that economic state.

The argument that is made most often against easing the restrictions on Cuba is, "Do you really want to have dealings with the likes of that man?" The counter-argument is, of course, that we already do have dealings with the likes of that man, and always have. There are still plenty of other dictatorships around the world with which the United States government has normal diplomatic relations. The difference in the case of countries like Cuba and Iraq is that they have already had a falling out with us, and to re-establish any sort of relations would require an active effort on the part of the administration.

In the case of Iraq, the policy of extreme isolation could be easier to justify. Saddam Hussein is by all accounts a much worse tyrant. Nor is there any reason to believe that his territorial and nuclear ambitions have disappeared, and the embargo does make it harder for him to pursue them. Even here, however, it must be acknowledged that this policy is creating a great deal of human suffering without noticeably weakening the position of the Iraqi dictator.

In the case of Cuba, it is a little harder to explain. That country, as far as I know, has never had any designs on its neighbors' territory, and I don't see much chance of Havana getting hold of nuclear weapons any time soon. Nor are there any more worthwhile revolutions for Castro to support. As mentioned before, the sanctions give Castro a handy excuse for economic failure, and isolation lets him rule unopposed. If the government ever started to change these policies, however, he'd probably turn around and say that this was proof that the capitalists were giving in and socialism was winning. Quite possibly we should not bother trying to base our policy on whatever will give Castro the least opportunity to run his mouth. Instead, we should think about trying to win over the Cuban people. I don't think it would be too hard (but keep reading for some over here) but we ought to make the effort. The best way to begin would be what has already been suggested by those unknown experts.

This idea is not likely to get very far in Washington, however. Among other obstacles, it must get past the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Jesse Helms. He, and many others like him in Congress, would like to see even tougher sanctions, being of the opinion that the best way to deal with Cuba is to stomp on it until it bursts. According to this school of thought, Castro is "on the ropes" (where he has been for 36 years and counting) and if we just put on a little more pressure, and wait just a little longer, one day we will wake up and Castro will be gone.

This might actually work. If nothing else, he has to die sometime. The question is, what then? Do we really want an economic disaster ninety miles off our coast, begging for aid? That is, at best, what our current policy has to offer. If a successful policy is one which gets Castro out of office, or one which causes greater freedom or economic reform, then no president since Eisenhower has ever had a successful Cuba policy. "Staying the course," then, does not make much sense. Ω

Getting the jump on the job market and getting credit for it

Take charge of your professional future. Make yourself more competitive by having "real" experience on your resume! And of this experience takes place in one of the world's international "power" cities, the rewards can be even greater. Washington, D.C. is such a city and with hundreds of internship opportunities.

The Institute for Experiential Learning (IEL) is one of several internship programs in Washington. Dr. Mary Ryan, Executive Director of IEL, stresses, "While you still have time to plan for the future, take advantage of all the educational opportunities you can. In a tight job market, you need practical, on-site experience. A background in the professional world also gives you the edge in landing the right job after you graduate."

In addition to enhancing your resume and expanding your network of contacts, a successful IEL internship can help you project more confidently in job interviews because you will have something concrete to discuss. It allows you to explore career options and can give you valuable insights into what you do or do not want in a work environment. You can experience, first-hand, the relationship of the public and private sector while getting to know a diversity of people. Washington is an international city!

As one former student said, "Without the internship at IEL, my future job hunting would have been hit or miss. I now recognize the varying aspects of international relations and have narrowed down my interests." Still another, now applying what she learned, believes that "the internship taught me several things one does not learn in standard classes in college. The video and film industries have a language all their own – a point which can be overlooked in classroom exercises."

The IEL program, The Capital Experience, is unique among Washington internship programs because it is academically based. Students generally can earn up to 17 credits for it. Designed as a serious learning experience tailored to each student's needs and goals, it stresses close collaboration between the student, the on-campus faculty adviser, IEL staff, and on-site sponsors. Individualized placements are made in a wide range of government agencies, businesses, professional offices, and nonprofit organizations. Students, who come from around the world, formulate their own learning plans to guide their internships, spending four days a week at work and one day at EIL seminars, site visits, tours, and briefings.

The combination of the internship and course work allows students to test how classroom theories are realized in practice. One EIL student says,"I think it was very useful to learn what to expect from a workplace atmosphere before I actually get into the situation in my future career. It brought the textbook rules to life." Still another felt that she "matured and learned about myself by changing lifestyles from a college kid to a business professional," adding that "I expected to be doing 'gopher' work, but was pleasantly surprised that the work I was given to do was varied and interesting."

Carefully organized, serious internship programs offer students the opportunity to maximize their college years, and to gain the confidence and independence they need to succeed in a highly competitive job market. Dr. Ryan asks, "Can you afford NOT to invest in your future?"

For more information, contact the Institute for Experiential Learning, 1735 I Street, N.W., Suite 716, Washington, D.C., 20006. Ω

THE MS WALK

Sponsored by the National Multiple Sclerosis Society
Saturday, April 1, 1995

STEP 1: REGISTER TODAY
Fill out the registration form (available all over campus) and mail it to receive walk updates, detailed information, and extra sponsor pledge forms.

STEP 2: RAISE PLEDGES
You'll be amazed at how easy it is to get pledges. We'll give you lots of ideas. Most walkers raise $100 or more! Pledges are required to participate, but there is no minimum amount. Every dollar counts!

STEP 3: WALK THE WALK
Just bring along your pledge sheets and a smile! Check-in between 8 and 10 a.m. The walk begins at 9 a.m. We'll walk rain or shine!

STEP 4: COLLECT PLEDGES
Take the final step by collecting all of your pledge money before the prize deadline: Tuesday, May 2, 1995.

Multiple Sclerosis is a disease that randomly attacks your nervous system, earing away the control you have over your body. Symptoms may range from numbness to paralysis and blindness.

STUDENT CENTER EVENTS

Saturday night:

RECORDING BOOTH

in the Student Center

Come and record your favorite songs.
Keep a tape of this memorable event !!!

Next Friday evening:

OUTDOOR "DRIVE-IN" MOVIE

Exit to Eden, with Dana Delany, Dan Aykroyd, and Rosie O'Donnell

Two cops are going undercover on the exotic island of Eden. But to crack this case, they'll have to flash more than their badges! Outdoor screen somewhere between the CAC and Hodson Hall. Bring your lawn chairs and popcorn !

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

The new SGA Executive board has taken over the oversight of the senate; Tuesday's meeting was the first with the new Executives.

The first order of business was the swearing in of a new senator from Kent House. Kurt Kroeger has assumed the post, replacing Carolyn Rouland.

The senior class is still trying to arrange for a commencement speaker. Class President Tyler McCarthy is waiting to hear back from Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole.

Junior Class President Mark Reyero reported that the plans for Casey Day are completely finished. Earth Day plans are also coming together: in addition to live music, the celebration will also include a traveling zoo and a dunking booth, to which members of the faculty and administration will be invited.

New Vice-president Doug Beckworth reported that the Faculty Committees are planning a restructuring. A reduction of the number of committees has been proposed, with efficiency in mind. The changes are designed to prevent faculty members and students from spreading their resources too thin by serving on too many committees. The 104 currently existing faculty positions will be reduced to 64 if the current plan passes the faculty vote. Student positions on the committees may also be reduced. The faculty still reserves the right to alter the proposal before voting on it.

The SGA had to deal with more club funding Tuesday. The Psychology Club and Psi Chi (the Psychology honor society) each requested additional funding for an upcoming conference. New Treasurer Shryinel Johnson recommended $100 for each, which was approved unanimously.

New Secretary Erica Estep proposed a re-instruction of a senate attendance policy. In past years, there had been an attendance policy, and a new policy would go into effect next semester. The proposal met with widespread support. Said new President Liz Likens, "the Executive Board feels strongly about it."

"Attendance has definitely been lax this year," said Tyler McCarthy.

It's not fair to the people who come to the meetings," added Estep.

The two appointed Executive positions (Parliamentarian and Honor Board Chair) are currently filled by the officers from this past year (Dave Pipkin and Doug Beckworth, respectively). New officers will be appointed at next Tuesday's meeting. The elected Executives have already chosen their nominees for the positions.

Middle Hall Senator Bob Brown is continuing to work on the issue of student involvement in the affairs of the College. Over Spring Break, he conducted a study of several other schools which are comparable to Washington College in size, enrollment, and curriculum. Some of his findings are as follows:

At Elizabethtown College in Pennsylvania, all candidates for faculty positions are required to give a public address to the student body at large, as well as participate in a question and answer session. The student body recommends a list of candidates which is reviewed by majors in the department with the available position. The majors recommend a candidate, who is voted on by the board.

At Swarthmore College, the student body has voting members on all search committees. The "Council on Educational Policy," a seven member committee which includes three students, handles all matters of tenure, hirings and dismissals, and the budget.

At Muhlenberg College, all hiring is made by the individual departments. Committees are only departments, which handle appointments and tenures as well as dismissals, may include students at the department's discretion.

Even a large school such as the University of Maryland, which would seem to many to be impersonal, relies on student input to a large degree. There, in addition to the existence of a student government association, the "College Park Senate" exists. It is comprised of undergraduate and graduate students, faculty, and staff, advises the College President, Chancellor, and Board in issues of appointments, dismissals, student affairs, etc.

The disclosure of the results of Brown's study met with a rather unpleasantly surprised reaction: Junior Class President Mark Reyero remarked, "It seems like we're living in the dark ages. I didn't realize we were this backward." Ω

W.C. sends its largest delegation ever to National Model United Nations

The European Summit. Disarmament and national security. Decolonization. Human rights. Trade and development. The status of women. The international drug trade. These topics were all on the table when W.C. students represented Norway at the 40th Annual National Model United Nations at Harvard University in Cambridge last month. The Model brought together more than 4,000 college students representing 165 countries for three days of intense committee work. This year, Washington College sent its largest delegation ever, with 17 students accompanied by Dr. Tahir I. Shad, Faculty Adviser.

W.C. delegates prepared by doing independent research and attending weekly evening seminars for four months, culminating with a dinner and briefing by two officials from the Norwegian Embassy. In Boston, the delegates debated the issues, putting their oral and written communication skills to the test during the development of working papers, resolutions, and amendments. Each committee was given a crisis situation and a time limit in which to develop a solution. Students' personal negotiation skills were tested as well, while alliances were formed and broken as the true nature of the crisis became apparent. Resolutions were adopted only after much compromise and bargaining

The delegation's prime responsibility was to stay in character and portray Norway's foreign policy as accurately as possible.

The Model UN is organized by the Departments of Political Science and International Studies and receives financial support from the Goldstein Program in Public Affairs and the Student Government Association.

Participants included David Tsipenyuk, International Studies; Angela Panton, International Studies; Assen Ignatov, International Studies; Caron Woodward, International Studies; Kathryn Crouch, International Studies; Jessica Dindino, International Studies; Jessica duHoffman, Political Science; Brian Tarleton, International Studies; Ines Walter, Political Science; Laura Meerhols, International Studies and Spanish; Regis de Ramel, International Studies; Kristin Smith, International Studies and Spanish; Brendan Norris, International Studies and German; Lamya Basry, French Language Assistant; Federico Da Fieno, International Studies and Economics; Sanjeevai Wijenaike, International Studies; Paulina Sierra Samano, International Studies; and William Gibson, International Studies. At the conclusion of the Model UN, Gibson received Honorable Mention for Best Delegate in the European Summit Committee. Ω

Earth Day and Casey Time:

Final plans being made for "Earth and Science Day"

Mark Reyero

April 8 will be an exciting day for the Washington College Community. This upcoming Saturday has been declared "Earth and Science Day at Washington College." The day will be filled with various activities that every member of Washington College will enjoy. The day will begin at 10:30 a.m. with a display of the Jesse Ball duPont Summer Projects. These were joint science projects between professors and science majors. At 11:30 there will be a ceremony dedicated the newly refurbished Litrenta Lecture Hall in Dunning. The Litrenta Family, whom generously donated money for the project, will be in attendance.

At 12:15 there will be an all-campus picnic sponsored by the Dining Services. Following the picnic at 1:15 will be the kick-off of the Second Annual Casey Time. This community service project, which the Class of '96 sponsored both last year and this year will begin on the front lawn next to the flag pole. It will be here that the Alumni Counsel will plant a new Elm on the very site were our original Elm well. Chair of the Chemistry Department and TAFFY Member Dr. Frank Creegan contradicted this, saying that the TAFFY courses will neither count for the major nor will students be allowed to take them pass/fail.

"Faculty" from 1

Dr. Emilie Amt, associate professor of history, asked if the courses would be open only to freshmen. Scholz expressed uncertainty. He said that there are adjustments that remain to be made and that "implementation will have to proceed step by step."

"We didn't want to bring [to the faculty] a proposal that was timid," said Scholz. He said that the plan "allows us some room for curricular experimentation."

History Professor Dr. Nate Smith asked about the Sophomore Writing Obligation. He referred to an Elm article regarding the student forum, during which it was said that SWO would be terminated in the new plan. Scholz affirmed the fact that SWO will be absorbed under the new program.

After some doubt expressed by the Faculty with regard to the second year, Chair of the Department of Sociology Dr. Steven Cades suggested that the Faculty vote on the first-year plan "in practice," and the second-year plan "in principal." Chair of the Department of American Studies Department Dr. Richard DeProspo supported this idea.

"If you split the proposal, we'll end up with half a horse," said Scholz. TAFFY was asking the Faculty for approval of the entire proposal.

Amt suggested that the Faculty approve the plan, but request a second vote by the Faculty for approval of the second-year program once the details have been finalized, and prior to implementation in the fall of 1996. A resolution was passed (after much haggling over its wording) which changed the wording of the Faculty's approval of TAFFY's plan. The Faculty approved the first-year program, and approved the second-year died four years ago. After the planting ceremony, students and alumni will make their way across 213 to the Caroline and Queen Anne Area of campus. This will be the site of this years project. With trees and shrubs generously donated by Anthony's Landscaping at discount prices, we will revive this withered area of campus. The project will be dedicated to the Casey Family for all the gracious gifts they have donated to Washington College.

As Casey Time ends, Earth Day '95 will kick off at Wilmer Park. This is the twenty-fifth anniversary of the original Earth Day in 1970. This is our chance to celebrate Washington College's unique location on the Eastern Shore of Maryland and the Chesapeake Bay. Various local and regional environmental organizations will be represented at the festival. Scales and Trails will also host a wildlife exhibit. There is also a possibility of having a dunking booth at the site which would be used to raise money for environmental organizations. Ω program in principal, with the understanding that the second-year plan (when it is as clearly outlined as the first-year program is) will be brought to them for approval before implementation.

There was concern expressed by some faculty members that the new advising system (in which the freshmen will have an upper-class teacher of his or her first-semester TAFFY course) will be a burden to the adviser and a hindrance to the student, especially one who plans to major in a natural science. Such a student requires an adviser from his or her department. Some faculty members argued that some advisers will have 24 advisees, while those not teaching TAFFY courses will have no advisees.

Scholz answered that if a student expresses a strong interest in a certain area, he or she will be given an adviser from the department of his or her interest.

Nate Smith moved that the advising component of the plan be eliminated. Some were for Smith's idea, while others saw merit in retaining the planned system. Chair of the Department of Philosophy and Religion David Newell agreed that those who teach TAFFY courses will be overloaded with advisees.

Professor of Spanish Thomas Pabon testified, as the father of a student whose school uses a similar advising system, that the advantage of TAFFY, to the effectiveness of such a plan.

"We're condemning it to failure already," said Pabon.

Chair of the Department of Education Seán O Connor also spoke in favor of the advising component.

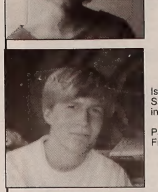
"This system will make our advising program significantly less random and more targeted," said O Connor.

German Instructor Jeff Vahlbuch brought the discussion to an end, saying, "We voted to let TAFFY come and bring us a good faith proposal." He suggested that the Faculty "stop with the amendments" and vote on the plan. TAFFY's plan was passed. Ω

LOYOLA

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

c.r.u.d.
creative ranting under duress.



by Matt Kory & Jake Mullins

Take corn pops, what are they, ...lly?
It's hard to tell, usually you can ...d out what a food is by looking on ...ont of the box.
There is a mutated little being on ...e front ... not quite sure what it is.
I think it's a porcupine.
I think you're hallucinating, so ...u think that corn pops are really ...orcupines?
No, some part of a porcupine.
Ugh!
No, no, not that ... like, a lymph ...land. Corn Pops are PORCUPINE ...MPH GLANDS!
But how do they get that crunchy ...ecure?
Uhh ... deep fried, of course.
...mm ...
And this deep frying is legally ...nctioned by the federal ...overnment? Aren't there laws ...verning the deep frying of rodents?
I wouldn't know about that, I just ...ll it as I see it. Most food is ...composed of what is pictured on the ...x.
So is that also true of baby food?
I would hope not. But I heard that ...eople in some countries wouldn't ...ay it just because there was a baby ...n the front.
I bet you'd eat it though. Eh?
I'd rather not talk about that. ...his conversation is becoming rather ...easavory.
You're right. So what if you ...opened this jar of Gerber and there ...as this cute little baby head staring ...ack at you?
I'd call that company up right ...away!
... and order more?
Um, y ... no! I'd lodge a ...omplaint, but they probably ...wouldn't do anything about it. They'd ...ay it was a fake, like the defense ...against that guy who found the rat in ...is soda.
That was me! That was really ...ross, too! I called them up and they ...didn't believe me, so I just drank the ...oda.
You are a stinking liar.
Well, I don't know about the liar ...part ... That company really annoys ...me. I mean I find a rat in my soda ...and they won't do anything about it. ...I think I'm gonna ... Oooo ... I have a ...ish.
It appears to be a tuna
It is not a mere tuna, I tell you. It ...is a Swordfish! I use it to destroy all ...evil things ... Wait! Its gone. Never ...mind.
(Blank stare)
What are you staring at? Want ...some of my corn pops? Ω

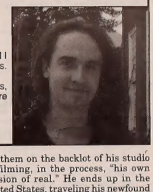
Campus Voices

Question by Sarah Bell
Photos by Kate Meagher

If Mr. Ed came up to you on the street and started a conversation with you, what is one question that you would ask him?

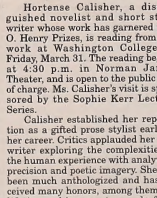
What's all that peanut butter doing between your teeth?

Kristen Keener, Sophomore



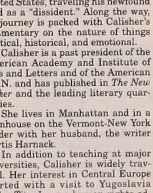
I'd ask him out to dinner and a movie.

Paul O'Hearn, Sophomore



Is there really a Satanic message in your theme song?

Paul Bayne, Freshman



How's your mom?

Taryn Venner, Sophomore

Have you seen Gene riding his pink bike?

Jarrett Pasko, Sophomore

I don't know Mr. Ed, and I don't talk to strangers.

Jake Mullins, Sophomore

Calisher to visit Washington College

Hortense Calisher, a distinguished novelist and short story writer whose work has garnered four O. Henry Prizes, is reading from her work at Washington College on Friday, March 31. The reading begins at 4:30 p.m. in Norman James Theater, and is open to the public free of charge. Ms. Calisher's visit is sponsored by the Sophie Kerr Lecture Series.

Calisher established her reputation as a gifted prose stylist early in her career. Critics applauded her as a writer exploring the complexities of the human experience with analytical precision and poetic imagery. She has been much anthologized and has received many honors, among them the lifetime achievement award of the National Endowment for the Arts. Her challenging and singular works include (in fiction) In The Absence of Angels , False Entry, Standard Dreaming, and Queenie, and (in nonfiction) Herself and Kissing Cousins. Recently, she produced the pseudonymous scientific and metaphysical thriller, The Small Bang, writing as "Jack Fenno."

Mysteries of Motion (1984) was called by Richard Eder in the Los Angeles Times a "rare effort to take the human and metaphysical temperature of today's headlines .... a novel of ideas and prophecy."

Her most recent book, her 21st, is In the Palace of the Movie King (Random House, 1994).

This is a striking novel about dissidents, family politics, and the post-Cold War Balkans in which she tells the story of the internationally acclaimed film director Gonchev, who is famous for his cinematic travelogues made in a country where travel beyond the border is not allowed, "for this was a country that had decided to swallow itself." As a result, he must dream the world's great cities and create them on the backlot of his studio — filming, in the process, "his own version of real." He ends up in the United States, traveling his newfound land as a "dissident." Along the way, his journey is packed with Calisher's commentary on the nature of things political, historical, and emotional.

Calisher is a past president of the American Academy and Institute of Arts and Letters and of the American P.E.N. and has published in The New Yorker and the leading literary quarterlies.

She lives in Manhattan and in a farmhouse on the Vermont-New York border with her husband, the writer Curtis Harnack.

In addition to teaching at major universities, Calisher is widely traveled. Her interest in Central Europe started with a visit to Yugoslavia under Tito. Long a human rights advocate, she began her most recent novel after a State Department-sponsored tour of Hungary, Romania, and Yugoslavia. Ω

laundry drycleaning

Park

RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N. CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD 21620

ROOM SIZE CARPETS

NEXT TO THE COURT HOUSE

The President's Domain:
The Hynson-Ringgold House

Ron Kozich, Jr.

The rich history of Washington College is evident in many buildings on the college campus. However, its history is also evident in buildings that are possessed by the College off-campus. One such building is the President's house. To the Eastern Shore, this house was known as one of the finest residences in its day. Every president since Dr. Mead who first became a resident in 1946 has lived there.

What came to be known as The Hynson-Ringgold House was locally known as the Abbey. The house was actually two separate homes built in 1735. Thomas Ringgold, a wealthy Chestertown merchant, purchased both homes in 1767. Mr. Ringgold then had them connected by a central wing.

The property that the house occupied extended from the waterfront to High Street. The interior of the front part of the house contained paneling while the rear part had the old kitchen and dining area. An antler-type staircase was built in the central wing.

The ownership of this historic landmark by Washington College would not have been possible without the dedication of Wilbur Ross Hubbard. Hubbard was a member of the Washington College Board of Visitors and Governors and purchased the house in 1944. He was interested in the preservation of colonial period houses and wanted to build support behind it. He also wanted to give the house to the College to serve as the president's home.

At first, the Board was hesitant. They did not want to assume responsibility for the maintenance and renovation. Eventually, they removed their opposition. The funds were then solicited and received so that the college could acquire and renovate the home. Dr. Mead, president at the time, took up residence at the house by August, 1946. Ω

Spring at last:

The flowers are blooming, the birds are singing and Washington College is flooded with music

Flights of fanciful nonsense and musical whimsy take wing as the Washington College Community Chorus pays tribute to P. D. Q. Bach, e. e. cummings, and the mastermind behind the Burma Shave roadsigns. "Spring Fling" - a program of music to delight the ear and tickle the funny bone - is set for Friday, April 7. The concert begins at 8 p.m. in Tawes Theater and the public is invited to attend, free of charge.

The program features Liebesrieder Polkas by P. D. Q. Bach, sung Professor Peter Schickele, a premiere of e. e. cummings poetry set to music by Washington College alumna Kate Bennett of Chestertown and a "Motet" composed by Washington College Music Professor Garry Clarke, based on text chosen from the 7,000 Burma Shave advertising signs which adorned America's roadways during the 1940s, '50s and '60s.

The Liebesrieder Polkas, roughly adapted from Johannes Brahm's Lievesrieder Waltzes and written fro "Piano, Five Hands," will be accompanied by two Washington College students, Melissa Wentzell and Teri Senn. Pounding the fifth hand and miscellaneous bells and whistles will be Professor Amzie Parcell.

"Spring Fling," Friday, April 7, 8 p.m., Tawes

The Great Lakes Quartet

"Waltzing Down Broadway" is fitting way to conclude the season of the Washington College Concert Series. The Great Lakes Quartet, know for voices, personalities, repertoire, musicality and professionalism of the highest order, will perform here at W.C. on Saturday, April 8. The concert begins at 8 p.m. in Tawes Theater. Single admission tickets are $12 for adults and $5 for youths 18 and under.

The concert features a staged and choreographed tribute to musical theater, from opera to Broadway. In addition to classical composers Gioacchino Rossini and Robert Schumann, American composers Cole Porter, Rodgers and Hammerstein, and the Gershwins are well-represented in the Great Lakes repertoire.

Soprano Julia Broadhelm has a diverse musical background, having performed many operatic and musical theater roles. Wendy Bloom, mezzo-soprano, has charmed audiences in performances from Baroque to Broadway, opera to oratorio, jingles to jazz. Tenor Todd Graber won acclaim for his unique portrayals of well-known operatic and Broadway characters. Chris Grapentine, bass-baritone, has performed a variety of vocal music from grand opera to folk songs, children's songs to Broadway melodies.

Saturday, April 8, 8 p.m., Tawes

The Computing Center • Macintosh PC • The Internet • Telnet • Bulletin Board

Net Surfing

NewsWatcher • Turbo Gopher

by Mindie Kaplan

ISCA alt.barney.die.die.die • Pacer Forum BlitzMail • LegendMud • Broadcast

Okay, time for some of the fun stuff on the Internet: Bulletin Board Systems (BBSes). Now most of the people on campus are familiar with ISCA BBS operating out of Iowa. It's the largest BBS in the world, serving over 100,000 users; it's a virtual city in itself (pardon the pun). The CC List (written by CC May) calls ISCA "the biggest BBS on the net. Period. 15,000 users a day are calling [it]." This is the place to go to talk about everything from comic books to metaphysics. The only drawback is that it is so large you tend to get lost and there's often a waiting list (called a queue) to get on. One system, Heinous BBS (heinous.isca.uiowa.edu), was created specifically for ISCA users who were trying to avoid the queue. Also based at the University of Iowa, Heinous has most of ISCA's features without any of its size. Heinous also offers some groups not available on ISCA such as typography, coffee and chocolate, and access TV.

There are lots of other places out there that you may not know about. They have the advantage of being smaller and more personal (not to mention the plus of not having to deal with the dreaded queue). They also cater to different types of users. Each BBS cultivates its own "aura," attracting a specific type of person.

Shadow BBS (shadow.acc.iit.edu) began as a techie bbs, but has grown into much more. CC List had this to say about Shadow: "[Shadow] is quickly becoming huge. [It] was originally geared toward being a technical BBS, but it's now popular pretty much all round." There are still lots of discussion groups in Shadow on various computers and operating systems. They've also added general interest forums on everything from pets and environmentalism, to "Oldster Oasis" (for people over 30) and "The Wonder Years" (to talk about youth).

For people who aren't interested in the innards of a computer, there is Prism BBS (bbs.fdu.edu). This place, also known as the "granddaddy" bbs, is filled with sports discussion from baseball and basketball to football, hockey, and auto racing. It uses the Citadel operating system (unlike ISCA and Shadow which use DOC), but the two systems are similar enough so that a DOC user can easily pick up the commands.

BBSes are also wonderful places to practice a foreign language.

CetysBBS (infx.mxl.cetys.mx) is located in Mexico. Most of the rooms are in Spanish, with a few for English speakers. Club BBS (club.gdl.iteso.mx) is one alternative that is completely in Spanish. Jaguar BBS (info.pue.udlap.mx) is another. Kids BBS (kids.kotel.co.kr) offers a comprehensive set of groups for writers. Unfortunately, most of the messages are in Korean. Agora Telematica (agora.stm.it) seems to be the best choice for the foreign language (or any other language) crowd, offering its system in seven languages including English, French, Spanish, and German.

There are other BBSes where the only purpose is simply friendly chatting about nonspecific topics. The intro to FootHills (toybox.info-magic.com 2010) explains, "Foothills is here for one and all as a place to relax and chat. The aim of the program is simply to provide a nice, secure environment in which you can talk. Nice, because it has a multitude of features to make life easier, and secure because we guarantee that anything you do in private cannot be snooped or intercepted by anybody but the people you intended to talk to." Many of these places attempt to create a virtual reality setting, such as a park, a castle, or a bar and describe the setting for you along with the other users who are present. One area in FootHills sets the setting with the description: "Following your ears in search of water, you wander through a myriad of life. Lush green grass lays on the earth, broken only by brightly colored plants and flowers littered along the ground. High above you birds circle slowly in the air, while nearer to the ground, bees buzz busily around the flowers."

One advantage that BBSes have over international chat is that they enable you to "speak" with several people at once. Also, once a user is placed in a visual setting, the risks of encountering harassment become decreased for some unknown reason. Harassment is a concern on all BBSes; but most BBSes can deal with it fairly easily. Most BBSes allow users to "hide" their personal information from other users so that no one can show up on your doorstep unannounced. BBSes tend to offer friendly advice in their introductory information reminding people not to give out their name, age, phone number, or address to strangers. Another helpful feature is the "disable" key. It allows you to prevent specific people from communicating with you on the BBS. With a little care, people can enjoy the pleasures of unlimited conversation with a wide variety of people free from worries.

If you have any difficulties connecting to any of the BBSes mentioned here, please send mail to Mindie Kaplan. I have successfully logged on to all of them.

Andy's

Friday, March 24 *Angie Miller & 'Topher
An excellent selection of originals & cover tunes. Top-notch guitar playing ... Be here.

Saturday, March 25 * Commonbond
The high energy acoustic duo from D.C.

Thursday, March 30 * Doubting Thomas
Debut performance of a Charlotte NC trio. Grassroots rock to high energy pop. Guitar, violin & percussion. Don't miss it.

HOROSCOPES

Aquarius (1/21-2/18) Someone has tipped off the Taurus that you have been stalking. Better cool it for a while.
Pisces (2/19-3/20) Your problem is that you never finish what you start. Make an effort to be more focused. How about focusing on Pop-Tarts?
Aries (3/21-4/19) You have made some new discoveries while standing in the circle of life. Ignore those who do not have faith in your growing spirit.
Taurus (4/20-5/20) An Aquarius is stalking you.
Gemini (5/21-6/21) Keep control over those angsty feelings. Make sure you only talk about those you despise when they aren't looking.
Cancer (6/22-7/22) Stormy weather has swelled your seas, but remember that there are a lot of fish that care for the crab in you.
Leo (7/23-8/22) They say that there are other fish in the sea, but what do you do when you're allergic to seafood?
Virgo (8/23-9/23) Once again you are afraid to address passionate feelings. Ignorance is not bliss, so maybe you should armor up and take a chance.
Libra (9/24-10/23) When are you going to learn to stop going back to those who treat you disrespectfully? Castrate a bull and tie his balls to your own.
Scorpio (10/24-11/22) Silence is one of your best and worst qualities. Use it to your advantage and speak up because you may gain more than you thought possible.
Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) You will not get very far with that attitude. Try being more aggressive; headbutt someone if they won't see things your way.
Capricorn (12/22-1/20). Your paltry collection of Magic: The Gathering card instills no fear in one who possesses a Shivan Dragon.
by Ember and Shade.

Dropped A Whole Degree

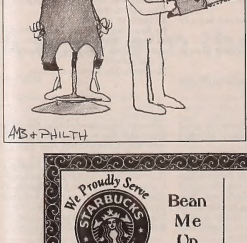
Aaron Pierce

Crank Up the Thunderbroom ... Old Man Watt's Back in Town!

Well, Spring Break brought us all kinds of unexpected surprises. As one of my roommates put it, last week was a chance for us to push the ol' reset button and get back to a civilized frame of mind. I got to see an old friend who I hadn't seen in over a year and a half, replenish my severely depleted money supply, and put on about a quarter pound of weight (thanks to Matt, my traveling partner). And in addition to all that, I discovered that one of my old school heroes put out a solo album. The legendary Mike Watt, punk-rock papa and head spiel master, has unleashed an album that he calls Ball Hog or Tug Boat? So how is Watt without his former outfit, fIREHOSE? Let's just say that the man is and always has been a badass.

But perhaps I'm getting a little ahead of myself. Sometimes I forget that not everybody knows who fIREHOSE is, or for that matter, who Mike Watt is. Well, the story begins many years ago in a troubled time that has come to be known as the Late Seventies. America was prepping for the Reagan Years and the forces of corporate "Feel Good" music were turning out formula pop crud for the masses. In the midst of all this, a little punk scene grew up around the San Pedro area of California. Black Flag guitarist Greg Ginn founded SST, a small record label dedicated to recording the new hardcore sound. One of the more popular of artists to find a home on SST was a San Pedro trio known as the Minutemen (they were called that because their songs tended to clock in at just under a minute). The Minutemen consisted of D. Boon on guitar and vocals, George Hurley on drums, and Mike Watt on bass. Their sound was an odd mixture of funk, noise, and good old-fashioned punk rock anti-capitalist propaganda.

D. Boon died in a tragic car wreck and, finding themselves without a guitarist or a singer, Hurley and Watt broke the group up. A little while later, a young guitarist by the name of Ed Crawford convinced the two ex-Minutemen to recommence their former musical activities, and the three of them formed what came to be known as fIREHOSE (by the way, please don't mistake fIREHOSE for Firehouse ... two really really different bands, really).



Now fIREHOSE is one of my all time favorite bands. Their sound is hard to describe. It's not punk, it's not funk, and it's not pop. Basically, it's fIREHOSE. One thing is for sure, though. Mike Watt's creative drive and bass stylings lay at the heart of the band's sound. I've discovered that many fIREHOSE fans know the songs simply by the bass lines. Basically, when you get down to it, Mike Watt is just one of the coolest guys to ever pick up a bass and play a tune.

And now, after the recent demise of fIREHOSE, Watt has put out a solo album. In reality, the term "solo album" doesn't really describe Ball Hog or Tug Boat? The lineup of guest musicians is extensive. Mike D., Adam Horovitz, Pat Smear, Thurston Moore, Flea, J. Mascis, and Henry Rollins are just some of the people who appear on this album, paying tribute to the legend himself. Fifty musicians in all share the credit with Watt for bringing us this truly amazing album, and some of their offerings are absolutely amazing.

Perhaps the star on the album is J. Mascis, lead guitarist and vocalist for Dinosaur Jr. Though Mascis' distinctive voice is heard very little (actually he never utters a word), it is his guitar work that is the real jewel here. The man is a powerhouse as he trucks through "Big Train," the opening track on the album, and then turns out a highly-distorted version of the Funkadelic classic "Maggot Brain." Listening to the interplay between the two musicians, it occurs to me that perhaps Mascis and Watt ought to think about doing a project together again sometime soon. I guarantee that it would be incredible.

Another bonus on the album is the opportunity to hear Watt do some tunes from the old days. Pat Smear fills in for D. Boon on vocals on the Minutemen classic "One Reporter's Opinion." The boys throw out a hell of a jam on this tune, adding "Forever," an instrumental jam, to the beginning. Another classic featured on the album is Sonic Youth's "Tuff Gnarl." Watt outdoes himself with his arrangements of these tunes, bringing new life to some old songs.

It is impossible to describe the sheer variety of sound on Ball Hog or Tug-Boat? It goes from angst-driven to jazzy and back again in a matter of minutes. To the uninitiated, some of the sentiment on the album might seem a bit much. A feeling of Watt-worship pervades the songs and the performances. However, when you get down to it, Mike Watt has meant a lot to a lot of people. Looking back at the contributions he has made, the tendency toward worship can be forgiven. Personally, I hope that the old man keeps spieling and spelling until the day he dies. I just gotta say, God bless Mike Watt. Ω

The Women's Poetry Film Festival presents

Emily Dickinson

Tuesday, March 28, 6:30 p.m., O'Neill Literary House

We Proudly Serve STARBUCKS COFFEE

Bean Me Up

Peach Cobbler
Hazelnut Cheesecake
Lemon Curd Tart
Almond Bread Pudding
Bagels
Focaccia
Coffee of the week
House Blend
Sumatra Decaf

10% discount for students
Open evenings

the Cellar
coffee bar & bakery

Stroll down WINE ALLEY

ALL WINES DISCOUNTED EVERY DAY

Victoria Gewurztraminer	$9.80
Chateau De Baun Pinot Noir	$9.50
Cuvaison Chardonnay	$13.00
Ponzi Pinot Gris (Oregon)	$9.80
Buehler White Zinfandel	$7.50
Malson Deutz Brut Cuvee Champagne	$12.60

Wines available from $4.99 to $70.00 a bottle
Discounts for case orders.

NOW OPEN DOWNSTAIRS AT THE IMPERIAL HOTEL 778-5600

Washington College Staff Profile

Have you ever wondered where that big white door at the top of the steps of Bunting (on the side facing 213) leads to? Come on ... I know that you have. Well it just so happens that it leads to this week's Staff Profile person, Madeline Howell. Imagine that!

Madeline Howell is the secretary for the Dean of Washington College. But she is no ordinary secretary, answering the telephone and typing on the computer are trivial tasks. Since she is the Dean's secretary, her work revolves around the Dean's activities, which include dealing with faculty matters, curriculum and course changes, etc. A lot of Howell's work involves setting up committees and academic counsels such as the Application and Tenure Committee, TAFFY, and Environmental Studies.

Howell has worked at Washington College for 40 years and has seen seven presidents come and go. She has worked for 10 full-time deans and five acting deans.

Howell lives with her husband of 25 years, Henry, in Worton. She has two step-children, David and Joe Howell.

When she is away from the College, Howell does a lot of traveling with her husband. They love going to the Outer Banks of North Carolina and to Florida and Colorado. They spend a lot of time in the mountains of North Carolina because her husband's relatives live there. They also love to go camping in their travel trailer.

"I really do not have a lot of hobbies. I just started doll collecting, though. Oh ... and I love to shop, I have to admit," Howell said.

Like most of the staff here, Howell really loves working at Washington College. Gee, she's only been here for 40 years.

"I like the students, the faculty, and the administration. It's been fun. You get to know people and can look back and think about all the people you've met."

We Get You Discounts!

the Dynamic Discount Duo, Kevin and Jeff, roam Chestertown in search of bargains for students

K: Hi, I'm Kevin and this is Jeff. We're from The Washington College Elm and we're here to find out about this place just in case students want to buy used cars. What's your name?
M: Mark.
K: How long have you been working in the car business?
M: Six years.
K: Six years? Do you like it?
M: Yeah.
K: How'd you get into it?
M: The owner approached me about it one day.
K: You were just walking down the street, and he said: "Hey, you look like you could sell cars"?
M: No, he called me.
K: Oh, were you guys friends?
M: Yeah.
K: Have you always been into cars since you were a kid and everything? Are you the kind of guy who sees a car going down the street, and says, "Ford, 1933, missing the rear axle, had the fender replaced, and the hubcaps were bought at K-mart."? Are you that kind of guy?
M: Yeah.
K: Okay, there's a car coming down the street. See that blue thing?
M: It's a Jeep CJ5 or 7. About '81 or '82.
K: Jeff, do you know what that car is?
J: It's blue. It's a blue car.
K: What kind of cars do you guys carry?
M: Pretty much anything. Foreign. Domestic. Whatever you want.
K: What kind of price ranges do you guys usually run?
M: I would say probably from $2,000 anywhere on up. We've sold cars as much as $30,000 too.
K: Do you offer any kind of student discount?
M: Not really. We just deal with the local banks, and the banks in Delaware. Whatever the rate is, is what we can offer.
J: I've got a matchbox car here, would that count as a trade-in or something for one of those miniature cars over there in the showcase?
M: No, I'm sorry. Those are the owner's personal cars there.
K: Jeff, I don't know what you're talking about. You've got a little kiddie car over there, is that for little kids to ride around in while their parents are trying to decide whether or not to buy the real thing?
M: No, it's for sale.
K: I can buy that?
M: If you have $1,350.
K: I could cruise around campus in that bad boy?
M: You probably could.
K: Think I could pick up chicks in that?
M: That's up to you. I don't know where you'd put them.
K: Do you get a lot of students up here?
M: We get a few college students up here.
K: So you've actually sold cars to College students?
M: A few, yeah. So you go to the College?
K: Yeah, we work for the paper. We do a column where we go around to different places, usually restaurants, but we'd thought it'd be a nice change of pace to, you know, get a car.
M: Sounds pretty good.
J: I've got twenty bucks. Will that get me anything?
M: Twenty bucks? I don't know if you're going to get anything for twenty bucks. Maybe a part.
J: What kind of parts can you get for twenty bucks?
M: There's quite a few auto parts you can get for twenty bucks. Filters.
K: You can get a whole bag full of filters, Jeff.
J: Wow, that's a good deal.
K: Do you guys sell "The Club"?
M: No.
K: What if someone tries to steal your cars? In a thief sees "The Club", he just keeps on going, but these cars, they'll probably go for.
M: We just hope someone can recover them if not, insurance takes care of them.
K: Have you had trouble with people stealing cars because they weren't protected by "The Club"?
M: Oh yeah. We've had a BMW and a Nissan Maxima stolen one year. They were both recovered.
K: What condition where they in when they were recovered?
M: They weren't hurt. Just ran 'em out of gas and left them.
K: These are all used cars?
M: That's all we sell.
K: These are trade-ins?
M: Trade-ins and some of them we get from sales.
K: Are any of them repossessed cars? Like maybe a drug dealer used it, and then ...
M: No, they usually sell them at government auctions.
K: So you don't think any drug dealers had these cars?
M: I would say probably not.
K: But there might be a big bag of crack in the glove compartment when you buy a car?
M: I hope not.
K: Do you search the cars for crack before you sell them?
M: We do search them, but we aren't specifically searching for crack, I've never even thought about it.
K: Jeff, do you smoke crack?
J: No.
K: Do you have any questions?
J: About crack?
K: No. About cars.
J: Uhh, no. Not really. I like cars. They get you from one place to another. I use "The Club" on my car because someone tried to steal it once.
K: Are you thinking about trading your car in for one of these?
J: No.
K: What kind of car would you recommend to a College student? An affordable, nice kind of car. What kind of car do you drive?
M: A Mazda 626.
K: Nice. Do you tear around town in that thing?
M: Is that in it?
K: Tear around town. Drive around like a maniac!
M: No.
K: Do you pick up chicks with that one?
M: No, I'm married.
K: You're married? How does your wife like your car?
M: She loves it.
K: So you take her for joyrides?
M: Yeah.
K: Yeah, I bet you do. What are all these trophies for? Are these for good salesmanship?
M: No, they're hood ornaments.
K: What kind of hood ornament do you have on your car?
M: None. Would you want one on yours?
K: I don't know, you're the one selling them.
M: They're not for sale. They're from the Franklin Mint.
K: Oh, like the Civil War Chess pieces?
M: Well, similar. These are from the Auto Collection.
K: What's your favorite kind of hood ornament?
M: I don't like hood ornaments.
K: You're not into hood ornaments? What if we got a big picture of Jeff's head, and turned that into a hood ornament? I think that would make a great hood ornament. This guy's got a striking profile.
M: I'm not even going to comment on that one.
K: How about you, Jeff? Would you like your head turned into a hood ornament?
J: Yeah.
K: I can do that for you.
J: Cool.
K: Do you don't offer any kind of student discount? How about a hundred bucks? In the grand scheme of things, how much is a hundred bucks? That's not a lot, but it might bring some students out here.
M: I think we can work that out.
K: I'm game. I'm ready. I want this discount. I know there's a lot of people at school ready to buy some cars.
M: A hundred dollars is fine.
K: That's good. Is that a deal?
M: Yes.
K: What's the name of this place again?
M: Geno's Automotive Service.
K: Awesome! We got a hundred dollar student discount at Geno's Automotive Service on used cars. Who should they talk to?
M: Mark or Sharon.
K: Excellent. Talk to Mark because he knows everything about cars. He'll even tell you about hood ornaments. Is that correct?
M: I don't like hood ornaments. Ω

Bound For Glory:

The United States Holocaust Memorial Museum

Sarah Bell

For the past semester in my English class, I have been reading and absorbing material dealing with the Holocaust. Lucky for me, I enjoy reading the books that are assigned and I am completely drawn into the survivor's stories. This is not to say that I am a total freak who finds pleasure in reading about the obliteration of a human race. The deliberate genocide of the Jewish population is incomprehensible to me, yet I am intrigued by it all. I am intrigued by the courage of those that helped the Jews, and I am confounded by the way of thinking of people like Hitler. The will and determination of the Jews is something that I can only hope to ever possess.

My fascination brought me to the Holocaust museum in D.C. over Christmas break and again with my English class a couple of weekends ago. The first time that I went to the museum, it only took me a couple of hours to get through all of the displays. I was drained and my eyes hurt from all of the intense reading. I came away from the museum educated but untouched.

The second time that I went was a completely different experience. My English teacher accompanied us on our excursion, which made all of the difference. She explained that this museum was set up in one of the most unique and ingenious buildings in the world. The design of the building was in itself a separate entity from the museum. I had not noticed the architecture the first time that I went but when I entered the museum for the second time, the architecture seemed to close in on me from all sides, literally.

When you first enter the museum, you are rudely shoved into an elevator with everyone and their mother. Claustrophobia sets in and you slowly realize how the people feel in that Dial commercial. You are then corralled onto the third floor of the museum. The displays are dimly lit and your eyes feel like they are going to fall out of their sockets by the time you have finished the whole museum. In some parts of the museum, the hallways are very narrow and you find yourself rubbing shoulders with the person next to you and apologizing every other second for stepping on their toes. Connecting some of the exhibits are walkways that you can look out of and see the rest of the museum below you. This, my teacher explained, was supposed to recreate the look-out posts where the German soldiers watched over their Jewish prey.

I know that I am making the museum sound like a living hell, but you are really only aware of these things subconsciously. You are more wrapped up in the incredible exhibits. Yes, there is a lot of reading but there are also artifacts from the camps including a train car that was most likely used to transport the Jews.

As I said before, it only took me a couple of hours to tour the museum the first time. But, when I went with my English class, it took me at least four hours. Since we had been reading Holocaust literature and I was familiar with some of the survivors, a lot of the exhibits had more meaning to me. They say that the pen is mightier than the sword and this is evident throughout the museum. The stories of the Jews are written in stone on the walls of the museum. They speak louder than anything else there. They can be heard over top of the gunfire and over the German's shouting voices.

Maybe in some way I am taking on that philosophy by writing this article. I urge you to go to the Holocaust Museum but I have no right to force it upon you. But if you do go, listen carefully and you will hear the quiet yet distinct voices of the Jewish people.

"...piss and blood in a railroad car, 100 people, gypsies, queers, and David's stars, this train is bound for glory..."
-Indigo Girls Ω

BIKEWORK
BICYCLES - ACCESSORIES - REPAIRS
Have your bicycle ready for spring.
Free estimate on tune-ups.
Pierre Gaudion 208 Cross Street
(410) 778 - 6940

Washington baseball plays five games in Florida

Erika K. Ford

1994 was one of the most successful years in Washington College baseball history, with a 17-10 Sho'men record and a second place finish in the Centennial Conference.

This season, Washington looks to do just as well, and even better.

Coach Ed Athey returns to the diamond for his 35th year in connection with Washington baseball. A 1947 graduate of W.C., he has coached varsity baseball, soccer, basketball, cross-country, tennis, and track and field since 1948. He was inducted into the National Directors of Athletics Hall of Fame, as well as the Hall of Fame of Washington College.

During Spring Break last week, the Sho'men traveled to Florida to take on five eastern colleges. Losing four games and winning one was a tough way to begin the spring, but the season lasts until early May, plenty of time to recuperate. Against SUNY-Stony Brook, Washington lost 7-3. The Sho'men also fell to Susquehanna University 8-6. Washington lost to Rutgers at Newark 6-3. SUNY-Brockport slid past the Sho'men 10-8 in a tight game. Washington was victorious over Western New England College, in their only win, 8-5. This past Tuesday's game against Delaware Valley College was canceled due to rain.

Coach Ed Athey said the main concern of the morning staff is "Will the pitching staff come around? ... I'm confident that if we pitch well, we'll hit well, and things will work out. We're a good hitting team."

In Florida the Sho'men hit .313 overall as a team. Sophomores Jarrett Pasko and Scott Quinn led the team, with Pasko batting .400 and Quinn batting .687.

"Primary pitching will be done by junior Kevin Roland," Athey said. "Scott Quinn will also pitch when not in the catcher position or playing third base."

Junior Brian Rush is the team's third pitcher, and Rush is also a first-string catcher for Washington. Sophomores Andy Moore and Jarrett Pasko will also take the mound occasionally, as will freshman Sean Tyszko.

"We'll have a solid staff of six or so pitching," Coach Athey said.

Three players will be vying to man first base: junior Chris Eaton, freshman Pete Simmons, and senior Max Walton. Tyszko will play second, backed up by fellow freshman Mike Hinkle. Pasko will be at shortstop, with Quinn to his right at third base. Outfield positions will be likely played by sophomore Tim Pilarski, junior Chad Campbell, and freshmen Matt Flanagan and Paul Taylor.

Our chief competition this season will be Johns Hopkins," Athey said. "Once again they'll be the powerhouse in the Conference."

Washington's four assistant coaches this season include Al Streelman, class of '69 and assistant to Athey since 1979. He was a great pitcher during his years of play, but also was a first- and second-baseman and center fielder. Steve Sandebeck, '73, has been a volunteer assistant for ten years, and works primarily with the catching staff. Keith "Whitey" Whiteford graduated from Washington College last year and is also an assistant coach. Whiteford was a Centennial All-Conference baseman, an All-Mid-Atlantic selection, and was named Outstanding Pitcher in the Centennial Conference last year. This is Whiteford's first season coaching. Last year he was voted the Sho'men's MVP. John Scott is the fourth assistant coach. A retiree living in Chestertown, he helps run and organize the team's daily practices.

Tomorrow the Sho'men take on Muhlenberg in a doubleheader, their first Centennial Conference match up of the spring. Thursday they'll host Lincoln in a doubleheader starting at 1 p.m. Ω

Sailing Team ready for Spring season

Ian Walsh, Dina Carlson, Jo Wrzesinsky

Over the weekend of March 4-5, the Washington College Sailing Team traveled to St. Mary's College in southern Maryland to compete in the St. Mary's Collegiate Sailing Invitational. Racing against college sailing's toughest division in the country, they were able to create a foundation which they can build on as the season progresses. On Saturday the light, shifting winds along with the rain and cold, made sailing fast difficult. Due to the light winds, Sailing Team Captain Chris "Low-Rider" Hargett made the decision to use combinations of light-weight sailors. In the "A" fleet, Matt Wilder skippered, while Jo Wrzesinsky and Don Kissling rotated at the crew position. In the "B" fleet, Ian Walsh skippered with Dina Carlson crewing on both days. Tony Higgins and Hart Askew gained valuable experience attending their first race. The team missed the presence and experience of Chris "Wolfie" Wolf, who is ineligible to sail this season. After the first day of racing, the top schools were St. Mary's, Navy, Old Dominion, and Princeton. Washington College sailed to a pleasing mid-fleet standing by the end of the regatta. The team was happy to be exposed to top-level competition and looks forward to racing in the Area C Eliminations in early April at Georgetown. Later in the season, the team will be entering their women sailors in a women's regatta for the first time. Anyone interested in participating in this fun event should contact Chris Hargett at x. 8924. Ω

W.C. Warthogs hold off St. Mary's

(for a while, anyway)

Paul Small

Washington made a valiant and quite remarkable effort in their March 4 rugby match against St. Mary's College of Maryland. The Warthogs marked St. Mary's to a man, and harried the opposition to frustration. We were first to score with a penalty kick near the middle of the first half, thanks to the golden boot of Ravi Jayatileke. St. Mary's was held scoreless until the second half when they leveled the score. Slightly shaken after the score, the Warthogs recovered and played a more defensive game. St. Mary's was quick to exploit the Washington squad (moderately winded due to a winter's debauchery and high living) as they drove in for the only try of the match. Washington lifted their heads and pushed hard, finishing the game, losing by a margin rather admirable considering the team's "grass-roots" background and recent match history.

Greg Walker, treasurer for the team, remarked optimistically, "We have a great team here ... We simply need to practice to realize our potential." Indeed, with only a week's practice, the team functioned phenomenally well, as the forwards applied constant pressure, and the backs performed with coordination and grace.

The squad and spectators weathered well the harsh arctic blasts that rolled across the pitch, and we would like to thank those hearty souls who came out to support the Warthogs! Ω

A future in the making

Ken Pipkin

Washington College lacrosse is in full swing after a rough start that leaves them with a 1-4 record. But the Sho'men have a lot to look forward to and a lot to be proud of. The 1-4 record does not say enough to describe the teams they were playing. Before we can even look at the scores we need to look at the team itself.

Washington College has had a facelift. Coming off a 10-5 season last year and 5-1 in the Centennial Conference with a bid to the Division III Championships. The Sho'men lost a large portion of their starters as well as the support they could go to all last season. The Sho'men, with new head coach John Haus, have taken this in stride and have used it to their advantage. Haus comes from being the assistant coach at Johns Hopkins and has taken the reigns to rebuild a team that has potential beyond belief. With those abilities, he is rebuilding the offense as well as reshaping and further strengthening the defense. Along with Haus comes new assistant coaches Rusty Pritzlaff, and Todd Cavallaro. Pritzlaff comes from Salisbury State University where he was an attackman. Cavallaro comes from Hopkins and graduated last year captain of the Hopkins squad. Returning to the coaching staff is Ted Greeley, a 1993 W.C. graduate.

Looking at the starting line-up of the Sho'men there are only four returning starters. The attack has had to revamp with the loss of several additions. The Sho'men's attack rests on the leadership of Bart Jaeger, the returning leading scorer of the team, to reach new heights and to mold new freshman starters Brian King and Jamie Pollock into the explosive offense with which the Sho'men have always been synonymous. With the formation of the new and the experience of Jaegar the offense will be up to speed in no time.

The midfield of the Sho'men comes back with Senior co-captain Christian Cole, Junior George Atterbury, and Sophomore Andrew Van Ogtrop, all of whom will hold great responsibility making sure the Sho'men convert ground balls into goals as well as stop opponents from clearing the ball.

The defense will hold the brunt of the early part of the season with the help of Junior Kevin Harms, and the new defensive face of Chris McGlone. The Sho'men as a whole have a lot of new faces, but several matured players will lead the team in the direction to improve their record of last year. In goal the race is still on among Lindsay Lee returning Sophomore Kevin Wakelee, and Freshman Andy Taible to fight for the goal position.

W.C. opened the season against the Naval Academy where they suffered a hard defeat, but both coach Haus and coach Richie Meade of the Naval Academy thought that the Sho'men played a great game. Coach Meade said he saw great things from the Sho'men. He thought the Sho'men put together a great game and will have a great season. Coach Haus, after his debut, said that he asked his players to give him minutes of great ball and they did exactly that. He went on to say that his team is young both offensively and defensively.

The next games the Sho'men played were against Johns Hopkins and Gwynnsborough College, both of which ended in defeat for the Sho'men. Yet they were more learning experiences for a growing team. The Sho'men finally placed their rage onto Dickinson last Saturday and showed the terror they could put into the eyes of their opponents on both sides of the field. W.C. suffered a defeat against Denison, another team ranked higher than the Sho'men this year.

The toughest of all the battles will be the battle within the Sho'men themselves. It is the battle of a new team forming into an alliance of men who put fear into their opponent.

W.C.'s lacrosse record is 1-4 but that is after playing two nationally ranked Division I teams as well as older highly-ranked teams. With the formation of the offense, and with the defense and the rest of the team coming up to speed, the Sho'men look to be a very dangerous team to contend with. There are many new faces to recognize and new styles of play, but the same heart and desire to win for W.C. is out on the field. The Sho'men are ranked thirteenth nationally in Division III. Practice and hard work will bring the wins that all desire. Once the chemistry is intact and all is in full swing, W.C. will be the lacrosse Mecca of the future. The next home game for the Sho'men is today at 3:30 out on Kibler against Oswego State. This soccer will be there to see a future in the making and you should be there too. Ω

In Chestertown for the summer?

Need a job?

Work for WCDS!

Applications are now being accepted from students interested in working for the Washington College Dining Services - Summer conference Program. Applications are available in any WCDS office and must be returned to the Dining Hall by Friday, March 31. Summer Conference employment will begin on Monday, May 15 and end Thursday August 17. If you have any questions please feel free to contact Darrell Jester at x. 7785.

Spring Break in Florida:

Sho'men and Men's crew teams improve their records and their tans

Jennifer Dougherty

After sixteen hours in cramped vans, one flat tire, and about a million "South of the Border" signs, the rowing team was just about aching for the flat water and sunny skies of Florida.

Practicing twice a day, rotating between "early" practices (6 a.m. to 8 a.m., then 2 p.m. to 4 p.m.) and "late" practices (8 a.m. to 10 a.m., then 4 p.m. to 6 p.m.), they got their fill. The trip culminated in the Metro Cup regatta, held at Winter Park in Florida.

The women's teams vastly improved their rowing techniques and styles, their strength and endurance, AND most importantly, their ability to nap on command.

This time in Florida was vital for the cohesion and growth of the women's varsity team as it has expanded its size to incorporate the potential of a number of novice women. The new varsity members are: Tara McKee and Keeling Harris for the women's heavyweight eight; Anne Petracco for the women's lightweight four, and Chris Chiarchiaro for the women's lightweight double.

The women's novice team holds real promise for this upcoming season as they have had the highest return rate from years past. This reflects the novice women's true dedication to the sport and to each other. Though the novice women did not medal at the Metro Cup, they show real determination and heart in practice as well as on the race course.

The lightweight women's four, (Melina Olson, Taber Overall, Robyn Mitchell, Anne Petracco with Chris Chiarchiaro as coxswain), placed second behind UCF, (University of Central Florida) at the Metro Cup. The women are confident that they will tap into the incredible amount of potential that they each bring to the team and row competitively throughout the season.

The same may be said of the heavyweight women's eight, (Tonya Howell, Stacey Hammond, Jennifer Dougherty, Laurel Harris, Liza Dickson, Tara McKee, Amy Peterson, Keeling Harris with Lisa Brown as coxswain). Though they did not medal at the Metro Cup, there is a vast amount of potential within each of the women to row hard and win.

The women are working hard to establish the boat connection and are expected to be a competitive crew. At the Metro Cup, the heavyweight women's four, (Howell, Hammond, Dougherty, Harris and Brown), placed first in their event over Rollins and UCF.

The women are very excited for their season and anxious to test their strength and boat speed against many other crews. When asked about the four's goal, Lisa Brown simply said: "to win." This sentiment speaks true to all of the women's goals for this season. Best of luck! Ω

Regis de Ramel

The Washington College crew team enjoyed yet another successful Spring break in Florida at the luxurious Pines Resort Inn. During their stay, both the men's varsity and novice endured early morning and late afternoon practices for a chance to improve both in fitness, technique, but most importantly a chance to work on their tans.

In order to determine who would race in the varsity eight, the varsity men seat-raced each other early in the week. After seven grueling seat-races, (from stroke to bow) Adam Scholl, Mike Beardsley, Regis de Ramel, Doug Peterson, John Shannahan, James Pitt, Harrison Gallagher, and Steve Kim won their respective seats from stern to bow. Skip Gibson was then elected by the eight as their coxswain.

During the middle of the week the team was invited to wake up at 4 in the morning to scrimmage against Florida Tech. Despite the early morning rise and the fact that most of our opponents were full scholarship rowers from Yugoslavia, the men's varsity landed 3 out of 4 wins over Florida Tech.

On Saturday, the team was then invited to race as an exhibition team against the University of Central Florida and Rollins College at the Metro Cup in Winter Park. Beginning at 9 a.m. the men's varsity 4, (from stroke to bow) Scholl, Peterson, de Ramel, Pitt, and Karen Wright as their coxswain pulled for a first place against the notorious Tiger Four - the University of Central Florida, Rollins College, and our second boat with Brendan Norris, Mike Beardsley, Jeff Lee, and Ian Shannahan finishing in their respective order.

Later that morning, the same men's varsity eight that had raced against Florida Tech, earlier on in the week, went on to win over both Rollins and UCF. Unofficially, the eight also went on to best the previous course record by 4 seconds.

The novice eight also walked away with a first place and two third places. In the men's novice eight, Fredl Kanther, Andrew Stein, Tyler Benedum, Kevin Quinn, Dan Biscoe, Chris Plez, Mike Haggerty, Ryan Heard, and Patrick Walters (as coxswain) came in a close third only a few seats behind first place. In the men's novice four race, the heavyweight four with Kanther, Stein, Benedum, Haggerty and Walters finished first. In the same race, the lightweight four , with Biscoe, Quinn, Heard, and Pelz finished second.

The men's varsity and novice definitely proved to be a strong factor at the Metro Cup in Florida. The Sho'men now look forward to this Saturday's home race and more victories to come throughout rest of the season. Ω

Women's tennis spends week in Florida

Erika K. Ford

Up against two tough NAIA women's tennis teams in Florida over break, Washington lost two matches.

"We're 0-3 for the season so far," head coach Tim Gray said, "but that's because we've played some very good competition."

Against Flagler College, ranked fifth in the NAIA, a different league than our Centennial Conference, the Sho'women lost 5-2.

"We had some close matches at the top," Gray said.

Senior Diana Clausen playing at three singles won. Junior Kim Prettyman at six singles won also. Three set matches were lost by freshman number one singles Annabelle Flores, and by number two singles Paulina Sierra Samano, also a freshman.

Playing against Florida Community College, ranked third in the NAIA, Washington suffered another loss. Close three setters at number one and number two were achieved, though the Sho'women lost 7-0.

Coach Gray is looking ahead for the team's first victory.

"We've got some strong players," he noted. "If we apply ourselves and work hard, I'm confident we'll beat last year's record." Last year Washington tied for fourth in the Centennial Conference in women's tennis.

"The key for us is consistent play from the bottom half of our line-up," Coach Gray said.

Two Sho'women tennis players agree with Gray. Sophomore Melissa Ellwanger believes that one strength of the team is that "we're good at pushing each other to play our best." Sophomore Amy Rinehart said "we have a lot of team unity this year, and that really helps motivate our players."

Tomorrow women's tennis hosts a doubleheader with some tough competition. Playing in key matches against Mary Washington at 10 a.m. and Muhlenberg at 2 p.m., the Sho'women hope for their first wins of the season. Ω

Spring Break in California:

Sho'men tennis record is 5-1 after a week of intense matches

Paulina Sierra

The men's tennis team went to California for Spring Break. Their first match, on March 12, the Sho'men played against U.C. Riverside.

Damian Polla played another solid game as he defeated Pablo Mazlumian 6-3 and 7-5. Miroslav Beran won by 4-6, 6-2, and 6-1 to beat Jeremy Munson. Michael Kember played a tough match against Tom Fateni, and came out on top, 6-2, 4-6, and 7-5. Andrew King, who was coming off a great win before break, lost against Rod Woods 2-6, 6-4, and 6-2. Buba Soysa won easily against Sunny Kaura 6-0 and 6-1. Andrew Moffat another pre-break wonder, lost 3-6, 6-2, and 6-2.

In doubles Robin Sanders and Polla defeated Mazlumian and Munson 8-5. Kember and King defeated Fatehi and Woods 8-6. Beran and Soysa defeat Ed Newson and Andrew Cortez 8-2. The Sho'men certainly took control all over the courts in the doubles.

On March 13 the Sho'men played against Southern California College. Sanders played against Pavey Robbins and won by 6-2 and 6-2. Beran defeated Ross Andel 7-6(5), 6-2. Kember defeated Matt Scott 6-1 and 6-2. King defeated Eric Baker 7-6(4) 1-6 and 6-0. Soysa defeated Kevin Villar 6-1 and 7-5. Moffat lost against Ryan Lewis 1-6 and 2-6. In doubles Sander and Polla defeated Robbins and Villar 8-2. Kember and King defeated Andel and Lewis 9-8(1) Beran and Soysa defeated Scott and Baker 8-1.

On March 15 the Sho'men played against Claremont College. Sander played against Nguyen and had to be retired in the second set. Polla defeated Sadayasu 6-1 and 6-4. Beran defeated Ivan Zinn 6-2 and 6-1. Kember won by 6-4 and 6-3 against Shigeta. Soysa defeat Bhader 5-7, 6-4, and 6-2.

King won 7-5 and 6-4. Doubles #1 won 8-4, #2 8-5 and #3 8-4. The Sho'men played smart and this meet was considered to be the best one of the break.

On March 17 the Sho'men played against U.C. Santa Cruz. Sanders defeated Noah Rippner 6-1 and 6-2. Polla lost 1-6, 7-5 and 4-6 against Ving. Beran defeat Andre Herke 6-1, 6-1. Kember lost against Jonathan Harper 6-4 and 7-5. Soysa lost against Shapiro 6-7, 6-2, and 7-6(7) King lost against Netimi 7-6 and 6-1.

In doubles Sanders and Polla lost 8-5. Kember and King won -8(9) the second doubles unexpectedly. Beran and Soysa lost the third doubles 8-5. U.C. Santa Cruz was the most difficult opponent in the nationals of last year. The Sho'men beat them 5-4 and this year U.C Santa Cruz has came on strong. The tennis team played nervous and could not get the win. There is a great possibility they will get revenge later in the semester, when they face each other in nationals.

Many people have predicted that the Sho'men tennis team is going to come through successfully. Some of the players think they did not play as well as they could have during the spring-break due to their lack of concentration. The conditions were not as favorable as they wanted them, but still their higher lever of competition is respected. The reality is that the hard-training they are doing will make them achieve higher goals. Ω

Easter Seal Golf Classic to be held in St. Michaels

During 1994, Century 21 agents across America raised over $5 million to support the work of the Easter Seal Society. This year, Century 21 plans to surpass that goal by an additional $3 million. Local Century 21 Today's Choice Realty owner and president, Larry Wittman has made a personal and professional commitment to provide programs and services to children and adults with disabilities by sponsoring the 4th Annual Golf Classic for Easter Seal on May 11, 1995. The Harbourtowne Country Club in St. Michaels, Maryland will host this year's event.

Registration begins at 11 a.m. and a shotgun start gets the game started at noon. Entry fee is $100 and includes cart, greens fee, 2 Mulligans, refreshments on course, hole in one package, open bar, dinner, plus a chance to win prizes valued in excess of $2,000. For more information contact Wittman or Ellen Simmons at (410) 822-7444.Ω

Humphrey's Point Farm

on scenic Swan Creek near Rock Hall offers a full care event horse facility with a private atmosphere. We have two stalls available at reasonable rates. Also TB event horses for lease and for sale. Instruction, trailering.

639-2832

The other side of the bridge: Where the action is

Sho'women's softball in sunny Florida

Dani Heath

Last week the softball team traveled to Florida for Spring Break '95, along with what seemed like half the nation's college students. In Ocoee, Florida, about 20 miles from Orlando, 18 players and 2 coaches stayed, competing for their first year in the annual Rebel Spring Games. Among their competition were other Division III colleges, as well as those in Divisions I and II. Approximately 150 teams competed in this year's month-long program held at the West Orange Girls Club. During their stay, the Sho'women played ten non-Conference games, two per day. The team also had one day off during the week to relax at Cocoa Beach and rest in the Florida sun, and took a few nights away to go to Disney World and the Hard Rock Cafe, thus managing to have a fun week as well as work hard at playing softball.

The week began Sunday morning at 10:45 a.m. with a game against Trenton State College, a nationally ranked Division III college. The Sho'women, although defeated, were able to score 2 runs against this team, a feat never thought possible against such a team. The week continued with Washington facing teams such as University of Wisconsin River Falls, Fontbonne, Simpson, UW Stout, UW Superior, Illinois Benedictine, Montclare College, UW La Crosse, and UW Oshkosh.

The pitchers for Washington definitely got a workout during the week. With all four pitchers on the team being freshmen, they were unsure of what to expect in Florida, and for the upcoming season. Now with ten games under their belt, they know exactly what to do when the real Conference season begins. Emily Kessler, Bridgette Shannon-Rump, and Tanya Bennett fired for the Sho'women, relentless in their quest for a victory. And this victory was achieved, perhaps not in the books, but definitely for the team. When asked about the week in Florida, starting pitcher Tanya replied "It was a moral victory."

Although the week ended without a win, there was a definite personal victory achieved for the team. Coming into the season with 10 freshmen in the lineup, over half the team, this young team did not expect to accomplish as much as they did down south. Being able to score against nationally ranked colleges, hold nationally ranked players in the field, and hit against nationally ranked pitchers are victories they can certainly be proud of. If nothing else, the team learned what they are capable of, and they returned what they need to work on to improve their game. Over the course of the week, from game one to game 10, there was marked improvement seen by all. The Sho'women came out from behind two shutouts in the middle of the week, to almost winning the last two games, both of which were tied going into the last inning.

Just being down in Florida seeing what other teams were doing and how they played was a great experience for the Sho'women. The team learned from these other colleges and not only learned many new plays, they also came away with several new skills. The players remained upbeat and loud throughout their defeats, showing the coaches that not only were they fighting, they wouldn't give up and they wouldn't shut up, no matter what the score looks said. The level of intensity felt during the first game remained throughout the week.

The team walked away from the field after the last game with a sense of accomplishment and experience. The defeats of the week were not important to the team. Learning what to do to improve, and getting experience with teams out of their league has definitely prepared the Sho'women for their Conference season, which will begin next week against Gettysburg at home.

According to Gina Coco, freshman outfielder, "The trip was beneficial. We learned many things which will certainly help us during the season." The teams Washington will compete against in their Conference are much different than those played against in Florida. None of these teams will begin their season with the experience the Sho'women already have. The players and the coaches believe that this will definitely be a winning season for W.C. softball. Ω

What's happening in women's lacrosse

Peggy Busker

Women's lacrosse looks good this year as they head into a jam-packed schedule. With only eight returning players (Megan McCurdy, Jill Schultz, Peggy Busker, Carolyn Rouland, Marcia Flinn, Elizabeth Moga, Amy Scarlett, and Elizabeth Barlow), the team looks good. The team is young, with only one senior and two juniors. New to the team are many freshmen who add depth to the team.

"We are definitely rebuilding this year from last year," said Coach Sarah Feyerherm, "but we are much more of a cohesive team this year, we are playing better as a team." She wennt on to say, "We are ahead of where we were at this time last year and are ready to play the schedule of the toughest Division III Conference in the nation."

Spring break was another Washington College special as the team ate in The Cove and experienced unprecedented beautiful Chestertown weather. The break concluded with a scrimmage against Villa Julie College outside of Baltimore. Despite the few subs on the Sho'women bench, the team played very well. A strong improvement from the earlier scrimmage against Anne Arundle Community College was evident. Few fouls were committed by Washington and many goals were scored across the roster. The defense continued to play well as a unit and shut down many of the opponents' offensive plays.

The final score was 14-13 in favor of Villa Julie, but Washington had a clear goal to play the scrimmage to learn and develop a sense of playing as a team, thus the loss was only on the scoreboard.

The team has a tough schedule of games, with usually only a day of practice in between and would like school support as they set their hearts to have a winning season. So make that trek over the bridge (as if walking to The Vern) and stop instead to watch some serious lacrosse. Ω

POW

Many teams played above and beyond over break, it was very difficult to have only one player of the week. Crew had an awesome week in Florida as they scared many colleges as they raced towards the finish line. The Championship Men's Tennis team won many hard matches out in rainy California, Robin Sanders was unstoppable.

Washington Crew faced early morning practices and still managed to come home with four GOLD medals to win the regatta. The women's varsity four, the men's varsity four and eight and the men's novice four. They basically kicked some butt and took names.

The men's lacrosse team played well against Dickinson to take their first conference victory at 18-3. Freshman Dave Tiabl played solidly in goal. The women's lacrosse team heads into their season this week. Over break they had a solid scrimmage against Villa Julie College to excite the players about the upcoming season.

The women's tennis team had a disappointing break in North Carolina, they played well, but could not get the wins, they are glad to be home and face their conference rivals.

Sho'men baseball has a current record of 1-4, they lost four tough matches in Florida and won against Western New England at the end of break, to go home with a win under their belt. They open up their conference games this Saturday against Muhlenberg.

The women's softball team went south as well to Florida, they had a disappointing time as well, but one player stood out specifically third basewoman Amy Polvoski. She batted over .500 the entire break to give the Sho'women expectations for their upcoming season. Polvoski hails from Linthicum, MD where she attended Arch Bishop Spalding High School and perfected her softball game. She is a sophomore majoring in psychology. Tanya Bennet and Emily Kessler receive honorable mentions for their excellent pitching. The dynamic duo will be a definite asset to the team.

Blood, bruises and wins:

Another ice hockey season comes to an end

Dave Kraft

The Washington College Ice Hockey Club concluded its third season this year. Despite the team's record of 1-9-1, the Sho'men had a competitive year. They were horribly outnumbered in every game, which gave their opponents an immediate advantage. The addition of five freshmen helped the team dramatically.

Many offensive records were broken. Mike Mullen proved to be the offensive star of the year. He broke the record for most goals in a season, with 10. He also tied the record for most points in a season with 14. Freshman Rodney Beaman tied the record for assists in a season with 7 and was second on the team in scoring with 11 points. Goal tender Andy Lopatin finished the year with an impressive 83.3% save percentage. Freshman Chris Daily also contributed five goals. Senior Scott Dervaes played in all 11 games, scored three goals, and led the team in penalty minutes.

The defense was anchored by the upperclassmen. Junior Dave Kraft was second on the team in assists (five), and fourth in points (seven). John Moreland also served as a defensive anchor, playing in all eleven games. Seniors Topher Head and Tim Reardon rounded off the corps.

The Sho'men played in the competitive Mason-Dixon Conference, against much larger, more established schools. Tuesday, the club lost to Dickinson by a score of 8-2. The Sho'men knew they had their work cut out for them when they saw the Red Devils arrive in their chartered bus. Once again, the Red Devils outnumbered the Sho'men by twice their number. The Sho'men played an inspired game which included many highlights. The Sho'men completely out-hit Dickinson from start to finish, earning the Devils's respect early. Outstanding Individual performances were turned in by freshman goal tender Andy Lopatin, who made an incredible 59 saves, and freshman winger Mike Mullen, who scored both Sho'men goals. Though their record might not have been the best, the Sho'men more than held their own.

Season Scoring

	Goals	Assists	Points
Mike Mullen	10	4	14
Rodney Beaman	4	7	11
Chris Daily	5	3	8
Dave Kraft	2	5	7
Tim Reardon	1	3	4
Scott Dervaes	3	0	3
Todd Barto	0	3	3
Graham Munda	1	1	2
John Moreland	1	1	2
Andy Lopatin	0	2	2
Jon Paine	0	2	2
Topher Head	0	1	1

Squash at W.C.

There will be a general meeting on Monday, March 27, at 7 p.m at the Student Center.

Students who are in the squash club as well as students who would like to join are invited.

Washington College Club Lacrosse vs. Loyola College

Sunday, March 26, 3 p.m., Board of Education Field on Washington Avenue

Where You Need To Be This Week!

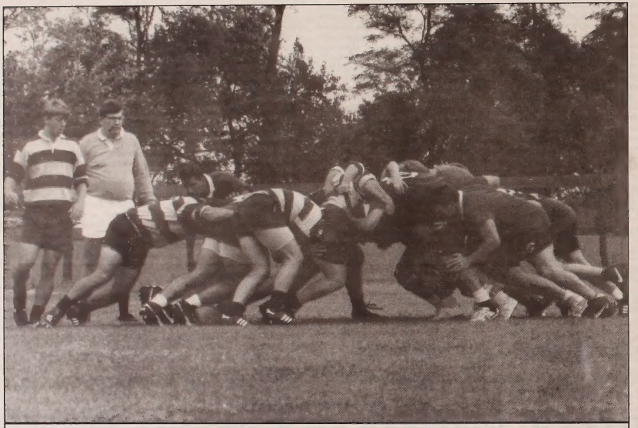
Sat., March 25

Baseball
@ Muhlenberg,1 p.m.
Women's Lacrosse
@ Swarthmore, 2 p.m.
Crew
Home Regatta, 9 a.m.
Softball
vs. Gettysburg, 1 p.m.
Tennis
vs. Muhlenberg, Men 10 a.m., Women 1 p.m.

Sun., March 26

Men's Tennis
vs. Bloomsburg, 11 a.m.

Tuesday March 28



Women's Lacrosse
@ F&M, 4 p.m.

Softball
vs. Swarthmore, 2:30 p.m.

Thurs., March 30

Women's Lacrosse
vs. Ursinus, 4 p.m.

Baseball
vs. Lincoln, 1 p.m.

Salisbury vs. Washington, or Scotland vs. England?
There's no telling from this textbook scrum, perfectly executed by the famous Washington College Rugby Football Club.

Scores

Lacrosse

Men
Washington 6
Johns Hopkins 18
Washington 9
Greensboro 10
Washington 19
Dickinson 3
Washington 4
Denison 8

Women
Washington14
Villa Julie 13

Crew

@Metrocup Winterpark FL.
1st place GOLD medals
Men's varsity 8
Men's varsity 4
Women's varsity 4
Men's Novice 4
3rd place
Women's varsity 8
Men's novice 8
4th place
Women's novice 8
Women's novice 4

Baseball

W.C. 3
Stony Brook 7
W.C. 3
Susquehanna 8
W.C. 3
Rutgers 6
W.C. 9
SUNY-Brockport 10
W.C. 8
Western New England 5

Rugby

W.C. 3
St. Mary's 8

Tennis

Women
W.C. 2
Flagler 5
W.C. 0
Florida Comm. 7

Men
W.C. 5
U. Cal.- Riverside 2
W.C. 6
S. California College 1
W.C. 6
Claremont College 1
W.C. 2
U. Cal.-Santa Cruz 5

The Washington College

Turnip Pie

Volume 66, Number Twenty-one

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Alien to head W.C.

Alien administrator begins presidency next fall

Scott Koon

Dr John Toll, acting president of Washington College, announced yesterday that he would be replaced by Dr. Yelkphdor 7,893. Dr. Yelkphdor, a viscous blob of protein of indeterminate gender, expressed great hopes for the future of Washington College.

"The project of education," Dr. Yelkphdor said "is the refining of young minds. I can imagine no better measure of a school's worth than the quality of its graduates. What I've seen so far from Washington College students and alumni tells me that this College is doing a very fine job indeed."

Dr. Yelkphdor has over twenty years experience as a college administrator, but that was not what brought Washington College to Dr. Yelkphdor's attention. Dr. Yelkphdor holds a doctorate in Xenosociology, and it was through work in this field which made Dr. Yelkphdor aware of Washington College.

There I was, in geosynchronous orbit over the Eastern Shore of Maryland to study the development of mass transit systems on poorly developed planets, when this quaint little college town floats into my view finder. It was love at first sight."

According to Dr. Yelphdor, about seventy percent of the population of Xenor are workers in the education system, and "the other thirty percent are all students. Needless to say, there's a lot of competition for high level jobs in education, so you can imagine how thrilled I was to hear of the opening here at Washington College."

One of the themes Dr. Yelkphdor promised to stress while at Washington College is diversity.

"As the first person of non-terrestrial origin to head up a Centennial Conference college, campus diversity will be a top priority."

Dr. Yelkphdor also plans to conduct a publicity campaign for the school.

"Washington College does well at what it does, but I really don't think the school has been effectively communicating this to the outside world. Next fall I plan on resurrecting thousands of newly dead corpses who will go out and spread the truth about Washington College. That's what Washington College really needs - a vast army of undead apostles shuffling across the highways and byways of the land, zealously evangelizing the cause of the College. That, and maybe a nice chapel."

Acting President Dr. John Toll greets our new president Dr. Yelkphdor.

Dr. Yelkphdor denies that accepting the job here has anything to do with a larger plan by the Xenorians.

"I'm just an academic. So far as I know, none of my colleagues on the homeworld have any plans to fly to earth in their huge war machines and burn up the planet's atmosphere with a ray of pure energy. Nor do I believe that any of my fellow Xenorians are intent on abducting humans for strange experiments of a morally questionable nature. And I'm absolutely certain that no earthling children will replaced by robots so that we can take them back to Xenor and implant telepathic transmitters in their heads so that, at a much later date, we can replace the robots with the children, who will then rise to positions of power to serve as the puppets of their Xenorian overlords, thereby enslaving the entire planet. I deny that completely." Ω

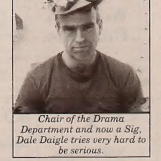
Wolff and Daigle to pledge ZTA, Sigs

Chair of the Drama Department Dale Daigle and Assistant Dean Beverly Wolff were lucky enough to be given bids by greek organizations this semester. They chose to keep their associations secret until they were accepted, but now they want to share the news with the college community.

Assistant Dean and newest Zeta, Beverly Wolff shows off her pledge gifts

Those in Daigle's class know from his trips to the bathroom that conveniently coincide with fire house sirens that he will pledge Phi Sigma. This is a daring move for a member of the Faculty, as his is a fraternity no longer recognized on the Washington College campus.

Wolff has been given a bid by Zeta Tau Alpha and is tickled pink by the prospect of living on the fourth floor of Minta Martin next year.



"There's nothing like the bond between sisters," said Wolff.

Wolff's big sister in the sorority, Denise Hakanson, said that while Wolff doesn't quite fit in with the ZTA's, they've tried to make her feel welcome.

"The fact that she's assistant dean makes it a bit uncomfortable," said Denise. "But she's our sister, and we love her."

Another ZTA said that Wolff is always talking about some guy named Henry and his upcoming birthday.

"For a while we thought he was a Theta," said Dani Heath. Ω

Chair of the Drama Department and now a Sig, Dale Daigle tries very hard to be serious.

Marijuana legalized at W.C.

Marijuana plant named successor to Elm

Scott Koon

Vice President for Admissions and Enrollment Management Kevin Coveney announced last Thursday that marijuana would be legal at Washington College. The new policy was made possible by the recent discovery of an obscure law which denies the United States government authority over the College.

"We were thrilled by the discovery," Coveney said. "The first act of the independent state of Washington College will be to legalize marijuana."

Coveney's announcement came fast on the heels of a secret meeting of the Board of Visitors and Governors. While the full agenda of the meeting has not yet been made public, President Toll has issued a written statement stating that the legalization of marijuana was ratified by a unanimous vote. According to Toll, a large Marijuana plant will replace the Elm as the school's official leafy demigod: "While it is true that the tulip poplar was George Washington's favorite tree, Cannibis Sativa was his favorite plant, and it is only fitting that we do as our founder would have intended."

Last Thursday's announcement was heavily covered by the national media, and thousands of high school seniors sat up and took notice. "The response has been nothing short of miraculous," Coveney told the Elm in an interview this past Wednesday. "We knew that applications would soar, but we never expected the hundreds of thousands of letters which are pouring in. The Maintenance Department has expressed concern to me that weight of the sacks of letters are causing structural damage to the third floor of the Casey Academic Center."

Student opinion on campus is mixed with regard to the new policy. Many residents of Kent House were overjoyed with the announcement, staging a spontaneous celebration which left many stoned off their gourds for days.

SGA President Liz Likens was less enthusiastic, telling The Elm "The legalization policy is a gimmick. Sure, they'll get lots of applications, but what about retention? I mean, you think a lot of freshmen fail out now? Wait 'till you see what'll happen next year."

Coveney also expects that a higher proportion of students will fail out, but denies that this will have any effect on the overall enrollment at Washington College.

"What's really important is that we can increase our enrollment and

See "Marijuana" on 3

Inside This Week's Elm

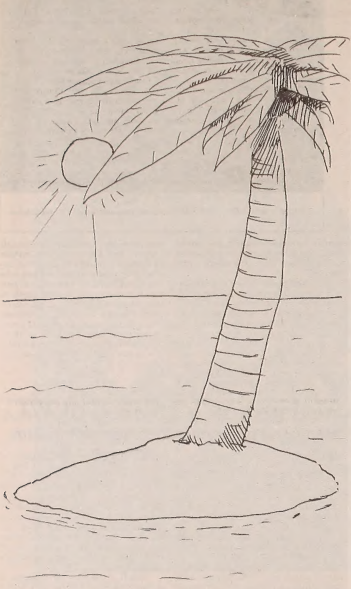
Thinking through...

the Cuban Missile Crisis, the Spanish Inquisition, and the twinkie-weiner sandwich. 9

Fun with Dirt

Matt Kory takes us on a tour of Kent House, with special stops at 117 and North stairwell. .3



W.C. land sold

Developer plans Ted Kennedy theme park; College to move to Guadalajara. π

Commencement speaker named...

Funky J. DaFranco Ristorante Pizzeria to speak. 87

51 days 'til Graduation

AVB

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink
News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Co-Editors
Mindie J. Kaplan and Sarah Bell
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Erika Ford

Mack Daddy
Chuckie
Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Office Manager
Scott Ross Koon
Photo Editor
Debra Spence

This entire issue of The Elm is farce. Some of it is funny. Most of it is not. None of it is meant to offend. Most of it is offensive. We thought it would be great fun. It was just another week in the life of The Elm. We hope you enjoy it. We don't expect you to. We won't cry if you don't like it. It doesn't really matter anyway. We know you aren't reading this. We know you don't read any of this. We know that you are lying when you tell us that you read it. We don't care. It's not like we put any work into this thing. It writes itself really. We just sit here and water it. But we can't feed it after midnight. We did that once. It was not pretty. Actually, Kate, did you leave your pizza here last night?

To the Editor:

Support a good cause

I like The Elm. Now, I'm no expert on things journalistic, but The Elm's good. Those people who work on it must be really great. They're probably cooler than anybody else. Just from reading The Elm, I can tell that the staff members spend hours upon hours upon hours every week to bring you, the average Washington College student, Campus Voices and We Get You Discounts that you can read while you eat and then throw away on your way out of the dining hall. A couple of 'em probably spend hours in Elktay Thursday night / Friday morning just for us. I think that we all owe the Elm staff not only a pat on the collective back, but money – lots of it. I have taken it upon myself to organize a fund to finance a trip to Ireland for next year's editor-in-chief, whoever she (or he) may be. It would be a beautiful gesture of gratitude on the part of the student body. I don't know who might be taking over next year, but that person will have a great deal of responsibility. Wouldn't it be nice to send her (or him) to her (or his) homeland for a month or two?

Let's look at everything The Elm has brought to Washington College:

- Coverage of the construction of the bridge between the library and the Cater Walk. There were even PICTURES. Impressive.
- Coverage of the institution of the use of car boots. Again, a photo. This is hard-hitting journalism.
- Lots and lots of crud.

Send money.

- Kate Meagher

A plea for justice

As a regular reader of The Washington College Elm, I feel it is my duty to say that the Elm staff has done a tremendous job this year. No other college paper (or big-city daily, for that matter) comes close to the caliber of writing displayed by the current Elm staff. Sarah Bell has a way with words beyond any features writer I have ever encountered in all my years of journalism. So just let the girl walk your dog.

- Raymond Bell

Ode to The Elm

There is a paper that is called The Elm,
And its excellence is known far and wide.
With one Rachael Sara Fink at the helm,
The average student would run and hide.
But there are a few whose courage is known,
And we call them the nutty Elm staff folks.
None is all that cool on his or her own,
But once they get their personalized yokes,
Rachael is happy and the fun begins.
Watch those Elm guys, skillful and eloquent,
Worthy of worship and free of all sins,
Except for Scott, who is a sycophant.
Boy oh boy, I love working for this thing,
It's the only joy in my life, really.
When in the office, I can't help but sing.
I only wish they would stop paying me.

This Week on Campus March 31 - April 6	Film Series Ghandi II: No More Mr. Passive Resistance Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.	Friday 31 Work , Cove, 8 p.m. - close
Saturday 1 Work , Cove, 8 p.m. - close	Sunday 2 Read 4 chapters, 20 poems Write 2 papers Sleep	Monday 3 Faculty meeting, 4:30 p.m. Play Magic all night
Tuesday 4 Classes all day, Elm all night	Wednesday 5 More *Elm	Thursday 6 Classes all day, Elm all night again

Thinking through the undead - out of the coffin

by Paul Briggs

Remarkable developments have been taking place in Washington of late, developments which could conceivably alter the relationship between the federal government and the nation's blood supply.

Two weeks ago a story appeared on Page 5 of the Washington Times in which an unidentified source claimed to have evidence that key officials in the Department of Health and Human Services, including HHS Secretary Donna Shalala, are actually vampires. When questioned about the allegations at a press conference, President Clinton responded, "We are looking into this matter. For now, I can only say that the information I have seen, have, as far as I know, been doing a good job here."

The issue of vampires in government surfaced again last week, when Isabel Gingrich Bratwurst, a long-lost cousin of House Speaker Newt Gingrich, made the starting announcement that Gingrich was himself a closet vampire, and had been one since 1968. Her story was corroborated by a former Gingrich aide, who charged that "he was always giving me money and sending me out to the blood bank" and that "he needed me to shave his face every morning because he couldn't see himself in the mirror."

In a 1-hour interview, Gingrich acknowledged that he was a vampire, but denied having procured sustenance from the blood bank or requiring any assistance in shaving. He also sharply questioned the relevance of the issue.

"I really don't see what the ethical dilemma is," he said. "Unless you have a situation where it's starting to influence the person's voting habits on bills, where there's a conflict of interest or something like that, what's the problem?" He also stated his belief that the "Eastern liberal media" had "gone on the attack over this issue" and that "the American people are a lot more interested in this sort of thing than in what we're actually doing here."

Since then, a number of other congresspersons, congressional staff persons and administration officials have come forward and admitted that they too are vampires. Some of them acknowledged that they had, in the words of one federal judge, "helped others to become vampires." Twelve female Senate staff members, in particular, alleged that Senator Packwood had at one time pressured them into allowing him to access to their major arteries, telling them that it would "greatly increase their chances of promotion." One Congresswoman was quoted as saying, "'Vampire' has such negative connotations. We prefer the term 'Transylvanian-American hemoglobin enthusiast.'"

These developments have increased public sensitivity to the concerns of the vampire community. One of these concerns is drug abuse and its effect on society. Many vampires have reported "unusual" side effects after sucking blood from substance abusers. Another major public-health concern is, of course, AIDS. Recently a group of militant vampires called the Nosferatu Action Network has begun to demand research into the possibility of designing condoms that could be fitted comfortably and securely over their fangs.

Meanwhile, garlic has been banned from the premises of White House, the Capitol and the Supreme Court, although crucifixes are still permitted as a form of religious expression, provided that they are not wielded in a "threatening" fashion.

For the most part, criticism of this new openness among the undead has been relatively muted. A number of feminist scholars have hailed this "coming out of the coffin" as a "subversion of traditionally repressive gender roles which tend towards the incarceration and subduction of women." This is distinctly at odds with the position of more mainstream feminists, who emphasize "the right of a woman to control her body, (which) is violated when a vampire sneaks into her house and drinks her blood."

Conservatives, meanwhile, have expressed concern over the possible effect of the so-called "vampire agenda" on traditional moral values. One of the nation's most prominent social conservatives, radio talk-show host Rush Limbaugh, has been surprisingly reluctant to criticize them. (Coincidentally, Limbaugh admitted in an interview yesterday that for "medical reasons" he has been making an effort to keep out of direct sunlight.)

A split has emerged within the vampire community over the key issue of whether this should be part of a larger effort to take over the world and destroy the human race. Moderate vampires, well aware that they do not yet constitute a majority within the government, have long advised a restrained approach, whereas hard-liners feel that it is important to their way of life to claim as many victims as possible. The official position of the Nosferatu Action Network is one of "peaceful coexistence" and "undeath affirmation through membership expansion."

The fact is that current federal policy towards vampires, to put it bluntly, is little more than Nero fiddling with the deck chairs on the Titanic. It is incumbent upon our elected officials to resolve this and other issues in such a way as to accomodate all Americans regardless of race, gender or feeding habits without frightening the apple cart or derailing the ship of state. Ω

Tuition expected to rise for '95 - 96 academic year

Jennifer Ward

A memo from the Administrative Offices was issued last Tuesday in response to growing rumors around campus about a possible tuition hike for the 1995-96 school year. The memo confirmed that there will be an additional $375 per student tacked on to the already gruesome W.C. tuition estimate.

However, this new increase has rather necessary implications - with seemingly good intentions. Unlike several past increases, this one is actually geared toward something concrete, something substantial. In fact, one unnamed source close to the Administration remarked, "It's the best fiscal decision to come out of here in 18 years."

The prudent nature of this increase is outlined briefly in last week's memo: "... an increase of ... $375 per student will be ... collected and combined into an account ... specifically for the sole purpose ... of purchasing with the intent to use ... in a proper and conservative fashion ... the good kind of toilet paper."

It seems recent dissent among the student body spurred the Administrative committee (subtitled "Don't Squeeze the Charmin") to look into possible alternatives to the present brands of W.C. toilet paper, Sysco and Soft Spun.

"Soft Spun?! What a farce!" exclaimed W.C. toilet paper-user Eva Kaplan-Leiserson. "I'm fairly sure that any material claiming to be soft and spun wouldn't leave chafe marks!"

Another student, who wishes to remain anonymous, stated, "It's like wiping ... with sandpaper."

So far, the committee has come up with very few leads. The manufacturers of Charmin flatly refused any sort of bulk rate price for the College, stating in a recent letter, "Your best bet is to shop Price Club." The manufacturers of MD, Scott, and Northern have yet to return any of the committee's phone calls.

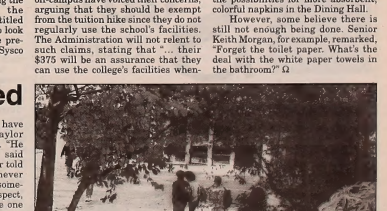
A small group of students who live off-campus have voiced their concerns, arguing that they should be exempt from the tuition hike since they do not regularly use the school's facilities. The Administration will not relent to such claims, stating that "... their $375 will be an assurance that they can use the college's facilities whenever they wish." The Administration also insists on including the extra $375 in the tuition estimate and not for room and board because "there would be no funding for good toilet paper in buildings like the Casey Academic Center and Bill Smith.

If all goes well and the committee can work out a contract with a willing toilet paper company, W.C. should see new toilet paper as soon as November 1995. Such prompt action on the part of the "Don't Squeeze the Charmin" committee has spurred other suggestions from the student body. Currently, there is a petition to create an "Always Put Your Napkin in Your Lap" committee designed to look into the possibilities for more absorbent, colorful napkins in the Dining Hall.

However, some believe there is still not enough being done. Senior Keith Morgan, for example, remarked, "Forget the toilet paper. What's the deal with the white paper towels in the bathroom?" Ω

Edith Wharton catnapped

Eva Kaplan-Leiserson



Edith Wharton, beloved literary house cat, was reported missing Wednesday by an unnamed source. Police have been called in and are conducting an exhaustive search for the cherished animal. Unfortunately, leads are slim and motives are many. It seems that like any of us, Edith had her friends and her enemies. Police detectives have been intensively questioning lit. house goers and students living in the vicinity in an attempt to turn up some clue. No definite leads have been found, but the ever-helpful students have not hesitated to offer their opinions on the crime. Police will not comment on the list of suspects we have compiled, but it is extensive. Included on our list are:

—Levi Blue Genes, the dog of Bob Day. When confronted by this reporter, both tactfully replied, "no comment." We have been told, however, that Levi has been nursing a long-standing grudge against Edith for her free and crazy life.

—Michael Kaylor, Master Printer. According to sources close to him, Kaylor has often been heard threatening the cat with various forms of torture. Some, however, have a hard time believing that Kaylor would do anything of the sort. "He seemed like such a nice man," said Jennifer Ward, freshman. Kaylor told this reporter, "I don't deny I never liked Edith, but I wouldn't do something like that. If you want a suspect, talk to that Ward girl. She's the one that locked Edith in my office for an entire night."

There are also vague and unconfirmed rumors that Truman Youngblood has been brought in for questioning. The motive has been stated as love gone wrong. It seems that the suspect had been jilted for one Charles Bukowski.

We have submitted our list of suspects to the police and they assure us that they are doing the best that they can to locate Edith Wharton. However, concerned students are now taking up a collection to call in Ace Ventura. If you'd like to contribute, please place large bills in the cans strategically placed around campus. And if you have ANY information at all concerning this heinous crime, please contact police at extension 5555. Ω

The new foliage planted during Casey Time is thriving.

"Marijuana" from 1

raise the quality of the incoming freshmen. From what I've seen so far, we could certainly increase enrollment by 400 students next year and still raise the average SAT scores to somewhere in the neighborhood of 1450. We're seeing a lot of responses from some very bright students."

The new policy has created other benefits for the school. Yesterday Rolling Stones guitarist Keith Richards announced that he would be donating a chair to the Music Department.

"Whargle dargle big deal with that for christakes!"

Richards also pledged to donate an unintelligible amount of money to the College's endowment. Ω

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

At the SGA meeting of Tuesday, March 28, the 1995-96 Executive board was completed. During the past weeks, the five elected Executives faced the onerous task of sorting through nominations in order to appoint a new Honor Board Chair and a new Parliamentarian. New President Liz Likens announced the Executives' surprising yet sound decision to appoint the entire brotherhood of Phi Sigma Kappa to chair the Honor Board.

"We obviously had to bend the rules a bit," said Likens, "but all five Executives seemed to wholeheartedly support this decision...and why not? None of us could think of a single person on this campus who better exemplifies honor. We've done our research, and we know that all the brothers have a firm grasp of all the intricacies of the law at this institution. Whether or not these rules happen to be followed is a minuscule concern at this juncture, in my opinion...and furthermore, as the great pharaoh Benjamin T. Hinkle once said, foot massages make everything worthwhile."

Junior class President Mark Reyero made an official request that the presidential gavel be replaced with a hollow plastic duck, and the proposal passed unanimously and without abstention.

The fire siren then went off, and consequently the meeting had to be suspended for fifteen minutes.

The new Honor Board chairs reported the results of the one case handled by the Honor Board in the past week. All charges were dropped for an unstated reason. Several of the chairmen then began to laugh devilishly.

Filling the position of Parliamentarian was apparently not such an easy task. After a week-long search, it was finally decided that Kate Meagher's mom would be appointed to the position. Citing "potatoes" as a major factor in the decision, 1994-95 Parliamentarian Ken Pipkin said, "yeah, she may be a Yankees fan, but she sells an legendary."

In the Treasurer's report, Shrylene Johnson disclosed the results of a recent financial audit of the SGA. The auditor, a Mr. O'Brien, concluded that SGA financing is handled by the students themselves (what he referred to as a "threateningly excessive degree." Mr. O'Brien demanded that all SGA budgetary matters be turned over to the Ministry of Finance immediately.

The "Fessler Case" was revisited Tuesday for the first time under the new Executive board. Likens reiterated the SGA's official position, disavowing the casualty in favor of the general principle. No sooner had the words left the President's mouth, Middle Hall Senator Bob Brown immediately rose to his shoe and pounded it on the table before him, bellowing "we will bury you!!" This outburst frightened the Executives so much that they had no recourse but to acquiesce to Brown's demand to reinstate the jettisoned ten-step plan to save Fessler. Said Brown, "the next step in the plan is to take Scholz hostage. We're going to take him on a little vacation. He's gonna see the Unites States the way it was meant to be seen - bound and gagged in the trunk of my car. First stop: Fredericksburg!"

The commotion had hardly ceased when a voice was heard emanating from the rear of the Casey Forum. "I've had it up to here with this SGA sh*t! Let's RAVE!!" The lights immediately went out and techno began to blare. This reporter was summarily knocked out the window, over the balcony, and onto the Cater Walk.

Upcoming on the SGA calendar: Sauerbrey day festivities will take place April 8th, Jerry Springer will be taping his world renowned talk show live from the first floor of Caroline the week of April 17, and the Elm staff will begin starting conflagrations in random locations around campus within the next month. Ω

Washington College Staff Profile

Sarah: I would like you all to meet this week's staff profilee, Mrs. Meagher. You know ... Kate's mom. Mrs. Meagher has been Kate's mom for 19 years now. Is it true, Mrs. M ... do you mind if I call you that?

Mrs. M.: No ... not at all.

Sarah: Is it true, Mrs. M, that Kate is your most responsible child?

Mrs. M: Did Katie put you up to this?

Sarah: Na ... no.

Mrs. M: Well ... that is what Katie would always say to me and her father. I suppose it is true. Katie is a good girl.

Sarah: Right ... well, what was Katie like as a child?

Mrs. M: We actually thought that Katie was autistic. She would sit on the floor with her coloring book and as she colored, one of her hands would flap aimlessly in the air.

Sarah: Hmm ... you don't say.

Mrs. M: Yeah ... she also thought that clothes got clean being in the hamper and she would take them out and wear them. I can't think of anything else. Katie just wasn't a very funny child. Her sister was.

Sarah: No ... this is fine.

Mrs. M.: She slept as if she were in a coma. Um, sorry. We're just boring people. Maybe you should .to someone else's mom.

Sarah: You're a wonderful mom! Your scalloped potatoes prove it!

Mrs. M.: Well ... they are Katie's favorite. Actually, I have the recipe right here in my purse. Let me give it to you. (Rummages through her purse and pulls out a tattered piece of paper.) Here you go: clip this recipe and keep it forever.

Mrs. M.'s Scalloped Potatoes

Ingredients: 5 pounds of potatoes, 1 or 2 onions, salt, pepper, 1 or 2 sticks of butter or margarine, milk

Preheat oven to 350.

Peel potatoes and slice thinly.

Chop onions.

Into a large pan, place potatoes in a thin layer.

Dollop liberally with butter.

Sprinkle onions and salt.

Pour in enough milk to cover.

Continuing layering potatoes, butter, onion, salt, and milk.

Put into hot oven and cook at 350° for 1 to 1 and a half hours.

Atlantis rediscovered

Remains of lost civilization found submerged in Chesapeake Bay

Paul Briggs

An archaeological discovery greater than Heinrich Schliemann's rediscovery of Troy has been made in our own backyard. The lost continent of Atlantis - long believed to be only a legend - has been located at the bottom of the Chesapeake Bay.

Experts are astounded. "I've been studying this bay for - never mind how long - and I never had any idea there was another whole civilization down there," said Dr. Munson. And yet it was Dr. Munson himself who provided the first clues to Atlantis's existence, when, while demonstrating to a biology class how to take samples of the bottom, he pulled up a page from a manuscript written in an early form of Linear B.

Carbon dating proved the item to be over 11,000 years old. This, according to Plato, was about how long ago the mysterious realm existed. Recently, further exploring has turned up more evidence of the ancient civilization.

Classicists are not as yet able to account for this. "We always thought Atlantis, if it existed at all, would either be in the middle of the Atlantic or somewhere in the Aegean," said Dr. Randolph Gout of the University of West Cape Cod. "We never thought to look for it in the Chesapeake." Many experts are still skeptical.

"I guess it must have been a pretty small continent," said one. And, in fact, according to current estimates Atlantis was definitely not "larger than Libya and Asia." Estimates of the Atlantean cultural level must also be reassessed in light of Jefford Valhbusch's preliminary translation of the fragmentary Munson manuscript page:

"-like what you see?' said Pyrrha, arching her back as she stepped out of the spring, water dropping coursing down her sleek frame, glistening on firm breasts larger than her head.

"'Oh, Zeus, you are gorgeous,' said Briseus, struggling to catch his breath, relishing the thrills of pain as his manhood extended itself farther than it had ever-"

"It's not what I expected," admitted Valhbusch.

What caused the destruction of Atlantis is still uncertain. Plato's account of it as being "nine thousand years' before his time roughly corresponds to the end of the last Ice Age. It is possible that melting glaciers flooding the Chesapeake Bay region destroyed the ancient civilization, but it is too early to tell. Ω

TAFFY proposes to eliminate freshman year "Who really needs it?" asks Scholz

Kate Meagher

In response to the division among the Faculty regarding the program proposed by the Task Force for the First-Year Experience and Distribution, along with student and faculty input into ways to improve upon the plan, the members of the task force have revised their proposal. The new program will not include a freshman year.

"We felt that the problems the Faculty has with the plan can be solved this way," said Steven Cades. "If we wipe out the freshman year, the plan should raise no objections among the Faculty."

According to Dean Scholz, the change was inevitable.

"I could see it coming," said Scholz. "It was a matter of too much clutter. All those first-year classes were getting in the way of real progress. We just cleared out the dross, and ended up with what I consider really an enlightened plan. No one should have a problem with this."

"I like the proposal and I'm excited about it," said Emilie Amt. "I'm very excited about the possibility of participating in it."

"It behooves all of us to consider these things with an open mind," said Don Munson. "There are many good things that can come out of this."

Richard DeProspo calls the move "daring."

"This is the kind of risk that we need to take in the 'nineties," said DeProspo. "In the ever-changing world of education, we have become the trailblazers. I think this is a good work. I think the committee has done good work." He said that he is "willing to tolerate the imperfections."

TAFFY spent the fall semester looking closely at the freshman year and comparing the College's program to those of 24 comparable colleges, such as Western Maryland, Goucher, Drew, Bryn Mawr, Franklin & Marshall and Muhlenberg.

"None of these schools really had a freshman-year program that seemed to work," said Frank Creegan. "In fact, we really felt that they all were silly and pointless."

"Because we found no freshman-year program that made any sense to us, we decided to scrap the whole first-year thing," said Assistant Dean Wolff. "We at Washington College like to live on the edge."

The student members of TAFFY polled the student body on their impressions of their first-year experience and desired improvements.

"What it basically came down to was an overall lack of enthusiasm for the freshman year," said Leanne Cole, a student member of TAFFY.

"There are many good things that can come out of this."

- Donald Munson

"TAFFY was created to serve Washington College," said Scholz, "and if the students are vocal about something, we're going to react. The one thing everyone knows about Washington College is the strong student voice. It will not be ignored."

Dan Premo, who had had problems with the sophomore-year plan, said that he feels that the decision to eliminate the freshman year is a direct attack on him, as it includes only the sophomore year.

"They did this on purpose," said Premo. "They never liked me anyway."

Student reaction to the plan has been decidedly negative. In a rare show of solidarity, members of all W.C.'s greek organizations have drafted a letter to the members of TAFFY asking that sophomore be referred to as freshmen for what they referred to as "social" reasons. No further explanation was given.

The proposal will come before th Faculty at the April 3 meeting. Ω

Net Surfing

by Mindie Kaplan

Guess what's on the horizon for computer lovers? First, we had big, beautiful screens that display your paper in lovely, larger-than-life color. Then we had sound cards and microphones pasted right on the monitor so we could listen to Arnold say "I'll be back" every time we wanted to shut down the machine. Now we have OSCs! What's an "OSC," you might ask? It stands for Olfactory Stimulation Card, better nicknamed "smell-o-vision." That's right, your computer games will soon come to life with the true-to-life smell of bloody battles (or smog if you prefer playing SimCity 2000). That haunted house will take on scented reminders of your grandmother's living room.

OSCs are the next step towards having a true virtual reality. Imagine the smell of sweat as you do the iron man triathlon in record time (at least in the simulation). Smell-o-vision will soon join PicturePhone as the latest thing in AT&T True Voice (and smell) communication. Blitzmail your beloved a rose (perfume included) on Valentine's Day. Enjoy the tantalizing scent of Ocean City's salt air without ever leaving your dorm.

"OSCs are a tremendous breakthrough in computer technology," said Tim Kirk. "Soon we will have all the glory of real life without ever having to look up from your computer screen. This will revolutionize the way people learn and interact."

Professor Horne, of the W.C. Sociology department, expressed some reservations about the new development. "What you're going to see in the next few decades is a world of people who never leave their homes. If you can smell a rose from your computer screen, why go out and plant a real one? The sociological implications of this are absolutely horrifying."

Doomsaying aside, the Computer Appropriations Committee of Washington College has decided that this is just what this college needed to attract more students in their effort to enlarge the campus. "People complain of cabin fever," one committee member explained, "but if they can see and smell the real world from computers in every lounge on campus, why should they ever want to go out and experience it for themselves? Washington College will be able to offer them virtually everything they could ever want in experience, right from their desks. Take food, for example. Most of what we think of taste is really smell."

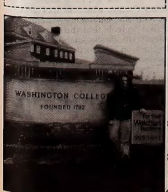


Photo by Matthew Kohn

Campus Voices

Question by Sarah Bell

Photos by Debbie Spence

This week's question: Who's the Boss?

Angela and Tony were both blithering idiots. Mona was the boss. She had the whip.

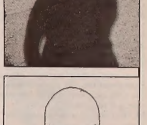
Bill Denton, Freshman

Angela, because bitches always rules and she's a bitch.

Debbie Spence, Senior

Angela, obviously.

Rachael Fink, Senior

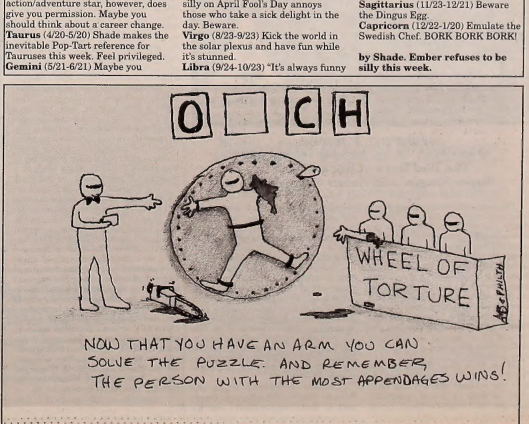


Tony, because he is the man. Men are meant to dominate women. They are more competent in every area except the delivery room. Actually, they're more competent there too. You never hear them yelling, do you?

Kate Meagher, Sophomore

Angela, because she has Tony right where she wants him.

Peggy Busker Junior



I don't know. I thought that show was stupid.

Aaron Blake, Junior

Aquarius (1/21-2/18) Ah, the water sign. It will soon be time to break out the SuperSoakers, so make sure you get one before summer.
Pisces (2/19-3/20) Eat meat.
Aries (3/21-4/19) Being an Aries doesn't give you permission to go around headbutting people. Being an action/adventure star, however, does give you permission. Maybe you should think about a career change.
Taurus (4/20-5/20) Shade makes the inevitable Pop-Tart reference for Tauruses this week. Feel privileged.
Gemini (5/21-6/21) Maybe you should take a few more chemistry classes before you attempt to make atomic weapons in your basement.
Cancer (6/22-7/22) Having a disease named after your sign must make you awfully uncomfortable. Too bad you can't change your birthday, eh?
Leo (7/23-8/22) Your refusal to be silly on April Fool's Day annoys those who take a sick delight in the day. Beware.
Virgo (8/23-9/23) Kick the world in the solar plexus and have fun while it's stunned.
Libra (9/24-10/23) "It's always funny until someone gets hurt. Then it's just hilarious."
Scorpio (10/24-11/22) The person you are thinking of has not dropped off the face of the planet. They are thinking of you as well. Of course, there's no telling what they think of you...
Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) Beware the Dingus Egg.
Capricorn (12/22-1/20) Emulate the Swedish Chef. BORK BORK BORK!

by Shade. Ember refuses to be silly this week.

We Get You Condiments

The Dynamic Discount Duo, Kevin & Jeff, roam C'town in search of extra ketchup, mustard, mayo ...

For the better part of a year now, we've been getting discounts for the students of Washington College. We've gotten discounts on pizza, baseball cards, music, used cars, stuffed bears, billiards, glass, and even a discounted love affair with Juan Hernandez. After all this work, you'd think that we at discount central would finally be satisfied, finally ready to hit the sack and leave the discount game for the next generation of bargain hunters. Well, I'm here to tell you, we were just getting warmed up! The new focus of this column will be the pursuit of condiments! We Get You Condiments! Our first target was Burger King, and we marched in there proud to demand extra ketchup packets for all Washington College students.

Jeff: Today we are on a crusade for condiments. And we were wondering if the students of Washington College could have more ketchup than the average customer?

Manager: Can we do this off the record?

Kevin: Off the record, can we have more ketchup than the average customer?

M: I can't do interviews like that in the store.

K: Can you give us any ketchup?

M: We don't do interviews in the store.

K: My way, right away at Burger King, now! Extra Onions? Lettuce? How about the self serve? Can we top the soda off, drink a little bit, and then get some more?

M: We don't do interviews in the store.

Our experience at Burger King was a complete failure. We hadn't anticipated that store would rather give away discounts than give away their precious ketchup. It was a challenge, and we weren't ready to back down yet. Next stop was Roy Rogers, to see if the old cowboy was a little less stingy with the ketchup.

Kevin: Do you mind if we ask a few questions?

Terry: Go ahead. Arlene, these gentlemen have some questions for you, and they're from the College.

K: Do you get a lot of students from the College here?

Arlene: Some come.

K: Does it seem like the students take more ketchup, on average, than the average customer would?

A: I just give 'em ketchup.

K: You just give them ketchup?

A: Yeah.

K: We go around and do favors for the College students, get them stuff, and we were wondering if they could have more ketchup than the average customer?

A: More than the average amount of ketchup?

K: Yeah.

A: I guess you could get as many ketchups as you like.

K: We can have as much as we want?

A: I guess.

K: Does that same policy go for mustard?

A: I guess so.

K: What about mayonnaise?

A: I guess for everything. The customer's always right; you give them what they want.

K: Give them what they want? That's funny, because we just went to Burger King, and they wouldn't even talk to us! And they wouldn't give us any extra ketchup.

T: That's terrible. That's a shame.

K: But Roy Rogers is different.

T: That's right.

K: I haven't even bought anything, but let's say I walked over there and took a bucket of ketchup. Would you care?

T: I wouldn't care.

K: No problem, right? No questions asked?

A: I don't know about some of the other people that work here, but we wouldn't care.

K: They might come out here and call the police on me for ketchup theft?

A: I have no idea.

K: What if I'm just walking around outside, and I think to myself, I'll want some ketchup!" and I just come in and get a bucket full of ketchup?

A: I don't care.

K: Jeff?

Jeff: Sometimes I like to have a big tub of ketchup for dinner. It's good.

K: Would we be allowed to sit in here, without buying any food, and just sit down and enjoy some ketchup? Would you have a problem with that?

T: No.

A: I don't.

After liberating some free ketchup from Roy Rogers, we decided to scout out Pizza Hut in pursuit of more condiments. We weren't sure what kind of condiments would be in a pizza joint, but we figured if there were condiments to get, we would get them.

Kevin: Do you get a lot of college students here?

Nancy: Yeah, a fair amount. We had a good bit over the weekend.

K: I was wondering if you give them more condiments than the average customer would get? Extra salt? Extra pepper? Extra grated cheese?

N: Not usually, not particularly. I mean, in the dining area, they're just supplied there. I don't know how much they get with delivery.

K: You know how you leave mints for them after the meal?

N: Yeah, I always give everybody lots of mints. That's what I do.

K: Would you give college students more mints than you would give to an average person?

N: Not generally, because I take a handful for everybody.

K: I'm wondering if you could, because the college students kind of count on us to be their liason to the stores in the area. And I was wondering if, as a personal favor to us, you would give two mints to every college student that comes in here instead of just one?

N: Sure, why not. Everybody always gets at least two from me.

K: Extra condiments?

N: Sure.

K: Jeff?

Jeff: How do you feel about condiments? Do you like salt? How do you feel about pepper?

N: Pepper's so-so. I like salt.

K: What about ketchup?

N: I could live without it.

K: Mustard?

N: Nah. That can stay aside usually.

K: What about mayonnaise?

N: I like mayonnaise.

K: Do you really like mayonnaise? Which is your favorite condiment?

N: Actually, A-1 Sauce.

K: Yeah! Do you ever regret working in a pizza place instead of working somewhere like a burger place because you don't get to deal with condiments as much as you would other places?

N: No, not really. I like my job.

K: Jeff, any more questions about condiments?

J: No, I like condiments. They're nice.

K: I like them, too.

We had gotten lots of condiments from all kinds of different restaurants, but Jeff said there was one more place in the area that had condiments, and he wanted to go there. I followed dutifully, and suddenly realized Jeff had taken me to Health Services!

Jeff: We're on a crusade for condiments this week, to get more condiments than the average person for Washington College students, and we heard you had free condiments here.

Betty: I think you look for the condiments in the Dining Hall.

Kevin: Jeff, they have condoms here, not condiments.

J: Oh. I thought somebody said condiments.

K: I think what Jeff really wants is free condoms. Can any student come in here and get free condoms?

B: As you will notice when you go out, you pass the jar with the free condoms.

K: Do they have any extra large?

B: If this is a joke, I think we've had our laugh.

K: Jeff, is this a joke?

J: Yes.

K: Thanks, Jeff. Ω

Droppe d Whole A Degree

Aaron Pierce

The Bad Boys of Rock n' Roll ... Super Singin' and Satan Celebratin' ...

I've seen some weird things in my times and travels on this great planet of ours. Yes sir (or ma'am), when the time comes for my soul to depart its corporeal bondage and shuffle the hell off this mortal coil, I won't shed a tear for lack of oddities. But for sheer shock-rock weirdness, nothing quite compares to that great spectre haunting the halls of Rock n' Roll, Satanic Love Prawn. And with their newest burnt offering, Bite Your Momma, the Prawns have once again pushed the boundaries of taste to the breaking point in their quest for the ultimate in utter depravity.

With Bite Your Momma, the Prawn's fourth album, we find that the band has reached new levels of technical, as well as lyrical, maturity. Gone are the "buckets of blood" lyrics, given up in favor of a new focus on social and political matters. That's right, boys and girls, the Prawns have gone political. The question is, can they survive a "U2-Style" image, and still maintain the integrity of earlier days?

The answer is yes, the Prawns still rock. The new album shows a whole other side of this intricate and enigmatic band. The title track, a revved-up balled about the attempts of a down-on-his-luck man to achieve oral communion with the source of his very life, reveals a depth of emotion heretofore unseen in the Prawns lyrics. The listener is invited into the song, allowing us all to share in a common experience.

Nobody is spared when the Prawns take on Washington. Dittys such as "Let's Neuter Newt" and "Klux Quayle" attest to the depth of political sensitivity of this, the "new and improved" Prawns. My vote for the "Political Pop Anthem Chant" has got to go to "Ku Klux Quayle" for its "Quayle say Whitey gonna win someday!" The Prawns, never ones for the goliath of politics, have struck a new chord in the name of artistic freedom.

However, Bite Your Momma, is not without its "old school" hollerin'. "This Girl's a Woman Now" and "Granny's Got a New Toy" are seminal Satanic Love Prawns. Slammin' guitars on top of speeding drums provide the background for lyrics that are both inspirational and revitalizing. Listening to this album is like taking a walk on a brisk day. It just makes you feel good.

The Prawns have taken their act on the road along with fellow musical terrorists, Deathrÿche, and luckily for us, they're bringing the act to the Kent County Civic Arena. I cannot stress this enough: GO SEE THE SATANIC LOVE PRAWNS! Now more than ever, the relavence of pop music as a political tool is being tested and utilized. Bands like the Prawns may be the only hope for a rational future, free from the all-encompassing grip of fascism. It is our duty, as loyal idealists, dedicated to the philosophies that this country was founded upon to stand up and send a message to our leaders. The fringe is even now marching into the pages of history, demanding our rights and holding fast to our ideals. Satanic Love Prawn may be just the voice we're looking for. Ω Live!

Saturday, April 1,
7:30 p.m.
Kent County Civic Arena
Deathrÿche
and Satanic Love Prawn
The Bite Your Momma Tour
$15.00
$6.66 at the door with College I.D.!
Featuring all the songs from Satanic Love Prawn's hit CD Bite your Momma
Bite Your Momma, Ku Klux Quayle, Spank It, Yank it, Twist it in a knot, Let's Neuter Newt, This Girl is a Woman Now, If God is Pro-Life, Why Does Everybody Die?, Granny's got a New Toy

Coed naked lax at W.C.:

A dream come true for many

Emily Moser

A new sport was introduced yesterday on the muddy, slick playing fields of Washington College; coed naked lacrosse. There are many students, male and female, who hope this is the start of a long standing tradition.

The players took to the field wearing just cleats, helmets, and mouth guards. The teams themselves were a mixture of girls and guys, the true meaning of teamwork was discovered by almost all. The helmets were painted maroon with a white W for the first team, and vice versa for the opposing team. Both teams were extremely psyched for this competition, a rather friendly and revealing competition.

The weather proved to be harsh, though not as difficult as the grass burns and eventual mudslide tackles that occurred. Many of the players found themselves in compromising positions as they slid from one end of the field to the other. The maroon team took an early lead with two quickly scored goals. The first by sophomore center Marcia Flinn and the second by freshman attack wing Brigid Kolish. Kolish continued to prove the depth of her stick skills even though she was not in full uniform. Both of these goals occurred in the first five minutes of the game.

As the rain fell in brief showers, the puddles became harder to avoid, especially in the well trampled area around the goals. The white team discovered this in no time at all as the point and cover point defense players tried to turn the game around. Sophomore point Elizabeth Barlow found herself covered from head to toe in mud, grass, and the offensive homes of the maroon team. When asked about this situation she laughed, "I am honestly not say it was an experience I'll never forget."

Both teams fought hard in the first half with the score standing at 2-0, maroon, at half-time. Half-time comments from both teams seemed to focus on the slickness of the fields. Most players seemed to have gotten their expressive states. White's senior defensive anchor, Jesse Cook, identified the worst part as keeping your balance. "I was so concerned about not falling that I quickly forgot we were all in our birthday suits."

In the second half the score jumped back and forth with white scoring three goals to take the lead by the time fifteen minutes were up. It was the offensive drive led by a deadly combo of Bart Jaeger and Elizabeth Moga, which racked up the points for the white team. Seeing the game turn tables prompted the maroon players to score another goal while their goalie, Andy Taibl made an impressive seven straight saves of well aimed shots. The maroon offense was led by Mike McDermott and Natalie Smith, practicing their textbook give and go to the goal.

For the sake of safety the goalies were allowed to wear padding, although the spectators were mooned numerous times as ground balls were recovered near the goals. (Some Phi Delts responded likewise.) All goalkeepers are now being treated for severe pinch marks on tender areas from the buckles of the padding.

The game came to a close with maroon having scored two more goals against white's strong defense. The fans cheered loudly for all the players as they lined up to shake hands. One visiting parent commented, "Thankfully the game was exciting or I don't think I could have watched my daughter run nude. Although I did try to avoid looking." In the end, all participants agreed that rough, tough, and in the buff is the best and certainly most humbling way to play.

Be sure to come out next week as the squad goes on the road to play nationally ranked Dickinson. Ω

W.C. baseball plays the majors

Kevin Hoffman and Mike Hinkle

As many of you may have heard, The W.C. Sho'men were recently recruited as a replacement team for the major leagues. The drafting of a college team by a major league organization is unprecedented, and occurs on the heels of the Sho'men's startling 1-6 performance in Florida over spring break. While losing five linebackers against Stoney Brook, Susquehanna, and Rutgers Newark, the Sho'men were still able to expound on the last day of there trip and win an exhibition game with the Florida Marlins replacement major league team. This Win was so resounding and powerful that the entire Marlins team was dumped and reassigned to play college ball, while our very own Sho'men have been recruited to give it a shot as a major league team.

Nate Tyler was seen playing basketball with superstar Michael Jordan down in Florida. Tyler humiliated Jordan using his patented "stationary dribble." Taking this as a cue, Nate Tyler, Pitcher/Catcher for the Sho'men has decided to retire from baseball, on this, the cusp of his career, to instead pursue a shot at NBA ball playing for the Dorchester Drunken Demons (another W.C. farm team recently called up to the bigtime). Two weeks later, Michael Jordan quit baseball, and soon Michael was playing professional basketball once again. It is rumored that he hopes for a re-match with Tyler soon.

The Florida Marlins were asked how they're enjoying their stay at W.C.. Florida Marlins General Manager Dave Dombrowski commented, "It's nice to be here. Maybe I'll enroll in a few classes and finally get that pesky college degree I've always wanted. The food is lousy though."

Overall, it's been a turbulent year for sports at Washington College. Everyone is waiting to see how the baseball team does in the major leagues, and how the Florida Marlins will adjust to campus life. One thing's for sure, sports will never be the same at W.C., and neither will the parties. Ω

Washington College Indoor Skydiving Club

inaugural meeting and blood-drawing

Next Friday, 3 a.m., Reid Hall foyer
Contact Scott at Kent/Queen Anne's hospital for details.

Come try to defy gravity and bring your bike!

W.C hopes for Rugby World Cup win

Paul Small

To the sound of cheering and a brass band the Washington College Men's Rugby Team arrived in Cape Town today to participate in the 1995 Rugby World Cup. They are in the same qualifying pool as England, Western Samoa, and Italy, and represent the first-ever collegiate team to ever be invited to participate in a Rugby World Cup, as they beat both the Canadian and Argentinian sides, demonstrating their world class ability.

Washington College's inspiring journey to the World Cup has often been dubbed as miraculous, as the team and its origins are both found in the cornfields of Maryland's Eastern Shore. With little more than a swollen sheep's bladder and a handful of players, the Washington boys made their passion for the game known. News of their exploits even made it across the Atlantic to Murrayfield, capturing the attention of Scottish fullback Gavin Hastings. Stunned by Washington's iron devotion to the game, he shocked the sports press by announcing his plans to disappear from the international rugby scene to begin coaching the Washington College Rugby Team.

Using superhuman abilities and a strict diet of Bengals, thick beer, and turnips, Hastings soon molded the Washington squad into a consummate fighting machine, perfectly drilled and with an ebullient appetite for victory. They could not be stopped.

After a string of wins and fantastic publicity, the Washington Administration went so far as to give the previously rag-tag club an official team charter as well as a handsome equipment and travel stipend. They also converted a practice field once littered with bits of glass and rather large stones to a world-class rugby pitch.

The Washington team is favored over both Western Samoa and Italy, while Brian Moore, hooker for England, has remarked "They [Washington] are certainly scrappy buggers!"

Earlier in the season the Washington College Women's Rugby Team beat Saracens in the International Women's Rugby World Cup at Twickenham, England. Ω

POW

Upon returning from spring break, The Elm looks at the student body and their tans from their excursions. This year there was one student who caught everyone's eye, Junior Eric Pikus. He was captivating as he sauntered into the cafeteria the first Monday back sporting shorts, button down shirt and Tevas. His bronze countenance looked over his pale classmates with his patented confident gaze. Pikus hails from the tropical Mecca of Milford, Delaware. When asked what he did while vacationing in Cancun over break, he recalls taking the bedside version of King James to the beach and losing himself in it while the babes were rubbing suntan lotion all over his throbbing, toned figure. His best times were spent in the small cafes every night writing poetry and pondering his thesis topic.

Despite the Women's tennis team crushing Mary Washington and Muhlenberg for the first time, recording their best winning weekend ever, W.C. Softball also was very impressive over the weekend as they beat conference rival Gettysburg. Pikus was much more deserving and more of a team player.

Pikus has been a solid member of the Washington College Tanning Team for three years. He represents the College well on the campus lawn and causes many passersby to stop and stare.

Runners-up in this competition were Charlee Darby and Derek Cuff. Both vacationed in very sunny spots over break.

The men's and women's lacrosse team did turn in impressive sunburns after break in Chestertown, along with the training staff who basked in the early morning sun.

Brewed from the pure water of icy Bravarian streams, we offer you a beer so perfect it could only be called

Master Race Pilsner

Finally, a beer as pure as the blood of the Aryan race!

Like the Teutonic race, Master Race Pilsner is strong in character! Endorsed by many heroes of the Wehrmacht as well as American Aryan heroes Oliver North and Rush Limbaugh, Master Race Pilsner is brewed in accordance to the Beer purity law of 1516. And Master Race Pilsner is racially pure as well, as it is brewed in our Nuremberg brewery by government certified pure-blooded Aryans! So remember, whether the occasion is a cross burning, a pro-life demonstration, a college Republicans outing or even an all-out holocaust, Master Race Pilsner is the only beer for those pure of body and mind!

The time is right in America for Master Race Pilsner!

The Washington College Rugby team manages to sit still long enough to have this picture taken. The team is currently in training for the World Cup.

Kevin Roland on the mound for the Marlins at a very well-attended spring training game.

Scores

Rugby
Washington 29
Canada 12

Co-ed naked Lax
Red 8
White 12

Baseball
Washington 12
Marlins 5

The Washington College
Elm
Volume 66, Number Twenty-Two
Serving the College Community Since 1930

W.C. names Louis Stettler chief financial officer

H. Louis Stettler, III, a former Secretary of Budget and Fiscal Planning for the State of Maryland, has been named Vice President for Finance and Administration at Washington College. Stettler, who joined the College's senior administration on March 23, will succeed Anita Gottlieb, who leaves W.C. on May 1.

As Washington College's top financial officer, Stettler will oversee a $23.7 million annual operating budget and will be responsible for budget and fiscal operations, plant facilities, auxiliary services, and personnel management.

In an interview with The Elm, Stettler outlined some of the tactics he intends to employ for helping W.C. out of its current financial straits.

"Some of the solutions are internal," said Stettler. Included in these internal solutions are "doing things more efficiently." Stettler went on to say that, unfortunately, efficiency can be "expensive in the short run." Stettler did comment on the possibility of cuts in the current budget; "There are not a lot of places where there are excess resources."

"Fiscal relief has to depend on the revenue side," said Stettler who continued by say the steps being taken by the Admissions office and the work on the Annual Fund will help the situation. He did say that the drive to recruit more students will "only work if you can attract the right students." In addition to the attraction of new students, Stettler sited the need to retain new and current students.

"If you've invested money in acquiring them, you want to keep them."

Stettler, echoing Acting President John Toll at Monday's faculty meeting, indicated that the amount of giving to the Annual Fund is up by over 50 percent from last year and this indicates a good possibility of reaching the two million dollar goal set by Toll.

"Fortunately, these are a fairly good time in the U.S."

Stettler went on to explain the contingency plans currently written into the budget. If either the net tuition revenue or the Annual Fund falls short of the expected, the College must be prepared with an alternative plan. Stettler explained that certain revenues are earmarked from the beginning as being part of the contingency fund and only used in the event that the expected revenues fall short or an emergency occurs.

In response to questions concerning the rumors that Washington College students will not be able to charge at the Bookstore or the Cove, Stettler could not confirm or deny. He did say that there are "several dimensions to every issue," and continued by stating that the "cost involved in charging systems" and the "impact on revenue" are all issues to be considered.

Dr. H. Louis Stettler, new Vice-president for Finance and Administration

Stettler comes to W.C. from the U. S. Treasury Department in the Office of Technical Assistance Management, where he served as a budget adviser to the Ministry of Finance in Hungary and supervised the U. S. Treasury's program providing budget advisers to Ministries of Finance in Eastern Europe and the republics of the former Soviet Union. For more than 20 years, Stettler served in senior financial management positions for the State of Maryland. He began as Executive Director of the Governor's Council of Economic Advisors in 1971, and then joined the Department of Budget and Fiscal Planning in 1973, where he held various management and professional positions. He was appointed Secretary by Governor Harry Hughes in 1981 and later reappointed by

See "Stettler" on 5

Faculty passes committee restructuring proposal

Rachael Fink

The Faculty, at its monthly meeting, approved the proposal to restructure the faculty committees. The restructuring of the committees, as proposed by the Faculty Affairs Committee was passed unanimously after approximately an hour of debate. Being debated were the elimination of the Board of Publication and the Graduate Council.

Dr. Richard Striner, current Chair of the Board of Publications, objected to the elimination of the Board which oversees the publication of The Pegasus and The Elm. Striner sited the amount of oversight the current Board has over the budgetary processes of The Elm and The Pegasus and the financial problems that both publications have had in the past as reason for keeping the Board as part of the committee structure. Dr. George Shivers commented that both publications fell into debt while the Board of Publications was in existence. Striner's proposal to amend the committee reduction proposal was voted down after much debate.

After a short debate, the faculty agreed that the Graduate Council could be reinstated at a later faculty meeting following the submission of a proposal to that effect. Objections to the elimination of the Graduate Council centered around the possibility of curriculum changes being made in the graduate program without the input of any faculty members teaching in the graduate program or any graduate students. Acting Dean Joachim Scholz commented that the Middle States review "strongly reprimanded" W.C. for "not having a committee that feels responsible for the curriculum in toto."

Also passed unanimously by the faculty were two proposals from the Academic Council. The reinstatement of a history and theory component for the drama major and a revision of the Modern Language Department passes with no debate. Ω

Drug busts in Caroline

Two charged with three counts of possession

William Denton III

March 31, 1995, 9:47 p.m., Caroline House: Acting on a report from the Washington College Department of Public Safety, the Chestertown Police Department sent two officers and a canine unit to investigate a case of suspected marijuana use. A search of the suspected site yielded marijuana and three smoking devices, as well as psilocybin mushrooms. The two residents of the room, Robert Addison vonLunz and James Pollock, both 19, were charged with three counts of possession.

The Department of Public Safety is keeping the information as to how they became privy to the illegal activities confidential. The department does patrol the dormitories under normal circumstances in addition to handling the complaints of students.

According to Jerry Roderick, Director of Public Safety, "The officers discovered an odor of what they suspected to be burning marijuana on the hall. They identified the room which they felt that the odor was coming from, they knocked on the door, made contact with the residents of the room, and were able to identify, in fact, that there was marijuana that had been burned in the room. As a matter of departmental procedure, once we've identified that, we then contact the Chestertown Police Department and have them come in and take over the seizure of any controlled substance and proceed with any criminal charges."

Public Safety's actions in situations such as this serve a twofold purpose: upholding W. C.'s narcotics policy and protecting the rights of the students. Said Roderick, "Clearly, we're obligated to enforce the college policy, and there are many students who are offended or made very uncomfortable when they are forced to live in an environment when things are going on that they don't condone and they know are illegal ... because students are coming forward and complaining about this activity, it helps us direct our efforts and attentions to particular areas."

See "Drugs" on 5

Inside This Week's Elm

Thinking through...
Paul provides some insight into the Turkish invasion of "Kurdistan." 3

Smoking ban
Scott Koon discusses the effect of the new Maryland law on the Washington College community. 5

Gay Pride Month
The Gay and Lesbian Alliance plans its activities for April. 6

Skunk Notes
Andrea praises the spotted pygmy skunk and its impending extinction's effect on the planet. 7

On topics great and small

Once again it is rather late on Thursday night and I have no idea about what to write my editorial. So many things happened this week that are worthy of discussion; Louis Stettler has taken the post of Vice President of Budget and Administration; the faculty has passed the committee restructuring proposal; the state has passed a smoking ban. So many things to talk about; so few column inches.

I had a nice, long chat with Stettler on Wednesday. He was very positive about the College and about the budget. He also assured me that he was here for more than just a brief visit. Good to hear considering the number of senior and upper-level administration we've seen jump ship in the last four years. I am impressed with Stettler and feel much more confident that the College will survive these budgetary problems.

Stettler also had some really nice things to say about Dr. Toll. Come to think of it, everyone has really nice things to say about Toll. I haven't heard a single negative comment about Toll since he came to Washington College and as Editor I'm usually first to hear it all. On more than one occasion I've heard a student, faculty member, board member or administrator wishing that Toll would stick with us and become President. I would have to agree. Toll seems to me to be exactly what the College needs: dedicated, motivated, connected, and conscious.

I attended yet another faculty meeting last Monday and despite my insistence that no one could surprise me at this College, the faculty did. The first two proposals were passed without discussion and unanimously. I was not the only one in attendance shocked by this. Just after the second proposal passed Dr. Scholz was heard commenting "Is this the faculty?" The committee restructuring proposal did not fair quite as well. In fact, the faculty spent many minutes discussing the fate of the Board of Publications and the Graduate Council. Personally, I have to agree with the faculty who argued for the existence of these two committees. The Board of Publications is directly responsible for the continued maintenance of both The Elm and The Pegasus. I'm very concerned that these two publications will be lost in the shuffle of business before the new Student Life committee. As for the Graduate Council, it seems to me that it would just not be right for curricular changes to be made in the graduate program without input from those involved in the program. Unlike the Board of Publications which is forever gone, the Graduate Council could be reinstated by the faculty sometime next semester.

And from there on to the smoking ban … I really have to be upset about this one. I am a smoker and have been object. There is currently only one indoor spot on campus I can smoke - my room. That means I can not smoke after dinner unless I step out into the cold Maryland air. I can't smoke after class unless I brave the wind and rain. I can't smoke while reading my mail unless I sit on the hard wooden chair on the CAC porch. I understand that smoking is a health hazard both for those who do it and those who live with it. I also understand that smoking is not illegal, that I have a right to smoke. Now I don't have a right to smoke conveniently.

Finally, I would like to respond to those who felt that certain pieces in last week's April Fool's issue of The Elm were in poor taste. Humor is not universal and not everyone will laugh at the same jokes. I am not in favor of offensive humor and in each case I feel that offense was taken where none was intended. The "Indoor Skydiving" ad was meant simply as good-natured poke at someone who did something less than intelligent. The "Master Race Pilsner" ad was serious commentary on the rise of the neo-nazi movement in America disguised as humor. I am sorry that some took offense at both of these pieces and their objections are duly noted, however, I feel that the spirit in which both pieces were run was lost on the objectors and therefore do not apologize for having run them.

Upper-level offerings increase

The Task Force on the First-year Experience and Distribution wishes to reassure concerned students that the number of upper level courses offered for the fall of 1995 has not been diminished. The Registrar's Office confirms that the number of upper level courses has in fact increased (from 107 in the fall of 1994 to 116 in the fall of 1995). In addition, all departments in which the new Community, Nation, World courses are being taught have stressed that no upper level course normally scheduled has been sacrificed for one of the new offerings. In many cases, professors are able to teach the new courses because the number of sections of introductory level courses has been reduced.

We are sensitive to the concerns expressed by some upper level students and encourage any students who feel that the upper level offerings in their major departments are some how limited to contact their department chair with suggestions.

The task force gave special thought to the implementation of this curriculum and the effect it would have upon the standing courses. CNW courses are scheduled around certain times so that students will have few problems with conflicting schedules. It is our hope that the research that is going into the preparation of these new courses will make the instruction of existing courses even more dynamic.

- Dr. Joachim Scholz,
Chair of Task Force on the First-year Experience and Distribution

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink
News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Co-Editors
Mindie J. Kaplan and Sarah Bell
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Erika Ford

Circulation Manager
Charles R. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Joshua T. Lawrence, IV
Office Manager
Scott Ross Koon
Photo Editor
Debra Spence

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and cwd do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BitzMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Photographs are accepted at 778-8183.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

To the Editor:
We are not laughing

It is apparent that the Elm Editor, Rachel Fink, finds it appropriate to poke fun at a very serious and scary situation that occurred in Reid Hall last semester. The situation that I am referring to is Scott's unfortunate fall from the second floor landing in Reid Hall last semester. Scott, one of my roommates and good friend, simply lost his balance while walking down the stairs and feel over the small railing. No, Scott was not "trying to defy gravity" as your "Washington College Indoor Skydiving Club" ad (The Elm, pg 7, April Fools Day Issue 1995) states, he simply lost his balance and fell. Furthermore, if it wasn't for the bike in the basement foyer, you would have had to write an obituary for Scott instead of a "joke" ad promoting Washington College Indoor Skydiving Club.

I was the first person to reach Scott within seconds after he had landed on the bicycle in the Reid basement. Miss Editor, I would like you to please show me the "humor" of seeing my roommate in a puddle of blood, face down on an object that once resembled a bicycle. Or better yet, how about showing Scott's mother and father the "humor" of being awakened at 4 o'clock in the morning and being told that their son has just fallen two and a half stories and is undergoing a series of CAT scans at this moment to see the extent of his head wound.

I, however, Miss Editor do not see any humor in Scott's near fatal accident, nor do I believe the majority of the students, faculty, administration and community see the humor either. Miss Editor, I love a good joke but I do know were to draw the "line" between a joke and cruelty. I recommend to you, Miss Editor, to reexamine your "line" and if need be draw a new one.

-Chris Hargett '95

Editor's note: The editorial staff would like to apologize to Mr. Hargett for any offense caused by the "Indoor Skydiving Club" ad run in the April Fool's Day issue of The Elm. We would also like to remind Mr. Hargett that all of the issue and all of the ads contained in the issue were not ment to cause offense and were included only as good-natured humor. We felt sure that Scott would not take offense at the joke and would be able to see the humor in the situation. - Rachael Fink, Editor-in-Chief Concerning the April Fools issue of The Elm, we would like to express our disappointment over your careless sense of humor -- the advertisement entitled "Master Race Pilsner." We realize that the purpose was to mock those who advocate racial supremacy. However, we believe that this topic was inappropriate and handled insensitively. There are many people who still remember the horrors of the Holocaust as if they occurred yesterday. It has only been a half a century since the Allies liberated the death camps. The advertisement "Master Race Pilsner" exhibits thoughtless judgment on the part of The Elm and thus was in extremely poor taste.

Throughout the world there is growing neo-Nazi movements that spread such propaganda as described in your advertisement. Unfortunately, such movements that promote racial and social disharmony are growing in the U.S. We believe that if The Elm wishes to present such views it should be done seriously so it that it may be responded to in an equally serious manner. No one on this campus is left unscathed from your feeble attempt to lighten a viewpoint that effects the lives of everyone. Perhaps in future editions your choice of satire will reflect good judgment.

-Angela Panton, Jason Truax

Editor's note: The ad was written by Scott Koon, whose response follows.

I fully understand your concerns regarding the spurious ad I wrote. I too know people whose lives were affected by the Holocaust, and I would never intentionally write anything which would make light of the all too horrifying reality of their experiences. I have dedicated my life to fighting fascism in any form, and it was in this spirit that the ad was written. I have written many articles in this very paper pointing out the danger of fascism at home and abroad. The entire point of the "Master Race Pilsner" ad was to declare that "The time is right in America for Master Race Pilsner." This was my way of saying that America's so-called conservative movement is really an incipient fascist movement. To me, California's Proposition 187 is the exact moral equivalent of Adolph Hitler's initial moves to expel German Jews in the early 1930s. I'd rather get a few people upset with me than be silent.

This Week on Campus
April 7 - 13

Film Series
To Live
Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.

Friday 7
Washington College Community Chorus's Spring Fling
Tawes, 8 p.m.

Saturday 8
See Ad on page 8 for Casey Time and Earth Day events

Sunday 9

Monday 10
Clothing and the Gendered Self in Sarah Frank's Novels
Dr. Audrey Fessler, Lit. House, 4:30 p.m.

Tuesday 11
The Music Department presents pianist Vladimir Svoysky Norman James, 8 p.m.

Wednesday 12
Conflicts in a Developing Economy: A look at Ghana
Michael Malone, 7:30 p.m., I-House

Thursday 13

Thinking through ...

the Kurdish neutral zone

by Paul Briggs

"Kurdistan" is an entity you won't find on most political maps. It is defined as being that area of the Middle East where ethnic Kurds predominate. This area consists of portions of southwestern Turkey, northwestern Syria, northern Iraq and northeastern Iran. Each of these countries has a Kurdish minority population within its borders.

Most of you probably know the story of the Kurdish population in Iraq. It has suffered from every kind of repression, including chemical-warfare attacks on civilian towns. Just after the Gulf War, when a Kurdish uprising threatened to end in slaughter, the U.S. and its allies established "safe havens" in northern Iraq and a "no-fly zone" above the 36th parallel, where Iraqi planes would be forbidden to fly on pain of being shot down. The good news is that since then, Saddam Hussein has been unable to assert his authority over the area. In effect, it is no longer part of Iraq.

Now for the bad news. There is no clearly defined authority in the area to take the place of the Iraqi government. The Kurdish guerrilla fighters who struggled for so long against Saddam's rule have begun fighting among themselves. The closest thing to government in the area is the Army and the Red Cross. Nobody seems to have any idea what the final status of the area will be - whether it will become an independent nation, be returned to Iraq after Saddam Hussein's de-p-a-r-ture, or what.

For now, it remains a gray area, a kind of Romulan Neutral Zone in the Mideast.

Into this vacuum Turkey has stepped. Twenty percent of the population of Turkey is Kurdish, and the bulk of this is in the southwestern area of the country. For some time now, Kurdish separatists have been waging guerrilla warfare against the government in Ankara. In June of 1993, they engaged in terrorist attacks against diplomatic missions in Europe. The government has responded by cracking down in a manner which has caught the attention of human rights organizations worldwide. Widespread arrests and detentions, repression of the Kurdish language and military attacks on civilian areas have become common. Journalists have been followed, harassed and occasionally arrested for reporting on human rights abuses. Of course, almost any country that goes through a civil conflict of this sort finds itself doing a lot of this sort of thing, but in this case, the effect seems to have been that of trying to put out a fire with gasoline. The situation in Turkish Kurdistan is getting worse, not better.

Recently the Turkish military has begun attacking Kurdish guerrilla positions in northern Iraq. Ankara's official position on this is that these attacks are necessary in order for Turkey to defend its own security. There are other countries that engage in this sort of self-defense. Israel, for example, frequently attacks Islamic and Palestinian militants in southern Lebanon. The difference is that in this case, the attacks are taking place in an area which is supposedly under the protection of the U.S. and its allies. If they continue, inevitably Kurdish civilians who have never set foot in Turkey will begin to be the victims. Remember that the whole point of our presence in Iraqi Kurdistan was to protect the local population from Iraqi attack.

For this reason, the United States cannot continue its hands-off position regarding this conflict. At the same time, Turkey has been an important ally and NATO member for many years. Although its record as a democratic society is poor compared with that of most western European countries, it is considerably more democratic than most of its Middle Eastern neighbors. We have a very strong interest in not seeing Turkey further destabilized.

Therefore, the administration's first priority in this area should be to take this opportunity to offer to mediate the Turkish-Kurdish dispute. This would be a relatively risk-free move - the worst thing that could happen would be that one side or the other could refuse.

The second priority should be to resolve once and for all the status of Iraqi Kurdistan. If one listened to the actual inhabitants, they would probably ask for an independent state. However, there is no sign that such a state would be able to govern itself, let alone fight off Iraq.

Just how long we can keep up the status quo is in doubt. Saddam Hussein is (probably) not foolish enough to take on the United States over this area. Nonetheless, nature abhors a vacuum. Kurdistan cannot remain a neutral zone forever. Ω

The Network Expands:

Welcome to W.C.'s very own Chat BBS.

Mindie Kaplan

Do you know the feeling when you speak just a minute too soon and you kick yourself from here to eternity for not keeping your mouth shut one second longer? When you're talking about computer technology, you have to be especially careful. Remember when cassette tape drives were the newest thing and it took five minutes to load a game of Brickout? No? Nevermind then ... Anyway, so how could I have known that two weeks after I write about BBSes and Chat BBSes that Washington College would have our very own Chat program ... Yes, I know, BroadCast was supposedly our "chat" program, but this is bigger and better (of course everything is marketed as 'bigger and better' but this time it's true).

On WAC Chat, you can easily have three-way conversations across campus and even with people from off-campus. Save your phone bills without having to connect to a non-campus BBS! Just have your friends telnet to wchat.washcoll.edu and you can have live conversations without paying a dime! For Macintosh users, simply double click on the "Telnet" icon. Then, go under "File" to "Open Connection." Type wchat.washcoll.edu in the "host/session name" and click on "connect." What is also accessible to non-Macintosh users.

What is a 10-room chat BBS that was just installed on Monday. Right now, we're looking for input on what you think it should be like. Yes, that's right, student input is not only being solicited, it's REQUIRED. After all, WAC Chat was installed in response to student requests for real-time chat capabilities without having to telnet off campus.

Each "room" or channel will be assigned its own flavor. People will be able to find a room they're interested in, knowing in advance what type of conversation may be found there. According to Acting Director Tim Kirk, "Anything goes as long as it follows 'Tim's Grandmother rule." In other words, unless Tim's grandmother would blush at it or it's against the Honor Code, students will have free reign in deciding what this new BBS will be like. Other topics being discussed in future improvements to this new system include student monitors (to protect Tim's grandmother) and a password option that might allow students to reserve personal-use names as ISCA does.

Please send me BlitzMail saying what topics you would like to see in the ten rooms. Right now, the ten rooms are: general, hot topics, internet, computers, work, music, games, talk, help, and sports. The commands available may also be altered somewhat. Check it out and let us know how we can make WAC Chat a fun, interesting hangout. Ω

Christian A. Johnson Foundation, Endeavor Foundation, Arthur Vining Davis Foundation support junior faculty leave awards

Michael T. Kerchner, associate professor of psychology at Washington College, has been awarded the Christian A. Johnson Fellowship for the fall 1995 semester. The fellowship is supported by a $250,000 endowment fund created by the Christian A. Johnson Endeavor Foundation and the Arthur Vining Davis Foundations. Endowment earnings on these two gifts support specific scholarly projects such as research and writing for the purpose of publication, or gathering materials for the development of new courses or the significant revision of existing courses.

Kerchner, who heads up Washington College's new behavioral neuroscience concentration within the psychology department, will be evaluating the College's nueroscience courses and developing workshops on new videomicroscopy techniques for neuroscience faculty at other undergraduate institutions, as well as completing two research projects during his sabbatical.

The first involves the neural correlates of impotence in the stubby mouse, a project initiated last summer during the Jessie Ball duPont Summer Research Program and continued this year with the assistance of two undergraduates. Dr. Kerchner intends to complete the project with colleagues off-campus, using a videomicroscope at Villanova University and a computerized image analysis system available at Memorial University in St. Johns, Newfoundland. During a brief visit to the laboratory at Memorial University, Kerchner will work with Professor Charles Maisbury, a pioneer in the development of histological techniques for visualizing and quantifying androgen receptors in the brain.

The second project, an outgrowth of the work Kerchner completed in graduate school and while a post-doctoral fellow at Villanova, concerns the effects of prenatal stress on the development of a sexually dimorphic rodent neural system. Using new image analysis techniques he developed, Kerchner has been able to show that exposure to prenatal stress permanently demasculinizes some sexually dimorphic neural structures in male rats. In this project, he proposes future studies documenting the effects of stress on structures in the sexually dimorphic pathway.

Dr. Kerchner will use the data collected and analyzed to form the basis for a small undergraduate research proposal to the National Science Foundation, requesting funding for videomicroscopy equipment at Washington College. The new equipment would be important to students of biopsychology, neuroscience research methods, and for a rapidly growing body of psychology students conducting independent research projects or senior theses. ΩΩ

Donate Blood

This semester's blood drive will be TUESDAY, APRIL 25
Those who wish to donate blood can sign up in the dining hall starting April 10.

If you have any questions or could not attend the April 6 meeting please contact:
Chris Chiarchiaro through BlitzMail or at extension 8677

Donate Blood

The McLain Program and the Literary House Press present

Mushrooms, Molds and Health: Confessions of a Mycologist

John Hanes

Friday, April 7, CAC Commons Room, 10:30 a.m.

SGA Report

BY WILLIAM DENTON, III

The Student Government Association did not hold a meeting on Tuesday, April 4, due to Wednesday's advising day, and the meeting of March 28 is yet to be reported on due to the April Fool's issue of The Elm.

In the meeting of March 28, the 1995-96 Executive Board was completed. After more than a week of deliberation, the five elected executives rendered their nominations for the positions of Honor Board Clerk and Parliamentarian. Junior Reuben Stump was confirmed as Honor Board Chair, replacing current Vice-president Douglas Beckworth. Stump was one of the key contributors to the amendment of the Honor Code last year, and served on the Honor Board this past year. Freshman Corey Stottlemyer was confirmed as Parliamentarian, replacing Ken Pipkin. Stottlemyer was absent, according to SGA President Liz Likens, chiefly due to his qualifications in the area of parliamentary procedure. Stottlemyer participated in the Maryland Parliamentary Procedure Competition in both 1993 and '94, and his team in the competition finished first and second in those two years.

Casey Time / Earth Day festivities, coordinated by Junior Class President Mark Reyero, are tomorrow, April 8. See page 8 for a full schedule of events. This year, the Alumni Council will sponsor the planting of a new elm tree in the very spot on the lawn where the original tree died four years ago. Students and alumni will then make their way to the site of this year's campus beautification project, along the north side of Beach 213, in front of Caroline and Queen Anne's dormitories. Several trees and shrubs will be planted there, and following the planting, an Earth Day celebration will begin at Wilmer Park. A ska band will perform, as will an alternative band. The alcohol policy for the event is as follows: the Junior class will hire the Cove staff to serve beer at the festivities. According to Reyero, they will enforce the legal drinking age and request identifications. No alcoholic beverages are permitted in Wilmer Park, so drinking will be confined to the Pavilion. The stage will be set up to face the Pavilion, so that those choosing to drink will be able to see the bands perform.

The renewed attention to an SGA Attendance Policy suggested by Secretary Erica Estep on March 21 was further discussed last Tuesday. After weighing the opinions voiced by several senators, the following proposal was decided upon: three unexcused absences in the course of one semester will result in an automatic dismissal. Excused absences will be granted for reasons of academic and sports obligations.

A policy concerning Academic Probation for senators was also proposed. Being placed on Academic Probation will not result in dismissal, but entering probation (i.e. failing to remove oneself from probation after a full semester of probation status) will. This proposal will be incorporated in the Attendance Policy and the combined bill will be voted on at next Tuesday's meeting.

SGA Faculty Advisor Dr. Kevin McKillop reported on two proposed changes which could be passed into law, namely, the introduction of an SGA credit on students' transcripts and the extension of the hours of the Lifetime Fitness Center. Updates on these proposals are forthcoming in subsequent Elm SGA Reports.

The new Executive board, as has always been the case with the SGA, welcomes student feedback. Questions, comments, and concerns should be directed to the SGA via telephone (x. 8500), BlitzMail ("Student Government Association"), or in person. Ω

Washington College students intern in British Parliament

Have you always wanted to visit London? Here's one way to get there. The Hansard Scholars Programme in Parliamentary and Public Policy Studies is designed to bring students from the United States and the European Union into active contact with the political process in Britain.

In addition to interning in Parliament or some other governmental agency, students take courses at the London School of Economics and Political Science, University of London. Taught by senior British university faculty and other specialists, the courses focus on British politics and policy. Grades are based on the students' performance in the internship, course work, and their completion of a long-term research project.

Washington College students have been extremely successful in gaining acceptance to The Hansard Scholars Programme since1990. Last year, Catherine Rogers interned with the Institute for Public Policy Research and, since her return, has applied what she calls "a great learning experience" to other areas of her education and life. Similarly, William "Skip" Gibson and David Tsipenyuk, both of whom interned with Charter 88, felt their experiences immersed them in the "day-to-day workings of British government and life."

Washington College students who participated last fall all had the good fortune of interning with Members of Parliament or Members of the House of Lords. Suzanne Basel and Brian Tarleton both worked for MP John Denham. They enjoyed living and working in London and were amazed at the amount of daily contact each had with their MP. They doubted they would ever have been able to work that closely with a member of either major political party in the United States. Michelle Nichols, who worked for Lord Cocks of Hartcliffe, found her internship experience invaluable and gained insight into the British parliamentary system. Sarah Young interned with MP Roger Godsiff and found the work she was doing so interesting that "upon my return to Washington College, I altered my entire thesis proposal."

Josh Rosenstock enjoyed all aspects of the Hansard Scholars Programme. He worked with MP Martyn Jones, who took a personal interest in seeing that Josh not only learned but had a great experience in Britain as well.

The Hansard Scholars Programme is administered by the Department of Political Science and International Studies. Students who have a strong social science background in any discipline can apply by contacting Dr. Tahir Shad or Dr. Dan Premo. Ω

W.C. delegation represents Angola and Rwanda at 16th annual national Model OAU

What is the point of college students spending four long days discussing the problems in Africa? The 16th annual national Model Organization for African Unity, held at Howard University in early March, is an attempt to raise awareness of the African people, their diversity, and their situation, so that solutions can be considered.

"A model of this kind highlights our ignorance of the problems many African countries are experiencing," says Model OAU participant Angela Panton, who served as head delegate. "It is only when we can view the situation from the Angolan or Rwandan perspective that we really begin to understand their problems. Through a better understanding of African problems, more effective resolutions can be proposed and adopted."

Washington College sent 14 students along with faculty adviser Dr. Tahir I. Shad, to take part in the National Model Organization for African Unity. During four days of intensive work, Washington College students and students from 37 other colleges around the country discussed contemporary issues and worked fervently to pass policy resolutions.

Each college represented a member state of the OAU. One remarkable addition to the member states this year was South Africa. In fact, the keynote speaker was the First Secretary from the South African embassy. Because of its past policy of apartheid, South Africa had been banned from membership.

"In past years, the Model OAU was very active in the fight against apartheid through economic and political sanctions," commented Dr. Shad. "While the U.S. government had a great deal to do with the end of apartheid in South Africa, the isolationist policy imposed on South Africa through the OAU had some impact. In that sense, the model OAU mirrored political reality."

W.C.'s delegation to the Model OAU had the massive challenge of representing both Angola and Rwanda. Students prepared for the Model by extensive research and weekly seminars to discuss the issues facing their countries.

"Our first task was to gain an understanding of each country's basic character and national interests," says Panton. "The success of the model depends upon creating a realistic simulation in which each delegation adopts the national character of its country."

One of the advantages of the model being held in Washington, DC, is that each delegation has an opportunity to visit the embassy of its country. The embassy briefings on the morning of March 1 gave the W.C. delegation a vital update on the current situations in Angola and Rwanda. For the Rwandan delegation, the embassy briefing by Dr. Joseph Mutaboba provided information about the make-up of the present transitional government in Rwanda. This information later proved useful in defending the Rwandan government against accusations of discrimination towards Hutus.

The Model is organized by the Department of Political Science and International Studies and receives financial support from the Goldstein Program in Public Affairs and the Student Government Association.

Participants included Angela Panton, Head Delegate; International Studies; Mark Heagney, International Studies; Siu-yee Ng, International Studies; Luis Torres, International Studies; Josh Rosenstock, International Studies; Sarah Young, International Studies; Helen Thomforde, International Studies; Curtis Arnold, Business Management; Curtina Arnold, Business Management; Amy Bortmes, International Studies; Andre Taylor, Political Science; Mark Awantang, undeclared; Elitza Hadgieva, undeclared; and Mary Hoffman, undeclared. Ω

Sophie Kerr Prize

The Sophie Kerr Prize is awarded at Commencement to the senior deemed by the Sophie Kerr Committee to have "the best ability and promise for future field of literary endeavor." Students wishing to submit samples of their writing are invited to do so. All submissions must be in the hands of the committee by the last day of classes and may be brought to the office of the Chairman of the English Department for convenience and Safe-keeping. Manuscripts will be returned to their owners after commencement. All graduating seniors are eligible recipients of the award.

Editor for Broadsides needed

Any senior wishing to be the editor of the Broadsides poetry series next year should send a letter of interest to Prof. Kathy Wagner via campus mail by Monday, April 17.

Passover Seder

There will be a Passover seder on April 20 at 6 p.m. in Hynson Lounge.
There will be a sign-up sheet in the mail room.
Sponsored by Hillel and the Newman Club

laundry drycleaning
Park

RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD 21620

ROOM SIZE CARPETS

NEXT TO THE COURT HOUSE

Smoking banned in Student Center

Scott Koon

Last week the Maryland Governor Parris Glendening signed a law which bans all smoking in all indoor workplaces. Exempt from the law are bars and restaurants. The restaurant exemption applies only if the restaurant has a separate room for smokers, whereas the exemption for bars applies only if the establishment earns 60 percent of its total revenue through the sale of liquor.

Until last week, the only indoor public place on campus where smoking was allowed was the multi-purpose room of the Student Center. The major impetus behind the ban was concern for the effects of passive smoke in the workplace. Director of Student Activities and Campus Recreation Dennis Berry is the Washington College staff member most directly affected by the change. In an interview with The Elm, he expressed dissatisfaction with the way the change has been handled. According to Berry, the state did not issue any information on how the law is to be enforced, "they just told us to post (signs displaying the change in the law.)" Berry, a non-smoker, expressed a desire to see some way of accommodating smokers, such as an awning by the handicapped access ramp behind The Cove.

Student response to the new law has been mixed. "I think it (the ban on smoking) is great because it's good," said Ryan Walker, an non-smoker. Jodie Clark, another non-smoker, expressed disappointment because "I like to go into Pizza Hut and have them ask smoking or non-smoking." Katie Degentesh said the smoking refugees from our all non-smoking campus will evoke a certain nostalgia: "It will be just like high school."

In an informal poll last night of people on Broadcast, most of the opinions were weighed in against the change. "In the Student Center people should be allowed to smoke, especially since it is their own Student Center. And I don't even smoke," said Freil Kamther. Laura Krumbein, another non-smoker, expressed almost exactly the same opinion: "I think it sucks. I think smokers should be able to smoke anywhere, even though I'm not a smoker!"

Amanda Friend disagreed with non-smokers who are not bothered by smoke. And she has good reason: "I'm allergic to smoke, and it's irritating to not feel good when I'm attending events in the Student Center. Considering it's now a law in Maryland, that there is no smoking in most public places, I think Washington College should abide (by the law.)" Paul Bayne concurred, stating "we have a right to breathe clean air too."

Many more of the responses in the (extremely) informal poll were of the opposite opinion. "I work in the Student Center," Bill Brady said. "I think the ban is stupid. We are equipped with special fans down there for smoke. It never gets bad there. Less people use the place now. It was a great place for socializing, but now it's ruined." Jennifer Nauta agrees, adding that she thinks "the ban is dumb."

Some of the responses we received were of (we hope) a lighter nature. Josh Farley said "The ban takes away my God-given right to destroy myself any way I want." And Kevin Hoffman said "I was going to quit smoking, but when I found out about the ban it only encouraged me to smoke more. I'm gonna be like a chimney, baby!" Ω

"Drugs" from 1

Much of the student populace had been anticipating an occurrence such as that which happened last Friday; it was first publicly affirmed that security was tightening in this area last semester. Said Roderick, "We started taking steps last semester when we started receiving more and more complaints about this type of activity occurring in the dormitories. The Student Deans and I met with the Resident Assistants ... and explained to them exactly how my office would respond to these complaints ... basically, we take these incidents very seriously. The college policy clearly states that we take this seriously. There was a lot of proactive work done, and, unfortunately, that message wasn't heard by everyone."

The college narcotics policy states that "the illegal use of narcotics by any member of the College is not condoned." Said Roderick, "It's strictly forbidden. Zero Tolerance."

Punitive measures such as this seldom occur, chiefly due to the fact that the office of Public Safety has to "deal with things in a very legal fashion. We have to ensure that we're protecting the [legal] rights of our students as well as ensure that we're enforcing campus policy. When we start building a case against a violator, we're going to make sure that we do it in a way that's going to be legally sound. We have to establish enough probable cause ... we don't act on mere suspicion."

The narcotics policy further states, "Any Washington College student found guilty of possessing, using, selling, or under the control of narcotic, hallucinatory, or dangerous drugs on campus may subject himself to immediate dismissal from the College." As for the future of the two that were arrested, according to Roderick, "that is strictly confidential between the Student Affairs Office and the students themselves."

As far as the criminal aspect goes," said Roderick, "they still have criminal charges that they'll have to face."

Roderick added, "Washington College clearly is not a sanctuary from state and federal laws. Drug arrests have occurred on this campus before, and they'll probably happen again in the future. Students need to be aware of the fact that these substances are illegal; they do carry some pretty significant penalties." Ω

"Stettler" from 1

Governor William Donald Schaefer. During his years as Secretary, he was a member of the Governor's Cabinet and served as the Governor's chief financial adviser and negotiator during the State's savings and loan crisis. In 1987, he became Chief Deputy Treasurer of Maryland, serving in this position until he joined the U. S. Treasury as senior adviser to Eastern European governments.

Stettler also has an academic background. From 1961-1963 he was an instructor at Purdue University and from 1963-69 he was an assistant professor of political economy at The Johns Hopkins University. Stettler holds a B.A. in mathematics and history from the University of Notre Dame and a Ph.D. in economic history from Purdue University.

Stettler has received high praise from his previous associates. Former Governor Harry Hughes described him as "a tireless worker and a quick study" and added, "I cannot imagine a more qualified person for that position." Maryland State Treasurer Lucille Maurer described his appointment as "a coup for Washington College."

Washington College's Acting President John Toll remarked, "It is a fitting recognition of the special importance of Washington College that Dr. Stettler, after brilliant management of the State's finances, now chooses, as the capstone of his career, to lead Washington College's financial management."

Louis L. Goldstein, Chairman of Washington College's Board of Visitors and Governors remarked, "I have admired Lou Stettler for many years as one of the State's ablest administrators. He is the ideal Vice President to guide Washington College's management in its third century of academic excellence as Maryland's first chartered college."

When questioned by The Elm as to the length of his stay at W.C., Stettler commented "I figure a decade or a dozen years ... I don't see this as a temporary assignment."

The Elm welcomes Louis Stettler to W.C. and wishes him the best of luck. Ω

Dance!

Dance!

Dance!

Learn the Flamenco yourself, and then watch the pros do it!

The Washington College Dance Program presents Los Morenos, Flamenco Dance and Guitar, on Thursday, April 13.

Luisa Verrette will give a workshop in Spanish Flamenco dance at 4:00 p.m. in the Dance Studio of the Johnson Lifetime Fitness Center. She will teach the rhythms, movements, and footwork of Spanish Flamenco, accompanied by David Moreno on guitar. No experience is necessary. Miss Verrette is a prize-winning dancer who teaches at the Spanish Institute in New York and at Marymount College. Later that evening, at 7:30 p.m., Luisa Charney, David Moreno and Company will present a lecture/dance performance in Norman James Theater. Los Morenos presents the emotional and free spirited Flamenco style dances which coordinate the rhythms and harmony of the singers, dancers, and guitar. The audience will share the Flamenco scene by engaging in palmas and jaleo used to encourage performers. Everyone is welcome to attend both events, free of charge.

LOYOLA

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

Senior Reading

Any graduating senior who would like to read (fiction, poetry, drama) in this year's annual Senior Reading - to be held Sunday, April 30 - should submit his/her name to Prof. Kathy Wagner by Monday, April 17.

Andy's

Friday, April 7 - Little Jack Melody
Tom Waits meets Frank Sinatra ... neocabaret ...
"utterly fab" - R. Stone

Saturday, April 8 - 5 Chinese Brothers
Roots - rock - country - pop - swing; raves from
The New Yorker to Rolling Stone to Dirty Linen

Thursday, April 13 - Susan Witty
Raleigh, NC singer-songwriter ... folk / pop originals ... vocals reminiscent of Natalie Merchant orange c.r.u.d.

creative ranting under duress.

by Cortney Clulow

Eins

She peeled the orange like she knew what she was doing. She gave it a twirl and ta-dah — never a more nude fruit have I seen. And the skin? A spiral of perfection. I took that bright orange husk in my hands and pushed it back together. It remembered what it was like to have guts inside — I could tell by the pressure. She ate the orange. Well, she ate the guts of the orange anyway. Strange I think, that the guts and skin are both orange. Everything in an orange is orange. The juice, the skin, the guts. It's all orange. The only organic member of the color wheel. With the exception of all those hippie children named Chartreuse ...

Zwei

A blazing torch lit the path ahead of him. It hissed in the air, the fat on the blunted end popping and searing the soft hand gripping the tapered end.

"Really? You know how improbable that is."

"I have no idea. If I'd used tar, would the fire still be orange?"

"Because you're a fool. Almost all fools are self-abusive."

"TAR! Why on the green earth didn't I use tar?"

"I shouldn't talk to you at all."

"Why? Because if you had, one might suspect you weren't, in fact, a complete idiot. And you know how improbable that is."

"Really?"

"Maybe blue. Or green. I've heard of green fire."

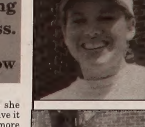
"Why on the green earth are fools so self-abusive?"

"I wouldn't choose to listen to you either."

"TAR! You're a complete idiot."

Drei

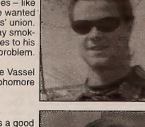
Unlike most of the other dreams I've had, this one never stops. It pretends to be one long, incredible life, wonderful roots twined in my every breath. I haven't had much time for doing anything else. I would probably get a lot more done if I were awake. I've never really tried to wake up. Sure, I open my eyes now and again, but it isn't long before I just roll over and let the grains pour back over me. That's one thing I've noticed: dreams are much more colorful. Lots of blue. Some green, a little purple. And orange, yes I think there was some orange in my dream during lunch two weeks ago ...



Vier

This was his last chance. Desperate, Kim hefted the hammer over his head and held it behind him, hanging from his double grip. And then: WHAM! He smacked that sucker down in a hard swing, eyes squeezing his eyes closed to give him more power. And in an instant, his reward: ting! He shielded his eyes from the glaring sun and read his epithet, 20 feet up, just to the right of the bell, "Hercules". Proudly, Kim Webb, Hercules, raked his fingers through his hair. Nearly a dozen orange strands stuck to the sweat as he brought his hand away. Deftly, Kim tucked them away in his pocket. He feared being Hercules and bald in the same day, in front of the same crowd. His eyes down, he moved on. Ω

Campus Voices

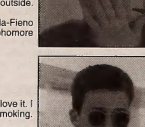


Photos by Debbie Spence

This week's question: Do you agree or disagree with the smoking ban?

I disagree because smokers are cool.

Casey Bane
Freshman



I agree with it. I don't smoke, but my roommate, Jarrett Pasko, does – like a pack a day. He wanted to start a smokers' union. A lot of people say smoking contributes to his weight problem.

Gene Vassel
Sophomore

As the great pharaoh, Benjamin T. Hinkle once said, "Some of the world's greatest men have been smokers."

Dave Kraft
Junior

I agree that it's a good law. It's good for those who don't smoke so they don't have to breathe in other people's smoke, and it's only a small inconvenience for those who don't. They just have to go outside.

Federico da-Fieno
Sophomore

I agree because you can go outside if you need to smoke.

Kelly Eakin
Junior

Yes, I agree. I love it. I can't stand smoking.

Hart Askew
Freshman

Washington College's Gay and Lesbian Alliance:

GALA back in operation, Gay Pride Month activities planned

Sarah Bell

"As a group, we want to be respected. We think that we can do that through the few, but significant things we have begun. We like to emphasize that we are not an exclusive group out to be rebellious," said Denise Hakanson, President of this year's GALA.

April is Gay Pride Month and GALA is sponsoring events such as poetry readings and movie nights. Gay and Lesbian Movie Week starts on April 10 and a movie will be shown every night until April 13 from 8 to 10 p.m. in the Lit. House. Some of the movies include "Claire of the Moon" and "My Own Private Idaho." The informal poetry reading that took place last week will be held again after one of the movies.

"There wasn't that much of a turnout for the poetry reading because we didn't let people know ahead of time. So, we are doing it again and hopefully more people will show up. Anybody can come and bring topics relevant to gays or bisexuals or you can just come and listen," Hakanson said.

During the summer, GALA will provide transportation to Washington for the March On Washington for Gay Rights. A bookshelf in the Lit. House containing gay and lesbian material has just been put up thanks to contributions made by GALA members.

But due to late start and no SGA funding, GALA could only do a few activities for Gay Pride Month. Hakanson is in the middle of getting her own office and feels that GALA will really take off next semester.

"The offices of GALA have been filled by a new group of people, completely different from those who filled them in the last few years. GALA will be an up and coming group because of this. A lot of the former members have graduated and it is like we are starting over," Hakanson remarks.

GALA meets every Tuesday night from 8:30 to 9:30 and is open to anyone who wishes to come.

"Not all members, or even officers, are gay, lesbian or bisexual. It is very mixed and we encourage any kind of support from all aspects of sexuality."

Those that attend the meeting will remain anonymous. No names will be taken down, but, there will be a picture of GALA in this year's yearbook which has not been done in a while.

GALA was "put back together" by Denise Hakanson because the awareness of gays, lesbians and bisexuals is increasing on the campus. There are a greater number coming out and it is GALA's responsibility to make the campus more aware of this.

"GALA is more for ourselves," said Hakanson. "People have a hard time dealing with their sexuality. We want to make people aware of our rights but we don't want to shove it in their face. We just encourage recognition and support." Ω

HOROSCOPES

Aries (3/21-4/19) You can have your cake and eat it too: just buy two cakes.
Taurus (4/20-5/20) Hockey, Hercules and gratuitous cleavage. What else is there?
Gemini (5/21-6/21) Do not even touch firearms this week, but feel free to play with them in the future.
Cancer (6/22-7/22) Do not be so quick to find fault with others. Instead, focus your energies inward so that you may realize that by dwelling so intently on the problems of others you cause an abscess in your soul.
Leo (7/23-8/22) "You great star, what would your happiness be had you not those for whom you shine?" - Nietzsche
Virgo (8/23-9/23) Know your limit. Alcohol poisoning is no laughing matter. This week ask yourself: "Do I really need these five extra drinks?"
Libra (9/24-10/23) "Once the sin against God was the greatest sin; but God died, and these sinners died with him. To sin against the earth is now the most dreadful thing..."- Nietzsche Scorpio (10/24-11/22) The other has moved on with his or her life. Perhaps you should consider moving on with yours instead of becoming hopelessly bogged down in the past.
Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) Every once in a while, it's good to crush yourself with a couple of four-footers.
Capricorn (12/21-1/20) You stand on the cusp of a new beginning. Great wisdom can be yours if you ignore the scoffers whose minds are bound by the iron chains of convention.
Aquarius (1/21-2/18) They say that if you love someone you should set them free, but this week you will realize that it is more fun if you tie them up.
Pisces (2/19-3/20) You don't want to hurt anyone, because if they're hurt they're still breathing and that's just not good enough!

by Shade and The Deep Spawn.
Ember is dead. "sniff"

A couple weeks ago I held a spotted pygmy skunk. I was down in Mexico working as a volunteer researcher on a carnivore study, and while we were going after the big guys like jaguars and pumas, we were ecstatic to catch the little skunk, which still grown was barely the length of my hand. Though he certainly was a cute little guy, we weren't won over by its good looks or pleasant smell, rather our giddiness came from the skunk's rarity. It is currently found in only four Mexican states, and its habitat is the most endangered tropical forest type — the tropical dry forest. So we worked to fit the skunk with a miniature radio collar we were touching an animal that had not been recorded and even know exists, but is in very real danger of ceasing to exist altogether. It is an animal endangered by association — with no habitat there will be no skunk.

Endangered species are one of the most familiar causes of environmental movement. Indeed, many environmentalists complain that people too easily rally behind the whales, bears, owls of the world and shower the more complex and father-reaching goals of ecosystem preservation. However, extinction is easy to understand, to be taken lightly, because it is something that is all too permanent. In our world of "white-out" and do-overs it is somehow difficult to grasp that extinction affords no second chance. Extinction is all too permanent, and a species driven to extinction is a species forever gone. Its genetic code that little skunk, which still grown was barely the length of my hand. Though he certainly was a cute little guy, we weren't won over by its good looks or pleasant smell, rather our giddiness came from the skunk's rarity. It is currently found in only four Mexican states, and its habitat is the most endangered tropical forest type — the tropical dry forest. So we worked to fit the skunk with a miniature radio collar we were touching an animal that had not been recorded and even know exists, but is in very real danger of ceasing to exist altogether. It is an animal endangered by association — with no habitat there will be no skunk.

Endangered species are one of the most familiar causes of environmental movement. Indeed, many environmentalists complain that people too easily rally behind the whales, bears, owls of the world and shower the more complex and father-reaching goals of ecosystem preservation. However, extinction is easy to understand, to be taken lightly, because it is something that is all too permanent. In our world of "white-out" and do-overs it is somehow difficult to grasp that extinction affords no second chance. Extinction is all too permanent, and a species driven to extinction is a species forever gone. Its genetic code will no longer be passed on and its niche in society will have to be filled by another, if the niche can be filled at all. Evolution is stopped short, and growth is retarded. There is no bringing an extinct species back; no way to undo mistakes. It is the cruelest act of murder since it stretches far beyond the individual, in essence killing not only all the current representations of the species, but also killing the future of that species, and making all past development and evolution insignificant. It is, in a word, a super-killing. Biologically, every time a form of life is wiped out, the web of life is weakened, in ways that are often beyond our ken. Each of our biologists were able to hypothesize that at least our skunk was not nocturnal. As the biologists continue to monitor him, along with all the other carnivores that they have captured in the study, they will slowly learn more about the animals' habits, and their roles in the dry forest's ecosystem. What the skunk can not know is that in order to protect him we must understand him. Furthermore, if we don't protect him, we will never have the opportunity to understand him. Frankly, I was honored to be privy to his life for a few hours — to be part of an attempt to understand a skunk.

Notes

by Andrea Nolan

Sitting here, on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, the skunk's fate seems rather distant from my everyday life. But that little skunk is in every way a part of me, and every time I look at a snapshot of him, or remember the stink of his spray, I think of what the world would be like without the spotted pygmy skunk. The world would be a lesser place, that much I know. I do not require seeing every species of the world; such a goal is ludicrous in its impossibility. Indeed, I have no real need to see a tiger or a panda — I only require the knowledge that they share the world with me. I only needed to hold that one skunk, to work for two weeks in an area where my footprints fell next to the prints of cougars, to know in my heart that species diversity is the sweetness of life. I am also certain that even if life could continue with far fewer species than we have now, I would not want to live in such a world. Ω

Chappell, regional writer, reads from Oysterback Tales

Friends of the Clifton M. Miller Library, a new group of Washington College supporters, is sponsoring a reading at the College by local writer Helen Chappell on Wednesday, April 19, at 7:30 p.m. The program, featuring Chappell reading from her popular book, Oysterback Tales, will be held in Hynson Lounge and is free and open to the public.

Oysterback Tales is a compilation of Chappell's columns about Oysterback, a fictional Eastern Shore village "where almost anything can and frequently does happen." Her columns appear in the Baltimore Sun. Her writing focusing on Maryland's watermen has been compared to Garrison Keillor's Lake Wobegon tales.

"Helen Chappell captures a slice of life of Maryland's watermen as very few other writers have," says Jane Bradley Lowe, president of the Friends of Miller Library. "As we embark on our mission to help Miller Library become the very best it can be, we consider ourselves fortunate to have Helen Chappell as our first attraction."

The author, a resident of Bellevue in Talbot County, currently is at work on a book with photographer Starke Jett about old graveyards around the Chesapeake Bay region. She also is a prolific writer of Regency romance novels which she scribes under a pen name, Rebecca Baldwin.

The Friends of Miller Library welcome new members who may volunteer their assistance to Miller Library in areas ranging from information systems, to special collections, to fundraising. Members receive a newsletter and invitations to various social activities and are entitled to special use of the computer-networked library of 200,000 volumes.

For membership information, contact Head Librarian William J. Tubbs at 778-7292. Ω

Writers' Union plans

The Writers' Union is jumping with lots of plans for the end of the semester. Friday, April 8 in the date of the next open reading which will be held at 8 p.m. Lit. House. The Sophomore / Junior reading is also coming up very soon. Contact Jodie Clark or Ryan Walker if you want to read. There will also be an open reading at the next full moon, tha. Marianne Culbertson, head of the Writers' Union, is planning to take the group into the cemetery. She plans to equip. each participant with a candle and bring "a mystery drink. I won't tell you what it is," she taunted and grinned evilly. Also on the writing calendar is the Senior Reading. Seniors will be invited to read their work. The reading is being organized by Bob Day and Kathy Wagner.

The student-run magazine Menagerie will be coming out before the end of the semester. The deadline for submissions is April 15. Please submit poetry, short fiction, short nonfiction, art, lyrics, photography, essays, and plays to Chris Watkins or Erika Wilson. The Vomit Vender is also printing another issue. Contact Jodie Clark and Ryan Walker for more information. Broadsides is also in its final weeks. Don't forget that the deadline for the Beacham prize, awarded to a junior for excellent writing, is May 1.

The Writers' Union also has 50 Lithaus t-shirts remaining. "That's how we feed Edith, unattached and white, beautiful eat we have." Also, anyone interested in becoming a part of the Junta next year should contact Marianne Culbertson.

The final notes from the Writers' Union also include information about putting on your own magazine and applying for fellowship rooms. People who wish to put out their own magazine should approach the Writers' Union and SGA for funds for publishing next semester. Juniors and seniors should prepare a portfolio over the summer to submit in order to obtain a fellowship room. Portfolios will be due in the first couple of weeks of school. Ω

Science Fiction fans emerge:

Balticon, the sci. fi. convention coming soon

Windie Kaplan

In light of the rapid disappearance of Mindstorm episodes, it seems that the campus is renewing its interest in science fiction. There's no better place to indulge a love of science fiction than BSFS's (Baltimore Science Fiction Society) annual convention, Balticon. April 14-16 are the dates of the areas largest sci-fi convention which is located in Baltimore at the Radisson Loyd Baltimore and Omni Inner-harbor hotels. The Guest of Honor is James P. Hogan. The art Guest of Honor is David Cherry. Also featured are Filk Guest of Honor Tom Smith, Fan Guest of Honor Michael Walsh, and special guest Hal Clement.

For your $40 registration fee, you are allowed free access to the best masquerade on the East Coast (which has showcased everything from costumes of hand painted silk and thousands of hand-sewn beads to a borg costume make out of findings at the local junkyard). Special prizes are given to the best and most humorous presentations, so most costumes are presented during skits ranging from "The Fairy God-Borg" to a five-year old Batman flying to the audience's rescue.

Another Balticon tradition is their art show which sells or auctions sculpture, jewelry, and paintings ranging in price from $5 to the hundreds of dollars. Music lovers will be entranced with several live filk music concerts and workshops. To keep the music going nearly 24 hours a day, Balticon provides open filking rooms where the audience joins in with the professionals in a circle enjoy the old favorites. Since a large portion of the convention goers never sleep (although they do eventually grow hoarse and leave the filking rooms), there's a nearly 24 hour gaming room (shows begin at 8:30 a.m. and end at 2 a.m.) showing the best and worst science fiction has to offer, a separate Anime Animation room, and a gaming room for role-playing, board games, and card games. For people who love to shop, there will be a dealers room featuring fantasy and science fiction merchandise (often at cut-rate prices) from across the country.

What else does Balticon offer? They certainly believe in getting you your money's worth. There will be two full tracks of literary programming (consisting of hour-long discussion panels and lectures running from 8:30 in the morning until around midnight) in addition to the usual author readings and autograph sessions. Subjects in these tracks will include SF, Fantasy, Horror, Writing and Storycraft, Academic Subjects, Computers and Technology, Social Issues, Movies and other Media, Art, and Costuming.

Balticon members will also be able to participate in workshops and demonstrations. They plan to host a Traditional Ballroom Dance workshop, a "How to Build an Alien World" panel, and offer fans a chance to take a shortened version of the MMPI and IQ tests, to generate data to compare to their figures from Chicon II (another convention).

"In addition to the Guests of Honor, the program will feature dozens of writers, editors, agents, publishers, artists, musicians, and other SF&F professionals showcasing their talents for your edification and delight" wrote the unnamed author of this year's Balticon flyer, "Last year we had nearly 150 guests, and expect a similar number again."

Science buffs will love the science programming. This year, they plan to feature topics from the frontiers of human exploration. Balticon includes more than twelve hours of briefings from premier researchers and experts.

We knew about Single-stage to Orbit (SSTO) before it was cool to know about SSTO. The dinosaur panel is always packed. And we'll probably have an update on the status of the space station," wrote the unnamed propaganda writer. I have attended Balticon every year since 1992, and I can guarantee that it's well worth the effort of driving from C-town to Baltimore. I hope to see you there! Ω

A night at the movies ...

Higher Learning

Student Center
April 13, 14, and 15
at 9 p.m.

Sponsored by Student Activities.

"Lit. House people are so elitist"

A play-by-play article of inside jokes about Sophie Kerr weekend

Eva Kaplan-Leiserson and Jen Ward

This past weekend was Washington College's Sophie Kerr weekend, coordinated jointly by the Admissions staff and the English department. About twenty pre-freshmen from various high schools on the East Coast came to get a taste of the literary life at W.C.

Four college students were on hand to welcome and host the prospectives during their stay: Sophomore Chris Watkins and Freshmen Pete Torigoe, myself (Eva Kaplan-Leiserson), and Jen Ward (sitting-in here to my left, aiding me in writing this article).

The high school students arrived on Friday afternoon in time for a reading in the Norman James Theater by Hortense Calisher, author of numerous short stories and novels. Ms. Calisher read "Gargantua" from her short story collection Saratoga Hot. Jen, say something brilliant about the reading. What did you think? I can't believe she was 84; I swear she didn't look a day over 60!

An elegant catered dinner was served shortly after the reading at the Hynson-Ringgold House. Talk about the rice and the chicken, says Jen. Oh Jen, the rice and chicken were both very good. No, say they were distinguishable. Ok Jen, you could definitely tell the rice and the chicken apart. Always a good thing to know what you're eating!

After short welcomes by Bob Day, Director of the O'Neill Literary House, and Acting President John Toll, the prospectives were placed in the capable hands of the student hosts. (MuHAHAHA—insert evil laugh here) That's so funny!! Thanks Jen, I try.

Most of the students went—Jen, went is such a weak verb— Most of the students attended the stupendous performance of the Riverside Players' I Hate Hamlet, where we cheered on Sophie Kerr weekend's own Chris Watkins as Gary Peter Lefkowitz. All the actors were—Were is such a weak verb. Eva,—ok, all the actors performed marvelously and demonstrated beautifully the fine drama department at W.C. It was a treat that couldn't be beat. Yeah.

Hey, Jen didn't even go: one nonconformist prospective went with Jen to that lame movie at the MAC. Jen fell asleep at ... No, it's not lame because Ken Pipkin picked it and he'll kill me if I say that. So, one prospective student went with a sleepy Jen to that extraordinary drive-in movie, It Could Happen to You.

After the play, I (Eva) took most of the students to the Cove where we showed them the real spirit of Washington College: sitting around, doing nothing, and talking to people. (Except when you have just met these people it's a bit hard.) I begged them feverously to ask me questions, to make my life meaningful, make me feel worthwhile. Alas, they were uninspired and there we sat, staring at each other: "Um ... let's go do something?" I said.

Consequently, everyone reconvened in the Lit. House for a rousing game of Psychiatrist, sponsored by Kevin Hoffman, the unofficial member of Sophie Kerr weekend. ("My name wasn't on the list!") Don't forget Jeff Evans, the Really Unofficial member! (Let it be herein stated that Jeff Frank is duly noted, and can have nothing to complain about from us.)

Weary from the exhaustive game of Psychiatrist, (Kudos to Chris!) many of us went back to the Alumni House for beddy-bye. Some, however, remained to be entertained by upperclassmen Andrea Nolan, Katie Degerman and Vomit Vender Twins (and Ping-Pong Champs!) Ryan Walker and Jodie Clark. (It was just like the Vomit Vender Reception! I felt like I should be taking notes for an article! In fact, Jodie did ask Jen if she was writing all this down. Little did Jen know at that point that she actually would have to write this article!)

(Morning people that we are,) we all heartily looked forward to breakfast at the Lit. House at 8:30. Bob Day then gave his annual creative writing workshop, in which he led a critique of the prospective students' writing, submitted for the Freshman Sophie Kerr Scholarship.

Lunch was distinguishable. —Jen, nobody's going to get "distinguishable." It's a Jen Inside Joke! That's funny! Anyway, lunch was a medley of cold cuts, pretzels, cookies and what not. We finished just in time for Richard Gillis to give a talk on John Keats' poem "La Belle Dame Sans Merci." Jen, what did you think of the poem? She was pregnant. Definitely pregnant.

Concluding the weekend was a workshop in the Lit. House Press, presented by Printing God, Mike Kelly. After a slightly long lecture of the history of the printed word (Mike—you know we just kidding!) he turned on the 1913 Chandler and Price, and helped the prospectives print their backs to their very own postcards. Should we write the quote? It's an awesome quote.

"I like printing in my basement best, almost, no, I like drinking champagne and getting wildly excited. I like driving off to Rodmell on a hot Friday evening and having cold ham, and sitting on my terrace and smoking a cigar with an owl or two" —Virginia Woolf.

With that, the little tykes were shipped off home, tuckered out from their "wildly exciting" adventures as temporary W.C. students. And we went home to sleep. Ω

The Riverside Players present I Hate Hamlet

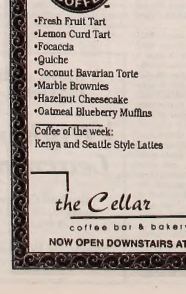
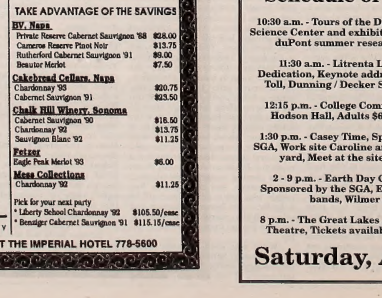
Perry Schatz

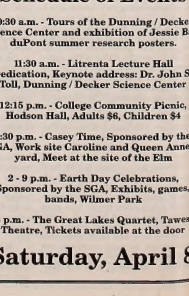
The Riverside Players made yet another mark on the W.C. community last weekend with their production of I Hate Hamlet by Paul Rudnick. Directed by Steve Fuchs, the play was about a young movie actor, Andrew Rally, who has to choose between Hollywood and Shakespeare in the Park when he is offered the part of Hamlet in a local company. Living temporarily in the New York City apartment of John Barrymore, Andrew is haunted by the deceased actor's ghost who tries to convince him to take the part. With the help of Barrymore, Andrew faces the dilemma of choosing between the stardom of film and the starving greatness of the stage.



Overall, the Friday performance that I attended was fairly well done. The set design and lighting, both managed by Steve Fuchs, were pulled off effectively and presented no serious conflicts with the play. Although the limited space in Phoebe's Studio Theatre made some of the set difficult to see from the rear seating, the stage direction accommodated somewhat for this deficiency.



The cast did a good job of holding the play together. Patrick "Pez" Walter's performance as the ghost of John Barrymore proved one more time since the company's first production, An Actor's Nightmare, that this boy can act! He remained well-focused and energized through the last scene. Mike Crews, playing Andrew, kept his focus and was astounding in the more passionate scenes between his character and Barrymore. Lisa Chobody once again charmed the crowd with her wonderful character acting technniques in her role as Andrew's girlfriend, Deidre. Karen DiLossi's performance as the New York realtor, Felicia, showed potential for a promising future in character acting as well. Her accent was authentic and she projected it steadily throughout most of the play. Anne Black made an extravagant appearance as Andrew's European manager Lillian Troy. Chris Watkins made us all chuckle as usual with his energy and unique style. The part of the producer, Gary, was well suited for him.



In the first scene I was a little confused as to where exactly the apartment was located. I realized soon that this was an apartment in New York City. The rooftop presented a problem when Deidre entered by the top doorway in her nightgown. I wasn't sure whether there was another room there or simply a New York City rooftop. The columns on either side of the audience in Phoebe's obstructed the view almost completely for those sitting in the rear seats to the far left or right was sitting in the back and found it very difficult to see the characters during the scenes in the first scene. Both of these problems might have been solved by an elevation of the stage.

Actions of the characters and the level of connection between the actors that created problems when a line was missed or a cue was off. If the connection was there, there may not have been as many noticeable mistakes. Chris and Anne's accents were unclear in some parts of the play. This slight inadequacy made their characters less believable and may have been the result of poor direction.

In spite of these glitches, Steve Fuchs, the cast, crew, technical directors, and stage managers, Billie Rinaldi and Caren Lee, did an excellent job of presenting a play which was a sweet alternative to Video Scene on a Friday night. I'm glad I went and look forward to seeing more of what the Riverside Players can do. Ω

So it's happened again. I have ind myself sitting up on a ednesday night without an album, even a friend to pawn this task off

It's a bad place for a columnist to It's times like these that crack-pot nses are hatched, and phantasmal pinions are challenged publicly in the me of creative journalism. Far be it me to fight back against the on-ing tide of tradition.

So here is your wake-up call, my ends.

There is a specter haunting the lls of American government, one so stasteful to the sensibilities of a de-nt, rational mind that no man or man who considers themselves a oud American, or indeed even a man being, can ignore it in good nscience.

Certainly, there are those who re fought back against it. Every age blessed with a few brave souls with a clarity of mind and strength of art to rise up against tyranny with far-reaching tentacles and say, "No! s will not stand for this!" fortunately, their efforts have been aked upon as nothing more than enic relief. In fact, more often than t, these freedom fighters have found st the world is not ready for their ssage. However, the time of the lightened One is at hand, and our ause will no longer be mocked by ose made blind by the veil of modern olitical maneuvering.

And what, you ask, is this mes-age? What is the cause celebre of the reedom Elite? Put simply, my riends, it is this: in the midst of polit-al degeneracy, the time has come for new presence in the White House!

Dropped A Whole Degree

Aaron Pierce

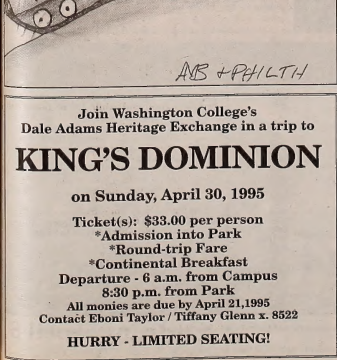
No review ... just paranoid chanting and (hee hee) hope for the future?

The time of pork-fed fat cats living parasitically off of the blood and labor of the American people is through! A new age is dawning, one that is verily bloated with the promise of Happiness, Prosperity, and Pleasant Living, and it is our task to usher this infant future into the present.

That is why, my friends, we must make way for the new political blood. I'm not speaking of the "Republican Revolution" (though why they insist on calling it a revolution instead of, more accurately, an invasion is beyond me). Gingrich and his cronies have slithered into political power, not with the best interests of the American people in mind, but merely to reap the benefits of an unwieldy system, and then slink off into history, trailing the spoils procured from the rape of their unwitting and naive constituents.

Now is the time for upheaval and reclamation! Now is the time for us to join together in United Plurality! Now is the time to put our voice into the mouth of Government and establish our needs as the goals of this, the American Experiment! Now is the time, my proud brothers and sisters, to elect Frank Zappa for President!

Ok, so he's dead. However, you must admit that in our short and sordid political history, we've allowed far less likely candidates to assume the seat of power. As a people blinded by the lies of a Utopia promised to us as children, we have time and again cast our ballots in favor of men so twisted by the power of politics that they have become little more than plasticine shells housing the ogres of Greed and Falsehood. Remember Nixon? Even now, his place in history is being revised so that his "True Political Genius" can be revealed to a sadly forgetful public.



Or how about our Last Great Dictator, Ronald Reagan? Have we already forgotten the conservative nightmare that was the Eighties? Who of us recalls the fatal steps backwards into what could only be described as the Wilderness of Yuppie Greed? Are we such well trained animals that we are actually looking forward to returning to that hell? I say No!

What other scandals have been lost to near-sighted History? Were the Founding Fathers really as pure as we like to claim they were? Or are we instead standing at one end of a long line of Political Leeches?

My friends, there is only one sane response to such an outrageous abuse of power: elect a person we can trust. Why shouldn't it be a dead Rock star? Will President Zappa promise tax breaks only to deliver higher rates? Will President Zappa cut funds to important social programs, leaving the mountain of pork-barrel legislation unchallenged? How could he? He's a corpse!

And what of Foreign Policy? We all remember Bush's infamous show of gastro-intestinal weakness. But would we have to worry about President Zappa disgorging his lunch for all the world to see? Of course not. Death cures all sickness, including upset tummies.

So there it is, my friends, the answer to all our woes. No longer will we have to toil under the iron heel of tyrannical oppression! I have seen the future in a vision of shinning promise, and it goes by the name of Zappa! Ω

Washington College Staff Profile

Again, I ventured through the big white door of Bunting to meet with President Toll's secretary, Annie Coleman. She is responsible for making the President's appointments, keeping him busy but making sure that he is not over-booked. She answers the phone and does a little filing and types up all of the President's correspondence. Joe Holt is the President's executive and Coleman tries to back him up whenever the phones aren't ringing.

This is Coleman's second go around at Washington College. The first time she started working here was in 1969 in the Alumni office until her boss started the Plan Giving office. She worked there until 1972, when she began starting on her family. Then she came back in 1983, working as the President's secretary, and has been at this job ever since.

Coleman has lived in Kent County all of her life with her husband of 25 years, Dudley. She has two sons and is a grandmother. Her oldest son, Bryan, graduated from Washington College with a degree in Chemistry. Her younger son, Lawrence, is married with two children and is in the Marines.

"I have lived in Kent County all of my life," said Coleman, "and I sometimes wish that I had lived somewhere else for a while. Then I could come back and appreciate it more."

In her free time, Coleman takes a quilting class at the Kent County High School. She loves shopping at yard sales and browsing through antique shops.

When I asked Coleman what she likes about working here at Washington College, she responded, "Well, there is such a variety of things to do here. My job is never the same. I'm sure everyone else has told you this but we are like a family here. It is a good support system. I enjoy the kids, even though I don't see too much of them any more. You tend to get attached to some of them."

Join Washington College's Dale Adams Heritage Exchange in a trip to

KING'S DOMINION

on Sunday, April 30, 1995

Ticket(s): $33.00 per person
*Admission into Park
*Round-trip Fare
*Continental Breakfast
Departure - 6 a.m. from Campus
8:30 p.m. from Park
All monies are due by April 21,1995
Contact Eboni Taylor / Tiffany Glenn x. 8522

HURRY - LIMITED SEATING!

DISCOUNTS INCREASED HEAVILY 15% To 40% OFF
Atlantis
patagonia
Comfort Walking Canes
Columbia
Old Towne® Canoes & Kayaks
White Earth® Outback Felt Hats
UGGS
BAY TO BAY TRADERS
207 Cross Street, Chestertown, MD (410) 778 - 3442

Women's lacrosse:

A long, tough haul for the young W.C. team

Photo courtesy Sports Information

Elizabeth Moga dodges tough defense with pure speed and skill

Beth Moser

A team plagued by injuries, inexperience and nationally ranked teams is one way to describe the women's lacrosse team. Another way is to recognize and respect the dedication, determination, and desire of the sixteen players representing W.C.

Since the beginning of the season this team has been dealt one bad hand after another resulting in a current record of 0 wins and 5 losses. The two most recent defeats were handed out by Ursinus (2-19) on March 30 and Dickinson (1-20) on April 1. The scores are not the only things that determine the quality of the game according to sophomore defensive wing Liz Mangano, "We work hard out on the field and we have lots of pride ... the scoreboard doesn't give us justice."

In the second game of the season against Swarthmore the Sho'women suffered the devastating loss of Megan McCurdy to a season-ending knee injury. Many wishes have been expressed for a full and healthy recovery. Last year she was the team's leading scorer and this year McCurdy was well on her way to repeating this display. Similarly, sophomore Amy Scarlett missed a few games due to an ankle injury. Fortunately, she will be back soon at 100% to help the team made of only two juniors, freshmen and sophomores.

Leading the team with college experience are the juniors Peggy Busker, goalie, and Jill Schultz, defense. Head coach Sarah Feyerherm commented that, "Peggy is playing her best lacrosse ever and has improved 100% over last season." Likewise, Jill took on the role of a team leader despite off-season surgery. Without these two playing defense the team would be suffering even more than now.

A bit of a blow was dealt to the women in the scheduling of this season in the fact that three of the first five games were against nationally ranked teams. As sophomore offense player Elizabeth Moga stated," The schedule ahead gets a little better, but by no means is there any team that we are going to face that is easy." Many of the women recognize the talents of the other teams and fight even harder to win. Feyerherm believes that the competition of these nationally ranked teams only serves as a learning experience and the team is improving because of this. There is by no means a lack of talent or game experience on Washington's team, but merely the lack of years of playing together, a large amount of the team played in high school and on recreational teams before that.

For the women who did not play in high school or rec. leagues the opportunity to play is available. At this point there are at least two, sophomores Liz Mangano and Becky Stephens, who have never played before this year. Becky reinforces this feeling found throughout the team that, "We're bound to get better as the season progresses because we're all hard workers and very ambitious." Liz adds in that "the team rocks ... and the coaches are great ..." In the coming years there is definite room for improvement and little doubt that it will occur.

The Sho'women are trying with all their talent and heart, but opponents continue to outscore them 54 to 7 in the first period and 27 to 5 in the second. Feyerherm believes, "They know that they have a ways to go but they are willing to put in the hard work to get there."

Overall, the women's lacrosse team is having a bad start, but are definitely expected to improve, if not this year, then absolutely in the 1996 season. So ladies and gentlemen go and support the Sho'women in their upcoming games, because according to Moga, "We are going to have to play our best lacrosse against every team."

The next games are W.C. at Western MD on April 5, W.C. versus Gettysburg on April 8, and W.C. versus Johns Hopkins University on April 11. ❑

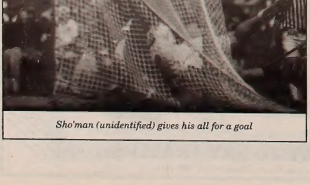
POW

Washington College's Player of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an athlete displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

Number 34, Christian Boone was essential to Saturday's game against Roanoke, for the Sho'men Lacrosse squad. Boone, a senior mid fielder from Annapolis, rejected many pleas from the Naval Academy to chose Washington and is a leader on the team. Boone is co-captain of the '95 team with Jesse Cook.

Saturday's game was a tight game for the Sho'men as they were down four players for the game. They needed a lead man on attack and Boone stepped up. Boone was the ball handler in every offensive possession for the Sho'men. He sparked the offense as he maneuvered the ball around the Roanoke defense. Boone played the entire game, with no penalties. He fired many excellent shots at the Roanoke keeper and found the back of the net twice. Boone also gave two assists to the Sho'men score. Boone was not only a scorer but he hustled and scooped up four ground balls to start the offense. The game was a disappointing loss for the Sho'men as they were down one goal at the whistle and at one point had been tied with Roanoke.

The team is 1-0 in the conference and looks to improve over Swarthmore. Their following three games are away, including rival Salisbury State, Saturday, April 22 at 1 p.m. Be sure not to let this game slip by. Watch Boone continue to lead the offense and score for the Sho'men.



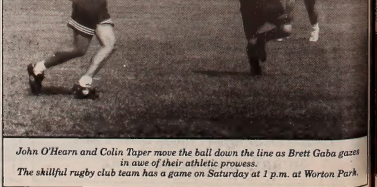


Photo by John Ferrell, courtesy Sports Information

Sho'man (unidentified) gives his all for a goal

John O'Hearn and Colin Taper move the ball down the line as Brett Gaba gazes in awe of their athletic prowess.
The skillful rugby club team has a game on Saturday at 1 p.m. at Worton Park

W.C. Crew team competes for the Caspersen Cup

This past weekend, the rowing
s raced John's Hopkins and St s's for the coveted Caspersen Cup.
ugh the rowing team lost the cup this year, the team raced very com-itively. In the first race of the day, varsity woman's heavyweight four an (Jen Dugher, Stacey gemond, Tonya Howell, Harris, and Brown) placed second to their arival, the Hopkins crew. This de-ver, has not brought the en down; rather they are more deined than ever to beat Hopkins season.
In the same race, the varsity an's lightweight four (Robyn chell, Taber Overall, Amy rrison, Anne Petracco, and istina Chiarchiaro) beat out St.
's for third place.
The Hopkins lightweight rowers are r lightweight crews and are anxs to compete with others in their di-sion; racing with the heavyweights, ever, will certainly make the men a force to be reckoned with this kend at the LaSalle invitational.
st of luck this weekend ladies!

W.C. soccer has frustrating spring

The spring season was a very gh one for the Sho'men soccer
m. The guys traveled to three tour-ments, two indoor in February, and e outdoor at the end of March.
hough the team played well in es, they just could not get everyg together at once.
The first indoor tournament, held Gettysburg College, set the tone for what was to happen over the entire ng. The Sho'men defense kept the al out of the net, but couldn't gener-te the offense that they needed to ry them through.
Starting the day with a win over ami College put the Sho'men off on e right foot. The next games re-lted in a series of low-scoring ies. First with Ursinus College ot the team in the hunt for a group e, but a 2-1 loss to a tough ttysburg team essentially left the men hoping for a playoff spot.
eir next game against Salisbury ate also ended in a frustrating 1-0
, but if they won their last game,
y would advance into the playoff
und. That would not happen, as yet other 0-0 draw sent the Sho'men king. The team could only manage pal for the tournament, scored by shman Rodney Roman, on an assist m fellow classmate Erik Dahlen.
st story of the day was in the back.
C. was stellar on defense, due in rge part to the outstanding play of ior keepers Chris Downs (4 shuttinst), and Mike Gill (1 goal tinst). Allowing just 3 goals on the y was a feat no less than spectacur, and each of the netminders turned a number of sparkling saves. A 1-2-record wasn't what the team ex-ted, but they had hopes to do well e rest of the spring.
The next tournament was held at esiah College. Again, the Sho'men's fensive woes continued, managing ly 5 goals on the day. The star of the rnament offensively was freshman ott Helm, whose 3 goals kept the
'C. in all of their contests. A tourney-ening victory over F & M gave the o'men hope for the rest of the day, t the offense soon fizzled, and the burden once again rested on the defense. Junior goaltender Mike Gill had another great day in the net, and defenders Tom Hiebler, Yoseph Bekele, and Shayne Bates also performed well. Losses to Messiah, Ursinus, and Muhlenberg once again kept the Sho'men from advancing to the playoffs.
The team's final tournament at Goucher College was a refreshing change from the dreary indoor scene.
A beautiful day outside provided the backdrop for one of the team's biggest victories in recent memory. The first game of the day pitted W.C. against the division III finalist in the NCAA tournament, Johns Hopkins. W.C. fell behind early, 1-0, but in the second half, W.C. went ballistic, scoring 3 straight goals and earn a hard-fought
3-2 win. Goals by Chris Daily, Scott Helm, and Matt Strohl highlighted the game for the Sho'men. Once again, the defense was nothing less than solid, as goaltender Chris Downs turned away the Blue Jays on several occasions. Outstanding defense by Tom Hiebler, Strohl, Yoseph Bekele, freshman Dan Arnato, and sophomore Brian Dorst kept Hopkins at bay. The next game against Goucher proved to be a most unlucky one. W.C. lost the game, 2-0, and both Downs and Gill to injuries. The defense was dented, but never gave up in the games to follow, including a 2-2 tie with Marymount (both goals by Scott Helm). The win against Hopkins and the tie against Marymount was good enough to lift the team to their first playoff berth of the spring. Their hopes were quickly dashed by a skilled Charles Comm.
College team, and despite some good work from goaltender Will Merriken, they couldn't muster any offense. A 3-0 loss ended the spring for the Sho'men.
All in all, the spring proved to be beneficial, as the team got the chance to have some fun and play together.
This fall, experience will be important, as W.C. plays a tougher schedule than in years past. Come out and support the team this fall! Ω

This past weekend the men's varsity and novice crew team competed against John Hopkins University and St. John's College of Annapolis for the Caspersen Cup. Acting President
John Toll, the president of John Hopkins, and Mr. Caspersen, who flew in on his private helicopter, watched this weekend's races.
The men's varsity four race heated up the waters with an exciting race against Washington, John Hopkins and St. Johns. In the men's varsity heavy weight boat (from stroke to cox)
Adam Scholl, Doug Peterson, Regis de Ramel, James Pitt, and Karen Wright pulled for a first place finish. The race began with Washington pulling out in front for the first 1000 meters, leaving Hopkins and St. Johns behind them respectively, yet soon afterwards,
Hopkins moved up parallel with the Washington. With only 300 meters left to the finishing line, Washington steadily walked ahead, finishing with a boat and half length of open water over Hopkins. Next was the men's novice eight race, with only Washington and Hopkins. In the eight: Fredl Kanther, Andrew Stein,
Tyler Benedum, Kevin Quinn, Dan
Biscoe, Chris Pelz, Tim Haggerty,
Ryan Heard, and Pez as their cox.
Within the first 500 meters of the race, a Hopkins rower was hauled into the water by at violent crab, leaving Washington with an easy victory - fortunately the Hopkins rower escaped with only a bruised ego.
The men's novice four also scored a victory for Washington over Hopkins. In the four were (from cox to stroke) Kanther, Stein, Haggerty, Bendum, and Pez. Next came the pairs with all three school entering boats. Coming in first were Washington's John Shannahan and Mike Beardsley and not too far behind in second, were Harrison Gallagher and Steve Kim. Hopkins and St. Johns finished in third and fourth respectively. In the Men's varsity singles, Brendan Norris pulled for a second place finish behind Hopkins. Jeff Lee finished fifth behind Hopkins "B" and St. Johns. Unfortunately, Washington had won six races, yet only three of those races were included in the points trophy. Winning the Caspersen Cup, was Hopkins with 13 points and Washington College with 12. The men's team looks forward to this coming weekend at the La Salle Regatta in Cherry Hill, NJ. Ω

Washington baseball faces Hopkins today

Erika Ford

After craftily pulling off a ninth inning win against Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore on Tuesday, the Sho'men hope for an encore performance today. Hosting Hopkins in a game at 3 p.m. this afternoon, the team plans to send their opponents away with two defeats in a week.
On Tuesday, the score was tied at three in the top of the ninth when Matt Wentz brought in two runs. Freshman infielder Sean Tyzsko hit a homer and helped put Washington over the top. Hopkins was unable to overcome the 5-3 deficit in their turn at bat in the bottom of the ninth, and Washington came away victorious.
The baseball team's record is now 3-2 in the Centennial Conference. Should they stand at a solid 6-6, Hopkins is a predicted top contender for the league championship.
Last week the Sho'men played two doubleheaders, winning one set and losing another. In games at home, Washington spanked Lincoln in a big way, 17 and 2-0. Both games ended after five innings by mutual agreement between the coaches. Lincoln's coach no doubt wanted to board the bus with his players and get out of Chestertown quickly and end the tor-ment. In game one, pitcher Andy Moore struck out seven, only walking one and giving up one earned run on the mound. Scott Quinn had a homer in the fourth inning and 3 RBIs. Moore double in the first brought one player home. Jarrett Pasko, Tim Pilarski, Quinn, and Matt Flanagan all had multiple hits in the Washington romp. In game two versus Lincoln, Paul Taylor was the starting pitcher. Pasko took over in the fourth inning, and Nate Tyler wrapped up the game on the mound in the fifth. The three gave up just two hits in the entire game, and combined for seven strikeouts. Triples were the play of the day, with Tyler, Brian Rush, and Chris Eaton each hitting one. An eleven run fourth inning for the Sho'men clinched the Washington win.
Against Franklin & Marshall last Saturday, Washington was not so lucky. In the first game of the double-header the Sho'men fell 6-3. They made a strong attempt at a comeback in the seventh however, when two runs were scored off of Moore's double. Rush and Kevin Roland manned the Brian Rush tells the team exactly what to do.

PHOTO BY TRICIA MCGEE, COURTESY KENT COUNTY NEWS

pitcher's mound. In the bottom half of the match up against F&M, Washington lost 7-4, on five hits and five errors. Pasko and Eaton both tripled. Quinn stepped out of the bullpen to pitch all eight innings.
After today's game hosting Johns Hopkins at 3 p.m., Washington base-ball will be on the road for a while. Tomorrow they'll travel to Gettysburg in their fifth Centennial game of the season. A week off between games will give Washington the opportunity to come out swinging against Dickinson next Saturday in Pennsylvania. But first though, Washington hopes for an aggressive win over Hopkins to im-prove their league record to 4-2. Ω

W.C. Rugby vs. Georgetown
Saturday, April 8,
1 p.m. at Worton Park
Free beverages provided during and after the game.

Humphrey's Point Farm
on scenic Swan Creek near Rock Hall offers a full care event horse facility with a private atmosphere. We have two stalls available at reasonable rates. Also TB event horses for lease and for sale. Instruction, trailering.
639-2832

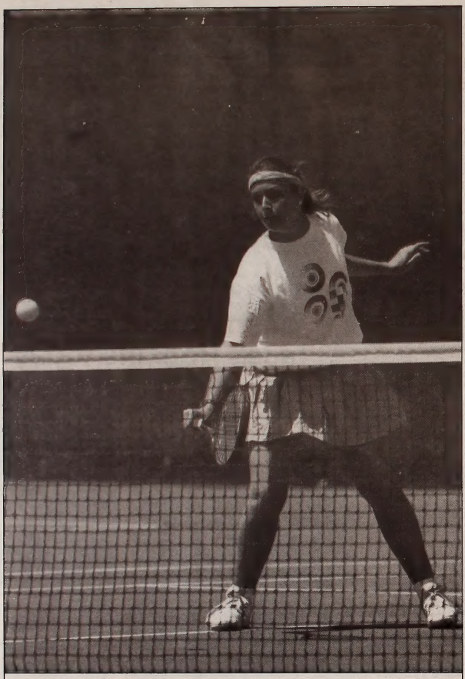

PHOTO COURTESY SPORTS INFORMATION

Vicki Roth, with ease and confidence, struts her tennis stuff.

Scores

Men's Lacrosse

Washington 10
Syracuse 8

Washington 12
UVA 11

Washington 11
Princeton 9

Washington 13
Georgetown U. 5

Washington 17
U. of North Carolina 3

Washington 12
Roanoke 13

Women's Lacrosse

Washington 23
Swarthmore 9 (OT)

Washington 19
F&M 12

Washington 1
Dickinson 20

Crew vs. Oxford, Harvard and Princeton

1st place GOLD medals
Men's varsity 8
Men's varsity 4
Women's varsity 4
Women's varsity 8
Men's Novice 4

2nd place
Men's novice 8
Women's novice 8
Women's novice 4

Baseball

Washington 8
Richmond 5

Washington 17 21
Lincoln 1 0

Washington 4 3
F&M 7 6

Washington 5
Johns Hopkins 3

Softball

Washington 12
Navy 4

Washington 8 1
Salisbury St. 12 11

Men's Tennis

Washington 1
Clemson 7

Women's Tennis

Washington 6
Haverford 3

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Saturday, April 8

Baseball @ Gettysburg, 1 p.m.
Women's Lacrosse vs. Gettysburg, 1 p.m.
Crew @ LaSalle Invitational, 9 a.m.
Softball @ Muhlenberg, 1 p.m.
Women's Tennis @ Gettysburg, 1 p.m.
Men's Tennis vs. Averette& Gettysburg, 10 a.m., 2 p.m.

Monday, April 10

Women's Tennis @ F&M, 3 p.m.

Tuesday, April 11

Men's Tennis vs. Georgetown, 3:30 p.m.
Softball vs. F&M, 3 p.m.

Wednesday, April 12

Women's Tennis vs. JHU, 3 p.m

Thursday, April 13

Women's Lacrosse vs. Widener, 4 p.m.
Men's Tennis @ Ursinus, 3:30 p.m.
Softball vs. Wesley, 2:30 p.m.

The Washington College

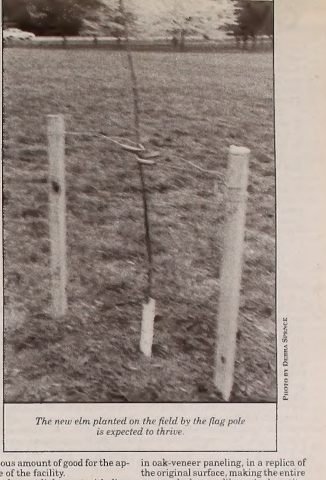
ELM

Volume 66, Number Twenty-three

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Dunning's lecture hall refurbished and rededicated

William Denton, III



When Washington College's Dunning Science Building opened in 1940, the most sophisticated teaching tools employed in the big lecture hall were chalkboards and overhead projectors. Thanks to the beneficence of an alumnus who studied to become a doctor in that environment, the lecture hall in Dunning has been refurbished and modernized with the latest multimedia capabilities.

Dr. David Litrenta '58, and his wife and business partner, Shirley made a donation of $50,000 which was the chief source of funding for the project. Dr. Litrenta is President-elect of the University of Maryland Medical School Alumni Association and CEO and Medical Direction of York Industrial Medical Center, the largest provider of occupational and environmental medicine in Pennsylvania. The Litrentas' gift, along with continuing support from the Jessie Ball duPont fund, which provides grants to many small liberal arts colleges, provided for the renovation of the Dunning lecture hall.

According to Robert Harrison, Director of College Development, "Our department was involved with interesting David Litrenta in supporting the renovations. He's been a long-time contributor to the well-being of the college through both his time and his gifts. He's had a compelling interest in the sciences. When the opportunity came up to improve the physical facilities, as I understand it, he took a ready interest in being a part of it," Said Harrison, "A need and an interest coincided. There was a move afoot to improve the facilities, and, at about the same time, David indicated a strong interest to see some of those things happen."

The physical improvements to the facility give it the appearance of "almost new construction," said Physical Plant Director Reid Raudenbush. A substantial improvement noted by Raudenbush is the addition of a "preparations room behind the chalkboard at the base, or the bottom, of the room." The back wall of the entrance to the building was moved in toward the entrance about eight feet to create the room. The room is equipped with a sink, storage, and electrical power, and is designed to prepare experiments for class demonstration in advance.

Next, the lecture hall underwent a cosmetic upgrade. "The largest element," said Raudenbush, "was the wrapping of the entire interior of the lecture hall in drywall and painting it. It was previously simply painted block." Since the building's construction, many electrical and telecommunications advances were made, causing a lot of exposed electrical conduit on the block walls. Said Raudenbush, "all of that conduit was able to be hidden behind the drywall ... I think that does a tremendous amount of good for the appearance of the facility.

The new elm planted on the field by the flag pole is expected to thrive.

PHOTO BY DANIEL SPENCE

Incandescent lights, set with dimmer switches, were also added. With the new lighting, the lights can be set dim enough to view the video or projection screens while allowing enough light for students to be able to take notes.

The demonstration table at the focus of the lecture hall was also renovated. The counter was added on to at one point, making it look like two separate tables, the counter was wrapped in oak-veneer paneling, in a replica of the original surface, making the entire counter look more like a single entity, rather than two separate projects.

The hall's new electronic, computer-aided, and projection equipment, which also was added as a result of the Litrenta gift, increased the demand for renovation in the lecture hall. Now, a more modern facility houses the new modern equipment.

Preparation for the renovation was done during last summer, and the

See "Litrenta" on 7

Daly Hall plans revised and revamped

William Denton, III

The plans for Daly Hall, Washington College's proposed new academic building, have met with much revision and are being prepared for submittal to the Board of Visitors and Governors. With the Board's approval, ground-breaking would be tentatively scheduled for next fall, with projected completion in the Fall of 1996.

According the Joe Holt, Executive Assistant to the President, several changes to the plan have been made since its debut.

Said Holt, "We had planned to move the Computing Center to the basement of the new building. The Computing Center will not move into Daly Hall at this point. The Faculty Lounge was to be relocated to Daly; it will now stay in Bill Smith. Student Affairs was supposed to move from Casey down to Daly; and current plans call for them to remain where they are."

And Central Services was going to move there from Smith." A three-story atrium in the original Daly Hall plan has also been removed.

The facility will retain approximately the same number of classrooms and offices as included in the original plan. According to Holt, "Tentatively, the plans are to, and this is all subject to Board approval, to construct Daly Hall ... as a free-standing building adjacent to the wing of Tawes Theater ... in the existing parking lot."

"Some thought and consideration is being given," said Holt, "to connect the two [buildings] at the second floor level." The second-floor connection would permit handicapped access to the second floor of classrooms in Gibson Fine Arts Center, since Daly Hall will be equipped with an elevator.

According to Holt, once Daly Hall is completed (Fall 1996 is the projected completion time), a "historically sensitive" renovation of William Smith Hall would occur. The College plans on "moving the functions that currently take place there into Daly, and then renovating William Smith Hall."

"In that phase of the project," said Holt, there will be "an opportunity to think about moving the Computing Center into the basement [of Smith],

See "Daly" on 7

New honor society created

Silver Pentagon Society to begin with class of 1999

Scott Koon

This fall the brightest of Washington College's incoming freshmen will be inducted into a new honor society. The new honor society will be called the Silver Pentagon Society, and will consist of the top ten percent of admitted freshmen.

According to Vice President for Admissions and Enrollment Management Kevin Coveney, the average member of the first year's crop of inductees has a high school GPA of 3.8, an SAT verbal score of 610 and an SAT math score of 620.

The College's Committee on Retention has been in the process of conceiving the Silver Pentagon Society of the past year, according to Committee Chair and Dean of Student Affairs Maureen McIntire.

According to Dean McIntire, the Society will serve to provide "recognition (for) the best and the brightest in the incoming class," and will serve as "a junior version of Junior Fellows."

The Silver Pentagon Society will also offer other benefits for members. Dean McIntire said these benefits will include "programs and opportunities analogous to Junior Fellows, first choice of orientation programs, and first choice of housing, if appropriate."

The Society will also meet together to determine what other sorts of programs and activities they will engage in.

"It's our hope that students will identify themselves with other good students and it (the Society) will make it easier for them to come together as a group," McIntire said.

The symbol of the pentagon has a long history at Washington College. According to Dean McIntire, the use of the pentagon on campus seems to have begun in the 1930's. At that time, there was an academic group on campus known as "the pentagons" who used the silver pentagon as their emblem. Ω

Inside This Week's Elm

Thinking through ... the new populism. Paul defines populism as it exists today. 3

Changes proposed
Amount of student involvement in administrative decisions is questioned. 4

Net surfing
Mindie takes us into the world of the World Wide Web, where almost anything is possible. 6

Dropped a Whole Degree
Aaron (Blake not Pierce) explores the concept of side bands. 9

Good-bye and good luck

The semester is drawing to a close and this will be my last editorial, my last chance to fill this space with rantings and ravings, my last chance to pass judgment and give praise. Amazing how time flies. It seems like just last week Kate and I were lamenting about how long a year is and how many Elms it takes to fill an entire semester. Now my reign as Editor-in-Chief is ending and Kate's is just beginning.

Just for the record, I am confident that Kate is more than competent to put out an outstanding paper. She's motivated, dedicated and twice as reliable as I. She and Bill will make a wonderful team and everyone should be looking forward to the new Elm administration.

As cliché as it is, I'm approaching the end of my career as Elm editor and looking back over the work we as a team have done this year. Not a bad show, I think. We've managed to institute some changes that are and may continue to be helpful to the running of the paper and improve the quality of the finished project. We touched on some tough issues and had some fun, too. We've dealt with the changing of an administration, the balancing of a budget, the dismissal of a popular faculty member and resurgence of interest on the part of the student body in the running of the College. We've poked fun at ourselves and at the College. We've covered Birthday Ball, lacrosse games and movies. All in all, it's been a pretty good year for The Elm. Next year should be just as good if not better.

Before I hand my baby over to Kate, I want to thank a few people who have been instrumental in providing me with the support, encouragement and advice necessary to pull all this off. First, I extend thanks to Tim, Earl and Steve for saving me every time the computers decided to have a mind of their own. Thanks go to everyone at The Kent County News, especially Trish and Bill for giving me a taste of the real paper business. To Richard Harwood for his experience and confidence. To everyone on the Board of Publications for supporting my decisions and convincing me that the paper was really all right. To everyone in the photo room at Chesapeake Publishing for making Thursday nights interesting. To all of my staff for putting up with my mood swings and anal retentiveness. To all my friends (especially the Aarons and Scott) for understanding when I got obnoxious and hard to deal with. To all of the writers who volunteered their time and energy to fill this paper with text. To everyone who expressed their opinions of the paper. To everyone who helped up with story ideas and provided information. To everyone who read. And finally, my warmest, most heartfelt thanks to Kate. Without her support, hard work and spelling skills, this paper wouldn't have happened. Thanks y'all!

"These are days you'll remember. Never before and never since, I promise, will the whole world be warm as this. And as you feel it, you'll know it's true that you are blessed and lucky. It's true that you are touched by something that will grow and bloom in you.

These are days you'll remember. When May is rushing over you with desire to be part of the miracles you see in every hour. You'll know it's true that you are blessed and lucky. It's true that you are touched by something that will grow and bloom in you.

These are days.

These are days you might fill with laughter until you break. These days you might feel a shaft of light make its way across your face. And when you do you'll know how it was meant to be. See the signs and know their meaning. It's true, you'll know how it was meant to be. Hear the signs and know They're speaking to you, to you."

- "These Are Days," Our Time In Eden, 10,000 Maniacs

Sophie Kerr Prize

The Sophie Kerr Prize is awarded at Commencement to the senior deemed by the Sophie Kerr Committee to have "the best ability and promise for future fulfillment in the field of literary endeavor." Students wishing to submit samples of their writing are invited to do so. All submissions must be in the hands of the committee by the last day of classes and may be brought to the office of the Chairman of English Department for convenience and safe-keeping. Manuscripts will be returned to their owners after Commencement.

All graduating seniors are eligible for the award.

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Rachael S. Fink
News Editor
Kathleen E. Meagher
Features Co-Editors
Mindie J. Kuplin and Sarah Bell
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Erika Ford

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Joshua T. Lawrence, IV
Office Manager
Scott Ross Koon
Photo Editor
Debra Spence

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and crud do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BlitzMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8585.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

To the Editor:

Gratitude expressed

I want to take this moment to thank everyone that helped out with both Casey Time and Earth Day this past weekend. I want to thank the Phi Delts, Thetas, and KA's for helping at both events. I also want to acknowledge the following people: Tom Berr of Anthony's Landscaping, Ed Athey and the Alumni Counsel, Brooke Hanke '92, Reid Raudenbush, and Pat Trams for their gracious assistance with Casey Time. I would also like to extend a warm thanks to the Chestertown and William Ingersol for use of Wilmer Park. Thanks also goes out to Casey Hargrove and Hargrove Inc. Washington Public Safety Department, and Rose and the Cove staff for supplying cold refreshments. Personal thanks go to Mike McDermott, Steven Dashiell, Gene Vassel, Tim Reath, and Matt Mullin for working with me on Earth Day over the past few months. Thanks to everyone who attended the rain shortened Earth Day, I hope you still had a good time. Finally, I want to thank all of my brothers of Phi Sigma for helping out all weekend and supporting me!

- Mark Reyero, Class of '96 President

Honor Board ruling explained

This letter is in response to concerns that have been expressed by many of our college community concerning the campus narcotics violation involving 4 students on the night of March 31, 1995. The students were suspended by Presidential Right of Summary Suspension on Saturday, April 1 for an alleged violation of the campus drug policy as a temporary measure until the Board could be convened. The case was promptly heard on Tuesday, April 4 by the Honor Board. Three of the four students, all of whom where Freshman, were found guilty of violating the Honor Code.

1) The students were placed on Disciplinary Probation:

"Students violating College rules are subject to disciplinary probation. If a student placed on disciplinary probation is found guilty of violating any College regulation, (s)he will subject himself to immediate suspen-see "Honor Board" on 3

Write-in votes requested

Friends, Romans, Countrymen, lend me your cigarettes. While you're at it, vote for me when you get the chance. I'm not going to be on the ballot though. No, this is a far more insidious plot to shake this college to its very knees! I'm asking you to help me do it.

Yes, that's right my friends, I, Kevin Hoffman, am going to run for sophomore class president. Why, you ask, am I not sharing space with the rest of those shmoozers who are currently campaigning to get your precious vote? Well, some would say it's because of my poor planning and inability to scrounge a measly ten signatures to get on the ballot. I say nay! I refuse to be a part of business as usual at this institution! For this reason, I am running a campaign on my terms, by my rules, and kissing nobody's butt except for my own!

see "Votes" on 4

CNW courses questioned

I am the first to agree that, in order to attract better students, Washington College needs a strong core curriculum. However, I fail to see the strength in courses with titles as vague and ridiculous as "Living With An Ocean" and "Crisis in the Arts in America." Providing first- and second-year students with courses in which they can get an easy 'A' may raise their self-esteem and their GPA, causing them to stay at the College - but will W.C.'s reputation rise equally when graduates find themselves ill-prepared for anything more specific than "Issues in American Life?" My bottom line here is this: if a student's interests aren't broad and energetic enough to encompass subjects as disparate as Biology 101 and European History, what are they doing in college, and why are we trying to keep them here?

A good teacher can make almost any subject interesting to a good student. Good students are in pursuit of a well-rounded education: they want to take the courses offered in distribution. While I admit that the current course offerings could be restruc-

see "CNW" on 4

This Week on Campus
April 14 - 20

Film Series
Pulp Fiction
Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon., 7:30 p.m.

Friday 14
Good Friday

Saturday 15
First Day of Passover

Sunday 16
Easter Sunday

Monday 17

Tuesday 18

Wednesday 19
Helen Chappell reading from her new book
Hynson Lounge, 7:30 p.m.

Thursday 20
Passover seder
Reservations required
Hynson Lounge, 6 p.m.,

Thinking through... the new populism

by Paul Briggs

Populism. What is it, and what does it mean? Webster's New World Dictionary describes a "populist" as "any person, esp. a politician or political leader, who claims to represent the interests, views, or tastes of the common people, particularly as distinct from the rich and powerful...". In American history, the term most often refers to a political movement that existed around the turn of the century. (Most of the causes which that movement championed have long since been either accepted or rejected.) It also refers to presidents like Andrew Jackson and Theodore Roosevelt.

In recent years populism, for the most part, has been more a style than an ideology, and more a style of campaigning than government. It has always been the case that most candidates make some sort of effort to appear as though they represent the interests of "ordinary people." Today, nearly everybody in politics, from Jesse Jackson to Rush Limbaugh, is trying to do populism.

Nonetheless, advocates of policies which could be called "populist" are hard to find in our government. Even the most liberal congressmen have been amazed by the intensity of the recent Republican defense of a tax loophole which leverages them immensely rich, plagued by semi-progressive taxes here at home, to give up their citizenship and move. As Michael Kinsley said of these "new refugees," "These people... are like the Americans who went to Canada during the Vietnam War. They are fleeing the draft - of their wallets, in their bodies."1 It reminds me of the day, several years ago, when I heard on the news that Newt Gingrich had made a speech at a $25,000-per-couple GOP fund-raiser in which he angrily denied that Republicans were the "party of the rich." On the other side of the aisle, Clinton's political troubles, and those of his party, are at least partly a result of his failure to stick to a basic populist "New Democratic" philosophy.

Recently there appeared in the The New Republic an article entitled "For a New Nationalism: A Manifesto for America's Future," by John B. Judis and Michael Lind. It argued "the inadequacy of the ideologies of conservatism between liberals and 'conservatives' that we inherited from the cold war era."2 Many political scholars are of the same opinion, but what makes Judis and Lind different is that they offer new ideologies to replace them. One of these, which they mean "populism," is based on the conviction shared by populists and progressives - expressed most forcefully during this century by Theodore and Franklin Roosevelt, Harry Truman and Lyndon Johnson - that what government does must be judged by whether it benefits the great productive middle of our society."3

This seems to me to make sense, as far as it goes. The question is, how does one determine what will yield the most benefit to "the great productive middle of our society"? Judis and Lind cite NAFTA as an issue on which the populists opposed the "globalism" of the "Establishment" - yet the arguments in favor of NAFTA were that it would create jobs here, thus benefiting the "great productive middle." (Looking back, it seems not to have had a significant effect on our economy at all.) Also, how united is this group? Are Clinton, Limbaugh and Perot really talking to the same people? It is a little hard to believe.

According to an article in the Spring 1995 issue of Dissent, "...there have been two main currents in the populist heritage: an economic populism of the left, directed against businesses and financial elites and relatively tolerant of ethnic and racial differences; and a cultural populism of the right, directed against liberal elites and cultural minorities, and relatively intolerant of big business."4 Both of these brands of populism lack a key element: popularity. In America, where wealth has long been associated with success (and rightly so) there just isn't that much ill will towards "business and financial elites."

As for the other kind, the Bill of Rights and the Enlightenment values it expresses remain a constant obstacle to any antagonism of "cultural minorities" - so do, of course, the minorities themselves.

And what about all these issues that seem to be the most divisive - abortion, gun control, gay rights? According to Judis and Lind, "In the terms of 'culture war,' the conservatives seek to exploit the divisions within American society over issues such as abortion, homosexuality and illegal drugs."5 I have heard other populists make similar arguments - that social and cultural issues divide us too much, and should therefore be avoided. Is it really that simple? I was there three years ago when an abortion-rights march in D.C. drew half a million demonstrators. To my knowledge, there has never been, say, an anti-deficit march of comparable size.

Nor, surprisingly, is the "elite," the eternal foe of populists, any more united. The late Christopher Lasch admitted as much in his book, The Revolt of the Elites and the Betrayal of Democracy:

> "These groups constitute a 'new class' only in the sense that their livelihood rests not so much on the ownership of property as the manipulation of information and professional expertise. They embrace too wide a variety of occupations - brokers, bankers, real-estate promoters and developers, engineers, consultants of all kinds, systems analysts, scientists, doctors, publicists, publishers, editors, advertising executives, art directors, news-makers, entertainers, journalists, television producers and directors, artists, writers, university professors - to be described as a 'new class' or 'new ruling class.' Furthermore, they lack a common political outlook."6

You also want to underline that last sentence. It is the key to understanding this "elite." To pick two examples at random, the economic wizards who ruined the finances of Orange County and the cognoscenti who concocted the Smithsonian's Enola Gay exhibit would probably find, if they ever met, that they not only disagreed on basic issues, but had fundamentally different worldviews.

More importantly, you have probably already noticed that most of this discussion is taking place among people who could themselves be considered an "elite." The New Republic is not Sports Illustrated or Reader's Digest. Dissent's even Nuvoodoo than Time. Most of the magazines cited as sources in this column are meant for well-informed readers who are concerned about the world around them. If this group is not already an elite, it is fast becoming one. One symptom of this is the decline in voter turnout. The "revolution" of 1994 was one in which only 37% of the electorate took part - and that was a larger percentage than usual for midterm elections. I suspect that my column would probably be more widely read if I had spent more time this year focusing on the baseball strike or the Simpson trial.

Populism, as described by Judis and Lind, could be a force for good in American politics, if it can establish itself as a coherent philosophy. It would not, however, be enough. If we as a nation really intend to balance the budget, reduce the national debt to something comprehensible, clean up our cities and preserve the decline of the middle class, what will be needed will be unanimity, intellectual honesty, a willingness to compromise and, above all else, patience. It is the same as though these qualities are the very ones most obviously absent in the current political polity, that is no coincidence. The lack of them has helped bring us to this pass.

The New Republic's "Manifesto" also contained an expression of a related ideology termed "nationalism." Unless something else comes up, I will cover that next week.

1Kinsley, Michael, "Love It or Leave It," Time, 11/28/94.

2Judis & Lind, "For a New Nationalism," The New Republic, 3/27/95, p.19.

3Ibid., p.21.

4Wirtz, Sean, "Populism Redux," Dissent, Spring 1995, p.149.

5Judis & Lind, p.21.

6Lasch, "The Revolt of the Elites" (adapted from his book), Harper's, 11/94, p. 42. Ω

"Honor Board" from 2 sion or dismissal from the College. Students may be placed on disciplinary probation by action of the Honor Board, or the Dean of the College, or the Dean of Students. The terms of this probation is sent to the student's parents by the Office of Student Affairs."

2) The students are required to have an immediate drug evaluation to be followed up by drug counseling if deemed necessary.

4) Each of the students is required to submit a proposal for an 'ambitious' summer community service project before May 4, 1995. This project will be determined by the students with consultation from Student Affairs and then approved by the Honor Board. The community service project will have to be independently monitored. The students are further required to submit a report or presentation on their community service project by August 15, 1995. Their continued attendance at Washington College is dependent upon the successful completion of this project.

3) The Honor Board supports their suspension from College athletics.

The Board's student was found not guilty in relation to the Campus Policy Regarding Use of Narcotics. In determining guilt and penalty for each of the students involved, the votes were unanimously decided by a Board composed of four students and three faculty members.

Since the concerns that have arisen as a result of the case are focused upon the penalty, this letter will attempt to explain the reasoning behind the penalty outlined above. First, it is campus policy to call in the local authorities in all matters of illegal drug use. True to this policy, the Department of Public Safety notified the local authorities when the situation was confirmed as a violation of the campus narcotics policy. The local authorities have charged two of the students with three counts of possession. If these students are found guilty they will face possible penalties that include imprisonment and monetary fines. Also, if found guilty, these students will be unable to serve in government or legal fields in the future.

I state this since it helps to make clear what the Honor Board is responsible for and to address the notion that the students are 'getting off easy.' In effect, they face legal penalties in addition to the penalties listed above. The Honor Code at Washington College is an Honor system, not a legal system. The local authorities are also called in to deal with the aspects of Maryland law which this violation falls under. Since we are an Honor System, however, the Board dealt with the violation of our Honor Code. The violation is potentially damaging to the college's reputation and ultimately to our community as a perceived whole. The Honor Board recognized this fact when making its decision and made a conscientious effort to directly address the damage done to the reputation of the College and its community.

Second, I'd like to make the community aware of the cooperation the students showed for the Department of Public Safety, the local authorities, and the Honor Board as well as the Deans. All who had to deal with the students during the time between the violation on the night of March 31 and the case on April 4 were impressed by their demeanor. This became a large factor in the Board's determination of penalties.

Third, a character witness chose to speak before the Board and address the students' behavior as fellow hall residents. This character witness had no personal involvement in the case, but chose to step forward and present a view of the students and their situation. In the future, the Board hopes that this trend may continue. As members of our community, everyone has a responsibility to uphold our Honor System.

Finally, I'd like to stress the length and depth of the discussion. The Board spent a great amount of time making a fair decision to the penalty. The decision was not a light one. The initial penalty of dismissal or suspension was regarded and then unanimously decided against by all seven voting members of the Board, the reason for which I've attempted to outline above. The Board sought to make the penalty one of positive action as opposed to negative consequence. The penalties issued for this violation are in no way a general trend for the future, but are the result of specifics that made this case unique. I'd also like to address the various rumors that surround this case. While facts of the case are to be kept confidential, I feel it's necessary to state that there was absolutely no evidence to support any accusation of dealing.

-Reuben M. Stump, Honor Board Chair

The Goldstein Program in Public Affairs presents

Benefactor or Bully: How Other Countries View the United States

Robert A. Schadler, Former Director, International Visitors Program, U.S. Information Agency.
Hynson Lounge, Tuesday, April 18, 7:30 p.m.

International Studies
Spirit of Baltimore Dinner Dance Cruise

Friday, April 21

Departure 4 p.m. Limited space available Contact Alison Bergen as soon as possible at extension 7762

SGA Report

BY KATE MEAGHER

The SGA meeting of Tuesday, April 11, included the proposal of changes to the SGA constitution and an explanation of the Honor Board ruling that took place last week regarding allegations of drug possession.

Junior Class President Mark Reyero reported that Casey Time was a success, and voiced gratitude to those who came out for the campus beautification project. He said that while Washington College's Earth Day celebration did not turn out as well as he had expected (due to a disappointing turnout and an evening rainstorm), about $1000 were raised for a worthy cause not yet selected. Earth Day t-shirts are still available for $10 each.

Alicia Carberry announced that videotapes of graduation are available for $25 each. The videos will capture the entire commencement ceremony. Contact Carberry to order a videotape.

Sophomore Class President Christina Chiarchiaro reported on the status of the sophomore class-sponsored blood drive. The blood drive will take place on Tuesday, April 25 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Help is needed with recruiting donors and assistance at the canteen. Anyone willing to donate blood and / or time is encouraged to contact Christina through BlitzMail or at extension 8677.

SGA Vice-president Douglas Beckworth reported on the faculty meeting of Monday, April 3. The Faculty approved the proposed changes to the committee structure, and the proposed changes to the Board of Visitors and Governors for final approval on Saturday, April 22. Beckworth also said that at a meeting of Academic Council it was established that the concern that the new CNW freshman courses are taking away from the number of upper-level courses offered is unfounded. There are several more upper-level courses offered in the fall of 1995 than were offered in the fall of 1994.

Parliamentarian Corey Stottlemyer distributed a copy of the proposed amendments to the Student Government Association Constitution regarding attendance at SGA meetings. Under Article 4, Section 2, the attendance policy states that all senators who accumulate three unexcused absences will be asked to resign from the Senate.

An addition to Article 9 (Senate Rules and Procedures) is proposed stating, "If a member of the Senate or Executive Board is going to miss a meeting, the secretary must be informed prior to the meeting for the absence to count as an excused absence."

It is proposed that a section be added to Article 4 regarding academic probation. Section 5 would state the following:

"When a member of the Senate or the Executive Board has been on official probation for two sequential semesters, the Executive Board shall request the individual in question to resign their position in order to improve their academic standing. If the resignation is not forthcoming, the Senate must then vote on the impeachment and removal of that individual. The vote is determined by a simple majority."

The proposed changes will be voted on by the SGA at the next meeting.

Honor Board Chair Reuben Stump reported that the board heard a case involving alleged violation of the College's drug policy. Four students were brought before the board, and three were found guilty, while the other was found not guilty of the accusations. Stump said that some concern has been expressed as to the handling of the situation. He answers those concerns in a letter to the editor in this week's Elm. Ω

Administrative changes proposed: Brown, Likens meet with Scholz

William Denton, III

In a research project conducted during Spring Break, SGA senator Bob Brown investigated the impact of student opinion at colleges and universities similar to Washington College. After reporting his findings to the SGA, and using this new basis for comparison, Brown constructed a proposal designed to increase the influence of students on administrative policy. He and SGA President Elizabeth Likens discussed the proposal last week, and the two student representatives met with Dean Joachim Scholz on Tuesday.

The specifics of the proposal cannot be published as of yet, in its initial stages, due to the fact that the faculty has not yet seen it. Details of the plan are forthcoming, Ms. Elm.

In the words of Brown, "the proposal, for a large part, was very well received by Dr. Scholz. I was pleased with his overall response to what we've laid out. After reading the proposal, Dr. Scholz said he would take it to a few people, get feedback, and let us know. We'll meet again, perhaps, in a couple of weeks, to talk about what those people to whom he showed the proposal said, and any changes that need to be made."

"One thing that needs to be remembered," said Brown, "is that it's a long process." The recently occurring restructuring of the faculty committees had been in the works for several years before passing. Said Brown, "in the interest of eventual success, we're going to take our time with [the proposal] and be very patient and open-minded to what the faculty feels is necessary."

All parties involved seek improved communication between faculty and students with the plan. Cooperation will be necessary to push the proposal through, and, if enacted, it will further this cooperation by allowing students and faculty to work together in matters of administrative decisions. According to Brown, "we want the faculty's backing on this...with them, we hope to hammer out a deal that is equitable and agreeable to both parties, so that, when the final proposal is set, and ready to be reviewed by a higher power, we can say, 'the faculty and the students have worked together on this; we're behind this proposal.'"

The Dean of the college seems to show the same optimism that Brown does. Said Dr. Scholz, "It's an initiative that I encourage. I think student input can be improved in the areas which

"Votes" from 2

That's right baby, I'm talking about cooking this lazy college with the most pontificating, obscene, ridiculous protest of college politics ever conceived! I'm asking you to go to the polls, look and write my name on the ballot! That's right, don't be a mindless tool who merely checks the box of the only familiar name on the small white sheet of paper they provide for you! Write my name! Demand to be counted!

Why? Why should you vote for me? Am I just a glory-hungry young punk eager to play a practical joke on all the college higher-ups? Well, of course I am! And this is my chance to deliver the best punch line of your life!

So what's in it for you? Sure, you'll get a hearty laugh at all the clowns who actively spent time trying to be a politician, but what happens next? All right, I can understand your concerns, and for this reason and this reason alone I will state my position and the reason I have decided to toss my bid into the political fray.

I'm bored. That's right, bored. Bored out of my mind. Are you bored? I imagine you are. We're a lot alike, you and I. We just want to have a little fun. I want to get some bands to come and rock out at Washington College. I want a radio station to constantly broadcast the music we want to listen to. I want a big, huge circus to roll into town with elephants and trapeze artists and people who eat fire. I want entertainment.

I have spent the better part of a year actively working to get you, the students of Washington College, discounts! I was able to get reduced prices when I was a mere mortal working at the school newspaper. Imagine what I could do if elected Sophomore Class President! I'm the only candidate smart enough to wage a smear campaign against myself. I'm asking that you support the revolution. Demand to be entertained! Write my name on the ballot! Join me in my mindless quest for fun.

-Kevin Hoffman

"CNW" from 2

tured to everyone's advantage, it should not be necessary to water down the curriculum in order to keep anyone entertained. The sort of handholding condoned by classes intended to familiarize the student with the "college experience" is something which should not exist at the college level, since the "college experience" is a student's realization that sometimes he must learn things for himself, without formal or structured introduction.

Supposedly, TAFFY was formed in an effort to attract students to come to lege, and, more specifically, to keep freshmen from leaving after completing a year here. If the administration is concerned by the recent upswing in W.C.'s freshman attrition rate - mainly due to the fact that students found the curriculum especially distribution, to be "too hard" - they should look at the freshmen they have been admitting. According to a small posting that I noticed by the sink in the Bill Smith faculty lounge, Washington College's standards have become so low that last year the total number of students denied admission was only 47 out of 1046 applicants. For those of you who aren't math majors and have managed to avoid it entirely in your distribution, that's a 95.5% acceptance rate, down from what used to be a 75% acceptance rate only 4 to 5 years ago. Apparently, the administration has been so eager for expansion that they have been willing to admit anything human with a GED.

To me, all this indicates that I am about to graduate from a college that shows strong signs of desperation. Don't get me wrong: although I may be making some harsh statements, I am not in any way trying to undermine the College. Washington College has done a lot for me, and, believe it or not, I am grateful. I feel that the education I have obtained here is valuable, and I have a lot of respect for the majority of the faculty and staff here. However, I am leaving W.C. during a period of major transition; and I have a genuine fear that although the College is taking much-needed steps towards change, those steps are in the wrong direction. I don't want my BA degree to become worthless in the future. I don't know what this letter can do to save it. I do, however, want to assure myself that I have made some sort of feeble attempt. In this impulse, perhaps I have something in common with TAFFY supporters.

-Katie Degentesh

Higher Learning
the movie

April 14, 15 & 16, 8 p.m., Student Center

Sponsored by Student Activities

The William James Forum presents: a talk by Father John Dear, S.J.

The Sacrament of Civil Disobedience

co-sponsored by the Newman Club and Sacred Heart Church
Thursday, April 20, 7:30 p.m.
Sophie Kerr Room of Miller Library

Andy's

Friday, April 14
Margo Hennebach
Accomplished pianist, guitarist, Oberlin graduate
Saturday, April 15
Bird Dog and the Roadkings
Swing your partner in for an evening of country-rockabilly-birdie-dancing!
Thursday, April 20
Hue Price
Originals & acoustic alternative ... Pearl Jam, Nirvana ... no cover charge

c.r.u.d.

creative ranting under duress.

by Perry Schatz

Last Tuesday GALA sponsored "jeans day" in celebration of Gay Pride Month. It was a quiet day; those who wanted to, wore jeans and those who were opposed to the idea, didn't. Some, whether supporters or not, simply forgot and no calamity occurred, nobody was hassled (to my knowledge, at least) and nobody was judged. There were no denim clad fleet marching down the cater walk and nobody expected there to be.

I was pretty appalled to hear that such a low key, ambiguous demonstration inspired someone to write on one of the dry erase boards of second floor Minta Martin, "Support being straight! Wear a skirt!" Now obviously this wasn't the flowering of a new social movement to gain recognition for the heterosexual community, just happening to fall on April 4, "jeans day"; it was a blatant attempt to use peer pressure to spread anti-gay sentiments.

To the perpetrator: Not only was this incident appalling, but it was completely self righteous as well. Supposing one of your hallmates doesn't agree with your views. Suppose for a second (if you can) that one of your hallmates is homosexual. I wonder if people who act on these impulses have ever thought about who they might be hurting. Anybody could be gay. A person's sexuality isn't worn about their body like the color of their skin or the shade of their eyes. It isn't a disease that makes people look grotesque or different or ugly. Your best friend could be gay. You may have a professor that is gay. Even somebody's mother or father could be gay.

It's sad enough that in this country people have to defend their private, personal lives in order to receive equal treatment. But the realization that this type of prejudice and social pressure exists so outrageously on a college campus is truly disheartening. As young people it would seem more beneficial to support each other and celebrate our differences, rather than alienate each other.

For those on campus that are antigay, "jeans day" was a perfect opportunity to show your opinion in a constructive way. Come to a GALA meeting, write a CRUD, talk on Pacerforum, do something that shows you really do at least care about your own opinion. Otherwise, it all just looks like a load of homophobic garbage. If someone's to do it go behind your classmates backs and humiliate them with your signs or snickers or fag jokes, you must not be too concerned with the issue at all.

Backhanded opposition, the kind that goes silently along claiming no face or name for its deeds, is a really immature way of getting your point across. "Jeans day" wasn't the only issue at hand. By ostracizing people in that way, you are ostracizing humanity. You are saying that there is no room here for differences— that this campus is too small minded to accept anything other than what you are and what you feel the "norm" is.

I feel the opposite. I think this campus is too small for such prejudice. Maybe we should realize that the world isn't as small as we think it is.

LOYOLA

Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

Campus Voices

Question by Sarah Bell

Photos by Debra Spence

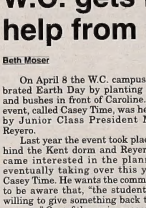
This week's question: If you found an Easter egg and opened it up, what would you find inside?

A thesis chapter – it's due right after Easter.

Liza Whayland
Junior

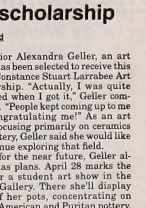
A pack of Marlboro Lights.

Heather Harper
Junior



In the words of the great pharaoh Benjamin T. Hinkle, "If it's legal, I don't want what's inside.

Matt Plum
Sophomore



Easter candy, or a tiny rock.

Chris Calhoun
Sophomore

I don't eat Easter eggs. I'm Jewish. What a stressful question for me.

Jen Friedman
Junior

Dr. Ford.

Todd Dunn,
Junior

W.C. gets by with a little help from its friends

Beth Moser

On April 8 the W.C. campus celebrated Earth Day by planting trees and bushes in front of Caroline. This event, called Casey Time, was headed by Junior Class President Mark Reyero.

Last year the event took place behind the Kent dorm and Reyero became interested in the planning, eventually taking over this year's Casey Time. He wants the community to be aware that, "the students are willing to give something back to the campus." One of the major reasons for planting the fifteen to twenty trees and bushes near Caroline is to brighten up the area. As the student body knows, Caroline is not exactly a palatial area, but the plants have definitely improved the situation and it is greatly appreciated.

The idea of Casey Time originated with Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Casey who asked the students to give something in return for the gifts they had donated to the school. The committee in charge looked around and found that Tom Herr and Anthony's Landscaping were willing to sell the trees and shrubs at wholesale cost. This bill was covered by the Alumni Counsel with special thanks going to Brooke Franke, Class of '92 for her efforts.

There were numerous students and school officials present at Casey Time. There were 35 to 40 students willing to help, with the Phi Delt's, Theta's, KA's, and the Sig's represented. The officials included: Ed Athey, the Alumni Council President; Pat Trams, the helpful Alumni Coordinator; Reid Raudenbush, the Head of Buildings and Grounds; President Toll, Chris Havemeyer, Members of the Board of Visitors and Governors, Tom Herr, Brooke Franke, and other welcomed alumni.

Though little doubt this event can be considered a complete success. Reyero proudly states, "I think in two hours we changed that place around 110%. The alumni loved it and Mrs. Casey called me to not only thank me, but everyone that helped out!" The optimistic response to this event has almost guaranteed Casey Time to be a tradition and Reyero plans to be here for the third one. Hopefully more will follow.

This dedicated student is already considering ideas for next year and believes that anyone who becomes involved has fun and walks away with a feeling of pride. So, look around as you travel the paths of the campus and come up with suggestions for future sites where Casey Time can be held. Ω

Geller receives art scholarship

Jen Ward

Senior Alexandra Geller, an art major, has been selected to receive this year's Constance Stuart Larrabee Art Scholarship. "Actually, I was quite surprised when I got it," Geller commented. "People kept coming up to me and congratulating me!" As an art major focusing primarily on ceramics and pottery, Geller said she would like to continue exploring that field.

As for the near future, Geller already has plans. April 28 marks the date for a student art show in the Tawes Gallery. There she'll display some of her pots, concentrating on Native American and Puritan pottery. And recently, she has learned of a possible apprenticeship opportunity after graduation. "That's the best thing for me right now," said Geller. Geller's considering graduate school next winter for an MFA degree. Eventually, she'd like to open up a pottery shop, selling her own hand-made pottery. "But that's really long-term," she said.

Reflecting on her years at W.C., Geller says of Susan Tessum, Art Professor: "She really taught me the fundamentals of pottery. She got me started, developed my appreciation for pottery." And the college's art studio? "[It's] one of the best places...We're really lucky to have it."

According to the press release, "The $2,500 scholarship was funded by the Washington College Friends of the Arts this January in honor of [Constance Stuart] Larrabee..." Currently living in Chestertown, Mrs. Larrabee is "a renowned photographer who...made her mark recording the images of World War II and the people of her homeland, South Africa."

On the scholarship, Geller remarks, "It's really amazing, actually. I'm grateful—it really helped me out with school. [It's an] honor; I'm lucky that I got it. It'll look really good on my resume one day—and you can quote me on that!" Ω

The Drama Department presents Shakespeare's

Hamlet

directed by Professor Dale Daigle

Tawes Theatre, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, April 20, 21, and 22, at 8 p.m.

A taste of the past:

Prof. Richard Striner publishes book on art deco

Sarah Bell

"Once can feel the messages of power, technology, exotica, and elegance shimmering down from the ziggurat atop the skyline," wrote Dr. Richard Striner in his book Art Deco.

Striner is a professor of history at Washington College and has previously published a book on the art deco of Washington, D.C. with the help of Swiss architect, Hans Wirz.

His latest book, Art Deco, focuses on the 20's and 30's. It "opens the doors into this jazzy, streamlined world by exploring the interwar era -its architecture, furnishings, fashions, arts, designers, and key buildings." Though it is only about as big as a pocket size dictionary, Striner's book is filled with beautiful black and white photographs ranging from The Golden Gate Bridge to Gulf Oil service stations. Its pages include information on art deco during the Jazz Age and its influences on furnishings and the interiors of buildings and houses.

What exactly is art deco?

"Art Deco was not coined as a phrase until the 60's. If you talked about art deco in the 20's, people would have no idea what it meant. It is a cluster of design trends that expressed certain powerful moods of the 20's, 30's, and 40's," said Striner. "It was a very rich and complicated influential design that flourished during the first and second world wars, resulting from different influences. These influences included modernism, various forms of non-western design in Europe and America and classical Greco-roman."

Striner has been haunted by the 20's and 30's since he was in college.

"I was very struck by the idea that art deco sought to harmonize the modern visual design with traditionalism. It could be extremely flamboyant and jazzy but it also could be muted."

Striner was drawn to the product of the 20's and 30's and he even restored a 1931 vintage automobile while he was in college.

"It took me five years because I had no money, being a college kid," Striner explained.

Throughout Striner's office are remants of the 20's and 30's. There is a framed "Saturday Evening Post" hanging next to a round orange sign displaying the word "Gulf" in blue lettering. Striner shelves are filled with artifacts ranging from a packet of Barking Dog Smoking Mixture to a box of Peerless Rubber Typewriter Keys.

Striner is also interested in the historic preservation of art deco buildings. He was head of The Art Deco Society in Washington, D.C. for ten years. One of the society's projects was trying to save the Greyhound bus terminal in D.C.

Striner is very excited about his book and has seemed to have found a real passion for something in his life - art deco. He describes art deco quite beautifully when he exclaimed that "it is a very rich and delightful design whose elegance is like that of Ginger Rogers and Fred Astaire." Ω

The College may be publishing – mushrooms?

Mindie Kaplan

John Haines, an adjunct professor at Union College in New York and the author of more than 50 articles, is a research scientist trained to identify fungi. He was also the speaker at a lecture about Mary Banning, a relatively unknown artist and friend of Maryland mushrooms.

Haines began his lecture by telling the listeners a little about himself. He works on mold and poisonous mushrooms. "You can learn a lot about life and biology by studying mushrooms!," Currently, he is studying compost and sick building syndrome.

Haines discovered the work of Mary Banning in the form of a neglected manuscript that had been lying in a drawer for probably about a hundred years. The museum had been founded in 1836 to survey the areas opened up by the Eric Canal. In 1969, Haines joined the museum. The mycologist he succeeded, Charles Peck, had been a correspondent of Mary Banning and both Peck and his friend were pioneers of modern mycology.

The main purpose of his trip to the college concerned Mary Banning's book, a beautiful manuscript contain 175 watercolors of mushrooms and a manuscript of delightful vignettes that "were the word equivalent of those pictures" Haines explained, "they were folksy, bright, and wonderful." The stories told about moments of her life in the 1870's that the mushrooms reminded her of. Her prose is full of antiseneces like, "Baltimore, a place where the works of man are cluttered round and the works of God are hardly found."

Mary Banning was born in 1822 in St. Michaels, Talbot county, the youngest of nine children. She was completely devoted to the study of mushrooms. She even bought a professional microscope. "Not even all physicians had a microscope in the 1860s," Haines pointed out. It was also difficult for a woman to collect mushrooms back then. Banning wrote about having to brave "bad dogs, rattlesnakes, and tramps." Her only friend "in the debatable world of mushrooms," she wrote, was Dr. Peck. The mushrooms themselves caused other difficulties. Haines read one of her stories dealing with her collection of a "phallus" mushroom. It smelled terribly, but although "the objection, able smell increased, [Banning] was determined to brave the worst."

1889 marked the end of her career making a book of Maryland fungi. She had 170 drawings from 20 years of work. In 1889 she sent the book to Dr. Peck where it remained in a drawer until Haines discovered it. Haines called her a "romantic comforted and nourished by nature." Of her stories Haines remarked, "That's really Victorian language, but it's pretty Zen." He ended the lecture by saying, "The purpose of any visit here is to help Mary get that book published." Ω

The Computing Center • Macintosh PC • The Internet • Telnet • Bulletin Board

Net Surfing

by Mindie Kaplan

Dungeon • MUD • Address • Newsgroup • Gopher • Archie • Veronica • Jughead • Shell • Account • alt.barney.dinosaur.die.die.die • Pacer • Forum • BlitzMail • LegendMud • Broadcast

The World Wide Web (WWW) is a wonderful place for both work and play, no matter what your interests or needs are. WWW is made up of hypertext technology. Each "Home Page" is like a page in a book, but they can be read in any order. Like a spider web, it has strands running in every direction. This edition of NetSurfing contains just a few of the "links" or connections I've found. Each of these pages is a new starting place for informative and entertaining searches. The best program to use for this is Netscape. To open any of these connections, simply click on the icon "open," enter the address, and click on "okay."

The Fun and Games can start out with the MUD List (gopher://spinaltap.micro.umn.edu/11/fun/games/muds/links). This connection contains links to MUDs (including diku, lp, mare, moo, muck, mug, muse, mush, merc, talker, and TinyMud), BBS sites, commercial services, gophers, and IRC chat.

One of the frequent complaints I have is the isolation from movies. While you can't watch a movie on the net (yet), you can browse movie reviews at the Mirror Movie Guide (http://mirror.wwa.com/mirror/reviews/movies/guide.htr). While they specialize in movies found at the video store, rather than the box office, this is a great place to discover whether that movie you've been thinking of renting is really worth your valuable time (and money). If nothing short of the big screen will do, the Mirror Movie Guide provides links at the bottom of their web page to three other sites which handle current movie reviews.

MTV fans can find listings of special shows on the Welcome to MTV home page (http://mtv.com/index.html). Music lovers will also enjoy The Ultimate Band List (http://american.recordings.com/wwwofmusic/ubl/html). You can also contribute to the listings on your favorite band or add a new card about your own new band. The index can be searched by both name and musical category.

There are also plenty of books to be found on the Web. Faster than inter-library loan and less expensive than the bookstore, the listings of complete texts on the net is growing by leaps and bounds. For literature lovers, there you can find the complete works of Shakespeare at the Shakespeare Homepage (http://the-tech.mit.edu/shakespeare/works.html). The University of Pennsylvania is a virtual treasure trove of on-line books. By selecting gopher://ccat.sas.upenn.edu: 70/11/archive you can reach religious texts, classical texts, historical documents, modern poetry, Conrad, Milton, Shelley's Frankenstein, and Sophocles (to name just a few). Is the Riverside Shakespeare too expensive for your tastes? The complete edition is online at U. Penn!

The Web's practical uses range from the common to the obscure. One unusual link provided me with more information about growing things then I could use in a lifetime. Internet resources for the gardener are found at http://mirror.wwa.com/mirror/garden/spdrsweb.htm. The Garden Spider's Web contains information about basic botany, composting, diseases and pests that prey on plants, and FAQ (frequently asked questions) on herbs, roses, and other types of plants. You'll also find searchable indexes on all kinds of gardening information.

Sports lovers will love the Sports section of Yahoo (http://www.yahoo.com/entertainment/) which provides information on everything from Auto Racing and Badminton to Body Building and Basketball. Pre-med students will love the Health section (http://www.digimark.net/wow/health/index.html) of the Web of Wonder. It contains information on everything from AIDS and exercise to medicine, nursing, and veteranarian topics. For those of us who don't want to be on the unemployment payroll when we graduate, there's SkiJiSearch (http://www.internet-is.com/skilisearch/in-gm.html) which boasts resources for career networking and database recruiting service connecting experienced professionals with organizations that need their talents." Of course, one can't forget the many on-line magazines. The Welcome to ZD Net homepage (http://www.ziff.com) provides articles from many computing magazines including PC Magazine and MacUser. Articles from Time, Money, and People Magazine (all owned by Time Life) can be found at http://www.timeinc.com.

While all these places serve a variety of interests, there are many other places which contain dozens of links to topics you may never have dreamed of. One of the best places to look for interesting stuff is SoftLord's Mega Cool Links Page (http://www.interport.net/~softlord/kewllinks.html). The Web of Wonder and other fascinating places can be found there as well as interactive games, graphics, sound files, and "adult" sites dealing with les/bi/gay issues, safer sex, and other grownup issues. If you're looking for something specific, the Internet Searching page (http://www.grfn.org/~gopher/search.html) has a wide variety of search programs to choose from (including WebCrawler, WWWWorm, Archie, Veronica, and Wais). If it's on the net, you should be able to find it using one of these programs. For example, a net search on "peanut butter" turned up a link called "How to Roast Peanuts" and "Interesting Peanut Facts." A search on "jelly" turned up the Jelly Belly Homepage (you know, those wonderful gems they sell in the Cove). Sorry, for some reason I have the munchies. Enjoy and let me know what fun and helpful Web pages you find!

Submit to Menagerie

poetry, short fiction, short non-fiction, art, lyrics, photography, essays, plays submissions due to Erika Wilson or Chris Watkins by April 15, 1995

BLOOD DRIVE

TUESDAY, APRIL 25

Those who wish to donate can sign up in the dining hall. If you have any questions or would like to help please contact: Chris Chiarchiaro through BlitzMail or x8677

Edit Broadsides

Any senior wishing to be an editor of the Broadsides poetry series next year should send a letter of interest to Professor Kathy Wagner via campus mail by Monday, April 17.

Clothing and gender

Fessler discusses Victorian clothing metaphors

Mindie Kaplan

On Monday, April 10, Dr. Audrey Fessler gave a lecture entitled Clothing and the Gendered Self in Sarah Grand's Novels. She read a paper she had written on Grand's books, a paper that she may later turn into a book.

Sarah Grand wrote "New Women" novels during the Victorian era. They were called that because within them writers worked out new patters for women's lives and behavior. They dealt with topics like syphilis, the physical and mental abuse of women, and the consequences of not teaching women about their bodies. Grand's first work was called "My Dear Little Feet" and harangued women about their poor treatment of their feet. The only good thing that came out of the work, according to Fessler, was that it brought Grand to the attention of Harburton. Harburton invited the writer to join the Rational Dress Society and become and executive member.

Within her novels, Grand uses clothing metaphors for social and psychological circumscription of women. Loose clothing symbolized the social and psychological liberation of women from male dominance. In her book The Heavenly Twins, clothing is the sole marker of gender. The two twins, Angelica (female) and Diablo (male) "scramble their very identities." Angelica changes her nature and gender with her clothing. When she masquerades as her brother, she actually thinks, feels, and acts like a boy. As Grand writes, Angelica the male becomes "a genuine boy." The two twins frequently exchanged clothes for parties and participated as members of the opposite sex.

Angelica is far from the delicate angel her name implies. At one point Grand writes that Angelica said, "Marry me,' she said, stamping her foot, 'and let me do what I like.'" She finds herself unable to excel in the typical feminine education and convinces her brother's tutor to teach her instead. Her brother is much the same way. Unable to learn the proper lessons taught to boys, he prefers to learn those which were supposed to have been taught to Angelica.

Within the text, Grand demonstrates what Fessler termed the Victorian male's "inability to see beyond the superficial trappings." The character named Vaintemple knows Angelica in both male and female guise. In the latter, the "boy" and the "girl" as "essentially different beings" although the reader is aware that Angelica behaves in exactly the same way in both settings. When Vaintemple learns the truth, he is "psychologically shattered and melodramatically dies." Angelica herself attempts suicide when she realizes that society will not allow her to be a non-gendered being.

Fessler presented a new interpretation of the ending of the novel, where Angelica becomes reconciled to her husband and acts as the more traditional woman, ceasing her cross-dressing. Fessler believes that "wifehood becomes another form of costume-wearing. Angelica uses her husband as a different "set of clothes." She convinces him to give her a virtual political voice by reading some of her arguments to the political body.

The Heavenly Twins ends with Angelica's husband questioning a part of one of her speeches. She shoots down his point and her argument stands, in spite of the fact that she is being the passionate, devoted Victorian wife.

Fessler concluded her lecture by saying that gender differences were in the "socially designed eyes" of the beholder. Perhaps the most amusing part of this lecture occurred during the question-and-answer session. Dr. Brien asked Fessler about Grand's having been the Mayor of Beth. Fessler was amazed at his knowledge, saying, "I can't believe it! This is the first time in my LIFE someone has known this. How did you know that?" Brien brought down the house by admitting to having read it off of the back of one of the books Fessler had passed around at the beginning of the lecture.

A second question brought up a kiss Fessler had mentioned earlier. Fessler responded that one shouldn't read the entire 900-some page novel just for the kiss.

"That kiss," she said, "is pretty bland. 'Angelica went and kissed her husband passionately.' Period. That's it." Apparently, even with the cross-dressing twins, they are "almost sexless creatures" and try to avoid sexual contact altogether. Ω

"Litrenta" from 1

actual renovation was conducted during the break between semesters in December, leaving the contractors only four weeks to complete the bulk of the project. "We had to work around the class schedule because [the lecture hall] is so busy. Up until the dedication, our painters would sneak over there right at 7:30 in the morning and get a little bit of touch-up painting done."

The 100-plus seat lecture hall was dedicated on Saturday, April 8. Four speakers were featured at the ceremony.

Tod Hall spoke on the students' behalf, thanking the Litrentas for their support, and talking about the physical improvements in the facility.

Dr. Juan Lin, Physics Department Chair, spoke on the faculty's behalf, thanking the Litrentas and speaking about the technological advances added to the lecture hall.

Dr. Joachim Scholz, Provost of the college, spoke as well, noting that the adjacent to Central Services. An alternative approach would be to keep the Computing Center in Ferguson Hall and shift Central Services to that building."

"Daly" from 1

Some of the faculty members currently housed in Smith Hall will be relocated to Daly, and it is also planned to "try and move a good portion of the faculty that are presently in Ferguson out of Ferguson, to get them closer to students ... enhancing the interaction among students and faculty."

A main driving force behind the Daly Project is a desire to improve the opportunities for interaction between students and faculty, to "bring faculty offices into closer connection with the classrooms in which they teach."

Funding for the Daly project began in February of 1992, with a million-dollar gift from Ken and Dorothy Daly. Since then, the college has been raising other funds. The state of Maryland employs a grant program, in which the government provides matching funds to private colleges and universities for capital construction projects. The matching grant will provide 49% of the construction cost for the building. "But," said Holt, "the design for Daly Hall outpaced our ability to raise funds to support it. That's what led to the redesign of the building."

If the Board of Visitors and Governors approves the recommendation of Daly Hall's construction, a likely plan of action is to solicit builders for middle bids on design and the construction. Since Daly Hall is not a particularly complex structure, arranging builders to handle the facility's design is not expected to adversely affect the design, and, in addition, handling the construction in this manner will most likely cause the process to take a year less time than it would have if handled by architects in tandem with builders.

The revised approach for the structure will go before the Board for approval next Friday and Saturday, April 21 and 22. Said Holt, "we are ready to move aggressively and have it built by next year." Ω

The Departments of Business Management, Economics, and International Studies present

Environmental Conflicts and International Business Consulting

A talk by Albert Massoni, President, Technical Support Services. International House Lounge., Wednesday, April 19, 7:30 p.m.

We Proudly Serve STARBUCKS COFFEE

00 LA LATTES!

- Snickers
- Spicy Cinnamon Mocha
- Toasted Almond
- Hazelnut Truffle Latte
- Thunder Thighs
- Irish Nut
- Mud Slide
- Steamed Moo

10% discount with student ID

the Cellar
coffee bar & bakery

NOW OPEN DOWNSTAIRS AT THE IMPERIAL HOTEL 778-5600

Stroll down WINE ALLEY

Fill Your Easter Basket With Great Wine!

DeLoach - Sonoma
White Zinfandel	$7.50
Gewurztraminer	$7.50
Pinot Blanc	$8.50
Cabernet Sauvignon	$11.50
Chardonnay	$14.00
Domaine Chandon - Napa
Carneros Blanc de Noir	$12.00
Napa Valley Brut	$12.00
Chandon Reserve	$17.75
Sonoma Cutrer Chardonnay	$12.00
Pine Ridge Chenin Blanc	$6.00
Far Niente - Napa
Chardonnay	$24.75
Cabernet	$32.50

Washington College

Staff Profile

Marie Davis is Barbara Thompson's replacement in the business office. She has only been working as bookkeeping and payroll clerk for one month, so things are still pretty new to her. She likes her job so far and finds that the people are nice and very helpful.

Davis lives in Cambridge with her husband Rob and her 12-year-old son Robert. She found out about this job through The Star Democrat.

"I still have a lot to learn. There wasn't a lot of time for me to work with Barbara before she left but I learned enough from her to get started," said Davis.

Davis had been doing accounts receivable in her jobs before. She is now working on the other side of the fence.

"It's a new experience. I have a lot to learn," said Davis.

In her free time, Davis raises and shows Chihuahuas. She has three champion dogs and hopes to raise more. She travels a lot with the dogs, going from one show to the next. The farthest she has been is Raleigh, North Carolina.

When I asked her if her husband comes with her for support, she responded, "No ... he stays home and watches the other dogs."

Good luck to you Marie Davis in learning the ropes here at Washington College. I'm sure you will do the job of "bookkeeping and pay roll clerk" justice.

Class Officer Candidate Essays

Elections for class officers will take place on Wednesday, April 19, 1995. Students may vote for those running for positions in their class. These students submitted essays to The Elm to demonstrate their qualifications and motivation for running for office.

Tara McKee

Candidate for Sophomore Class Vice-president

I signed for my petition on the first day they were available. I thought I should start campaigning early. I thought there would be a ton of people running. I found out I was dead wrong. I wanted to run for vice-president of the Sophomore class for the thrill of the race, to see how I matched up against other interested students, and to see how the government here at Washington College operated. It is disappointing to me to uncover this lack of interest in how, we as the Sophomore class will be represented. Either you, my fellow classmates have overwhelming confidence in me, or you just don't care. I would hope that the reason more people are not running for this and other offices is a result of lack of time, and too many prior responsibilities. I'll follow that thought with some encouraging news. I too feel the pressures of college and often wonder if all the stress and lack of sleep is really worth it. What keeps me going and motivated is the never ending road of risks that I face everyday. I figure that if I were to crumble under this increasing weight of maturity, I would be passing up an incredible opportunity. I'm running for office to get involved, to meet the hundreds of different faces here at Washington. I only have four years to make a difference, to speak up for what I believe in, and to speak out against what I think is wrong. In running for this office I am running the risk of losing. I'll take the challenge. I believe it's worth it. Winning this office will provide you with the opportunity to speak your opinions and have your voice heard. Basically, by electing me as your vice-president, you in a sense fill this position as well, but without having to do any of the dirty work. I can't think of a better proposition, all it will cost you is the time it takes to vote.

Steve Dashiell,

Candidate for Senior Class Secretary

My name is Steve Dashiell and I am running for the office of Secretary of the Senior Class. You probably remember my name from my bid to run for the office of SGA Secretary. Well, I haven't given up yet, and I don't see one last try as hurting very much. In my three years at Washington College, I have been a very active person in the community. To provide you with the short list, which demonstrates my various administrative qualifications, I have been Parliamentarian of the Dale Adams Heritage Exchange, Secretary of Phi Delta Theta, Secretary of the Interfraternity Council, Administrative Vice-President of Newman Club, and Secretary of Club Lacrosse and Tennis. I am hoping that this demonstrates that I have some experience in the field of organization and administration, two concepts I hold very high in life.

I have also attempted to stay very attached to the Class of '96. Last year I was elected to the office of Junior Class Treasurer under Mark's presidency. We both realized that because of past actions of the class, we were in debt. Instead of enacting fundraisers during the Junior year, the plan is to have an active Senior year, where we work hand in hand with other organizations to raise funds. As a class officer, I was honored to work with Mark on the Casey Time and Earth day events. In the absence of the Junior Class Secretary, I took over most of that offices responsibilities.

Believe it or not, I do have a platform for Senior Class Secretary. I believe the office should work closer with the President of the Senior Class to get things done for the coming Commencement. A Senior Class Secretary should be writing letters to parents, letting them know how much work SGA, the Senior Class, and their children are doing to plan for this special day. A Senior Class Secretary should be keeping excellent notes on meetings, which should happen at least twice monthly. A Senior Class Secretary should keep the President on his toes, and constantly inform him of necessary facts. What I would then promise as a candidate is a better method of communication. I have proposed the idea of a Senior Newsletter, so that the whole class is always apprised of the search for Commencement speakers, fundraisers, minutes of meetings, and campus events important for Seniors. I would think that the Secretary, as chief administrator to the President, should have his ear to the populace.

Most importantly, I believe the Senior Class Secretary should be the individual beginning some sort of alumni organization. The Secretary can provide the office of Alumni Affairs with valuable assistance that should not be denied. I would like to make a Senior Directory, which gives the names, addresses, and post-undergraduate plans of all Seniors, to be handed out prior to Commencement.

All of the above I would gladly do out of honor and respect for the class of 1996. What I ask for is your vote on election day. Vote for experience … vote Steve Dashiell for Senior Class Secretary.

Any graduating senior who would like to read (fiction, poetry, drama) in this year's annual

Senior Reading,

to be held on Sunday, April 30, should submit his or her name to Professor Kathy Wagner by Monday, April 17.

The McLain Program in Environmental Studies presents

Conservation Science in Latin America

a talk by Dr. Alejandro Grajal, Director, Latin American Program, The Wildlife Conservation Society.

Dunning Lecture Hall, Thursday, April 20, 7:30 p.m.

Dani Heath

Candidate for Junior Class President

My name is Dani Heath and I am running for Junior Class President. This past year I served as Sophomore Class Treasurer, and I would like to take a more active role next year by being elected president. I feel that with the experience I have from this year, working side by side with Leti and Chris to accomplish all that we did, and with some new ideas for next year, including a new approach to some old ideas. Chris and I would like to use this experience and new ideas to bring some new things to the Class of 1997, as well as to the Washington College community.

I am a chemistry major, and I participate in many on-campus activities. I am a member of the varsity softball team, and I have two jobs on campus, including working at the Cove and giving tours for Admissions. I am also involved in Zeta Tau Alpha, and am the Secretary of the Panhellenic Council at Washington College. I worked to achieve my goals as well as the goals of the group with whom I am working. I feel that by electing me president of the Junior class, you are not only giving me an opportunity to show what I can do, but you are giving the whole class and the whole college the opportunity to show what they can do.

Remember next Wednesday to vote for Dani Heath, for President of the Junior Class. Go for experience.

Mark Reyero,

Candidate for Senior Class President

Once again I am writing another article for The Elm about an SGA position that I am running for. Since my run at SGA President in early March I have kept quite busy as the current Class of '96 President. This past weekend culminated months of this hectic planning Saturday, April 8. Events of the day once again sponsored "Casey Time." It was a wonderful success! We began by dedicating the new Elm in front of the Flag Pole. As Washington College continues to grow and strengthen, so will this lovely symbol of our community here at Washington College. Following the dedication, my fellow students and I proceeded across 213 to Caroline House to continue that spirit in the name of the Casey Family. A few hours of volunteer work helped transform this once barren area of campus into a thing of beauty. At the conclusion of Casey Time, I hopped into my roommate's Jeep and sped on down to Wilmer Park to finish setting up for Earth Day. Although it did not go as well as planned (thanks a little to Mother Nature) I both hope and believe everyone had an enjoyable time.

Now, the class of '96 approaches our final year at Washington College. I want this to be my best year at WAC. I want to be to everyone's best year at WAC. And, I want to play an important part in making this reality. Traditionally, the role of the Senior Class President is to assist in the search for a commencement speaker. However, I want to take the experiences that I have learned through leading two Casey Time projects and Earth Day and expand the role of the Senior Class President beyond looking for a commencement speaker. I have envisioned two new projects for our class that would tie together this experience and dedication.

The first idea came to me last year when I spent graduation weekend in Chestertown. Graduation weekend will be our last chance for the Class of 1996 to be together one final time. Although there were plenty of parties that weekend, there seemed to lack one all encompassing Senior Class Party. I would like to do just that. However, this will cost funds. I would like to start a Senior Class Fund. The fund would work in this fashion: I would ask each student or parents to donate a dollar a week to this fund. At approximately forty weeks an academic year, that would be forty dollars a student. Multiply that $40 by 250 students, our class would have $10,000 for graduation weekend. With that money I would also like to donate a gift on behalf of the Class of 1996 to Washington College. The other idea I have thought of for the Class of '96 has grown out of my involvement with Earth Day. As a fund-raiser I would like to hold a Bluegrass Festival in the Fall. Called the "Harvest Fest" this could be an "Earth Day" type event for the fall semester with bluegrass bands (something different for Washington College). I can apply the experience I gained from what did and did not go well with this year's Earth Day Festival to this "Harvest Fest". Any money that the class raises from the event can also go toward our Senior Class Fund.

Besides my role as Senior Class President, I will continue to remain as one of the more vocal and active voting members of the SGA. I pledge to continue to fight for issues concerning us, the students, such as reform of the hiring and firing process of faculty at Washington College. Currently, we students have comparatively little say in this process as compared with schools of comparable size. This semester, the new Executive Board of the SGA as initiated steps toward improving this process and I hope to continue my involvement with this and other issues. However, my involvement and my ideas hinge upon your vote on Wednesday, April 19.

Safe Sex Dance
sponsored by the Peer Educators

Student Center
Saturday, April 22, 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.

A DJ from MC Services in Baltimore will be playing all of your favorite songs. There will be prizes. Come and try to win some. The cost is $2 per person. We hope to see you all there.

Dropped A Whole Degree

Aaron Blake

Mad Season: Alice in Chains meets Pearl Jam

Okay, this review will cover a band
g. I doubt many of you have heard urprise): Mad Season. However, have probably heard of its mem-
. Mike McCready, Layne Staley,
ert Martin, and John Baker. Yes, is another of those infamous ple side-bands. I'd also like to take time to explore the phenomenon ide-bands, and why they tend to be er than the members' main bands.
I definitely consider Above to be er than the albums by Pearl Jam Alice in Chains (with the possible eption of Sap and the definite ex-sion of Ten). Mad Season is genermuch mellower than either Alice hains or Pearl Jam. The main rea-for the difference in sounds is that of the members who are in Mad son do not generally write the gs for either of their main bands.
st of the songs for Alice in Chains written by guitarist Jerry drell, and most Pearl Jam songs n life as a Stone Gossard riff. Mad son allows us to get a glimpse of songwriting talents of those peogle from these fine bands. And we talking massive, massive talent here.

The songs on Above are melodic soothing...for the most part, any-g ("I Don't Know anything" sounds like an Alice in Chains song, but s tuneful). Layne Staley's vocals Above are reminiscent of those on much more pleasant to listen to on Facelift or Dirt, although the se on "Lifeless Dead" finds Staley going into the same drone he used those two albums. The only thing at Staley is that his voice makes want to listen to it. When I listen his album, what he is saying is ly as intriguing as how he sings it.
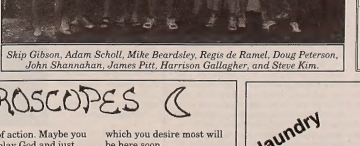
e in point: the last song, "All Alone." Even when Staley is not really saying anything at all, his voice is beautiful to listen to. And when he is saying something, the words are lost in the sound. Some of the greatest pleasure to be had on this album is from listening to Layne Staley's voice and how he works it in with the music. His vocals are subdued on songs like "River of Deceit" and "Wake Up," and it is not hard to lose oneself in his voice. On songs like "X-Ray Mind" and "" Staley's vocals are much more forceful, and there are times when his voice is so powerful as to virtually tower over the listener.

While Staley's vocals are probably the most impressive feature of Above, they are by no means the only thing it has to offer. Let us no forget that this band also includes Mike McCready, whom i consider to be one of the best soloists around. Recent Pearl Jam albums have moved away from the guitar-driven rock of Ten, something that disappoints me. Probably the best thing about Ten (besides the stellar songwriting) was Mike McCready's guitar work, so it is nice to hear him wail away a little more here on Above. There is even one song, "November Hotel", that degenerates into a long guitar jam, a la "Reach Down," from Temple of the Dog. I consider "Reach Down" to be a truly badass song mostly because of McCready's one-take, six-minute, head-spinning solo. "November Hotel" reminds me a lot of that solo, with a groove like "Hamburger Train," by Primus (kudos go to Barrett Martin for kick-ass drumming on this song, and for playing upright bass, cello, maramba, and vibes on one album).

The songs on Above are all beautifully written, and they all sound different. It would be nearly impossible to pin down a single sound for this band, and i certainly wouldn't try to categorize them. The chorus to "I'm Above" sounds very Black Sabbath-y, while the main riff to "Lifeless Dead" reeks of Led Zeppelin. Other than that, however, the songs on Above cannot be categorized. The only word that sums them all up is "impressive." Of course, I knew when I bought the album that they would be.

There seems to be a phenomenon growing, that of the Side Band. It seems that most of the side-bands cropping up today are either as good as or better than their members' bread-and-butter bands. Take Infectious Grooves for example. Infectious Grooves was a side project formed by Mike Muir and Robert Trujillo of Suicidal Tendencies. Where ST was mostly punk/metal, IG was kind of funk/metal. With emphasis on the funk. Infectious Grooves has become the quintessential side-band-gone-horribly-wrong. While I wouldn't say Infectious Grooves are better than Suicidal Tendencies, they have definitely become more popular, to the point where Muir and Trujillo have disbanded ST in favor of Infectious Grooves.

Another side-band that gained some measure of notoriety was the aforementioned Temple of the Dog, a collaboration between members of Pearl Jam and Soundgarden. This one i generally consider to be better than any album by those two bands, with the possible exception of Ten (sorry, I think it's a classic). Temple of the Dog is the example that explains why side bands are generally better: they are done quickly. When band-members take a break from their regular bands, they also take a break from all of the pressures that go along with those bands. Making an album with a side band allows them to make some music for fun not for profit (well, not intentionally for profit, anyway), and this allows them to find their focus again. Both Temple of the Dog and Shame (by Brad, a Stone Gossard side band), were done quickly, and the band members' enjoyment really shows. Perhaps that's why I like side bands so much: how can I enjoy listening to their music if they don't enjoy making it?



Well, give Mad Season a whirl, and if you find out that people from your favorite bands have done a side-project, give it a shot. It may not sound like the main band, but it will probably be a pleasant surprise. And we could all use a few more pleasant surprises these days. Ω

len's eight places second at LaSalle

ish de Ramel

The men's varsity and novice crew
m were able to score yet another ish to their brilliant season at last ekend's La Salle Invitational.
inning the day's races were the n's varsity singles. Having proved mit at the starting line for two ers, Brendan Norris and Jeff Lee in men's varsity singles place second third respectively. The men's ice eight followed up with a second ce in their qualifying heat against alle Johns Hopkins, West Point, squehanna, and Dowlings bringing m to the finals. Soon afterwards, men's varsity pulled for a second to finish against Mercyhurst, nat, and Carnegie Mellon, also ing them in the finals.

With the scheduled races steadily ving further away from their eduled times, the finals were put until late into the afternoon. The 3 novice eight pulled for a strong h place finish, after having started back in their pack. For those who braved the darkening skies and the building winds, the men's varsity eight race proved to be an extremely exciting race. Waiting at the finals were Marist, UPenn, Mercyhurst, Fordham, and West Point. Having delivered a 20 second faster split in their qualifying heat, UPenn was considered to be the fastest boat out on the line. The numbers proved to be completely inaccurate, as W.C. walked away with a second place finish, only .9 seconds behind Mercyhurst. The men's team looks forward to the Murphy Cup in Philadelphia, the weekend after Easter. Ω

Skip Gibson, Adam Scholl, Mike Beardsley, Regis de Ramel, Doug Peterson, John Shannahan, James Pitt, Harrison Gallagher, and Steve Kim.

HOROSCOPES

Laundry drycleaning

Park

RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.

107 N CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD 21620

ROOM SIZE CARPETS

NEXT TO THE COURT HOUSE

EUROPE $169 o/w
CARIBBEAN/MEXICO
189 r/t

If you can beat these prices, start your own damn airline!

Air-Tech Ltd.

(212)219-7000
info@aerotech.com

Pies (3/21-4/19) You are no ger nature's child, but her ister.
urus (4/20-5/20) If you
n't make a friend now, one ght make you. So learn gentle art of making mies.
mini (5/21-6/21) You only one thing wrong last ek: you woke up. Try to edy that this week.
ncer (6/22-7/22) This ar, instead of dying eggs d hiding them, dye
rself green and lay down the grass. It should be a at, assuming you don't get wed.
o (7/23-8/22)
nsequences dictate your course of action. Maybe you should play God and just shoot them yourself.
Virgo (8/23-9/23) Tired of that offensive nose hair? Go ahead and pluck it, and run like hell before the hapless chickee can catch you.
Libra (9/24-10/23) "Maybe disco isn't so bad after all," you said. What were you thinking?
Scorpio (10/24-11/22) Since you live in a small town and you are one of a dozen or two young alien types, you should dare to step out and declare that you're through being cool.
Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) Wait just a little longer; that which you desire most will be here soon.
Capricorn (12/22-1/20) The love you need and desire will be yours, but you will find it in the back seat of a '76 Ford LTD.
Aquarius (1/21-2/18) The road to Hell is paved with good intentions, so screw good intentions and look out for number one.
Pisces (2/19-3/20) This week you will find yourself saying "I'm disappointed because my life didn't turn out the way I wanted it to." Join the club, fish-face.
By Shade and the Deep Spawn. Deal with it.

Washington's softball team overcomes spring break blues

On Monday April 11, the Washington College softball team was successful in their doubleheader against Franklin and Marshall. The first game the Sho'women won 10-7, and the second game was won in the sixth inning according to the eight run rule, with a score of 12-4. Going into the games the team had a conference record of 5-3, after defeating Gettysburg, one of their biggest competitors in the past, and Swarthmore, and losing against Western Maryland, with whom they were tied for first place in the Centennial Conference. Last Saturday the team split with Muhlenburg, at Muhlenburg, in 37° weather and after several rain delays.

Monday's games put the Sho'women's record this year up to 7-3, already better than last year's overall record of about 5-13. The team has improved greatly compared to the last few years. The addition of ten new freshman has definitely influenced this improvement, especially since two of these freshman, Tanya Bennett and Emily Kessler, are the starting pitchers for the team. In past years pitching has been the Sho'women's weakest areas, and this year has shown the difference two pitchers can make. Overall, hard work by the entire team has also affected the season so far.

Top hitters and fielders this year include many of the veterans to the team as well as the new freshman. Senior Tara Bethel has kept her outstanding record this year, batting 0.391 this season and playing almost error-less at shortstop, with a 91% fielding percentage. Other stats for veterans include outfielder Denise Hakanson, who is hitting an impressive 0.400 and has a fielding percentage of 100%. This season means a new position for sophomores, Amy Povloski and Leanne Cole, last year's pitcher and third baseman, respectively. Povloski is now playing third base, and has the high batting average for the team, an amazing 0.471, and Cole has moved into center field, where she has successfully put out star hitters on the opposing team. Other top starters include Melissa Kordula at second and Michelle Chin in the outfield.

Besides starting pitchers, the freshman class has also contributed to many other positions on the field. Top starters include Sarah Sobon behind the plate and Shannon Rump with her incredible splits and scoops as first baseman. Both players are exceptional hitters and fielders, with fielding percentages over 95% for both. Other impressive freshman include Beth Doppler in left field, and Karen Sieger, who has been very successful this year as the Sho'women's designated hitter, hitting a three run home run last Saturday at Muhlenburg.

Due the large size of the softball team this year, with 18 players instead of the usual 13 or 14, it is apparent that some players may not be starting as often as others. Despite this fact the team remains enthusiastic both in the field and on the bench, staying stretched for whenever they are needed to substitute. The numerous new cheers learned in Florida keep the bench lively and loud throughout each game, definitely helping those in the game to stay focused and spirited. It is due to the contributions of all players on the team this year that they have come so far from last year and other past years.

After Spring Break in Florida, the coaches well as the players predicted a winning season for Washington Softball, despite their record down south. The games played obviously prepared them for the actual conference season. To jump from a last place position in the Conference in past years, to a team actually competing realistically for the championship, is something the whole team can be proud of. Ω

Photo by Brian Shipley

"Cause it's one, two, three strikes your out at the old ball game."

Washington baseball to play Dickinson away on Saturday

Erika K. Ford

Sho'men baseball came out swinging last week, winning one game of a doubleheader against Gettysburg. Washington's record is now 7-8 overall. In the Conference, the team holds a solid 4-4 spot.

Against Gettysburg last Saturday, the Sho'men walked away with the bottom half of the doubleheader. In game one at Gettysburg, Washington lost 7-1. With only three Sho'men hits in seven innings, the lone run was scored in the fourth, when third baseman Scott Quinn walked and Brian Rush's triple brought him in. Shortstop Jarrett Pasko singled, while outfielder Toby Pilarski doubled. On the mound in the first game was Brian Rush, who struck out five and walked five. Paul Taylor pitched innings four and five, and Kevin Roland stepped out of the bullpen in the sixth inning to strike out two.

In the second game against Gettysburg, Washington won 5-3. The Sho'men scored three in the first, thanks to singles by Pasko and Rush, a walk to Quinn, and a two-run double by outfielder Andy Moore. The go-ahead run came in the third, when Brian Rush singled and scored off of Moore's second double of the game. Two Washington errors in the fifth inning allowed Gettysburg to scored three in the fifth, but the Sho'men scored once more in the sixth and held their 5-3 lead for the win. The starting pitcher was Jarrett Pasko, who struck out three and then Rush, who wrapped up the game.

Against Johns Hopkins last Friday, Washington lost at home, 11-5. Hopkins took an early lead, scoring four in the first inning, in what was actually a very close game midway through. After Hopkins scored four, Washington came back with one. In the bottom of the sixth, Washington retaliated with four runs, bringing the score to within one of Hopkins, 6-5.

Until the ninth inning, the game remained high-intensity, but Hopkins was able to score five in the top of the ninth off a grand-slam by Hopkins player Beccaria. Andy Moore pitched 1/3 innings, and then Brian Rush took over for five more. Brian Rush believed him to close the game. Tyler gave up just two runs for the Sho'men.

Through their last game, for Washington players are batting over .300 in Centennial Conference games. Scoring four times, Toby Pilarski is hitting .320 and has eight hits and a RBI. Scoring four times also, Scott Tyrako has homered and has six hits and two RBIs with a .193 average. Brian Rush is batting .346 on six runs, nine hits, and five RBIs. Mike Flanagan has six RBIs, leading the team, as well as four runs, seven hits, and a .269 average. Scott Quinn is batting .120 with four RBIs off of five runs and three hits. Jarrett Pasko has eight hits, scored four runs, and one RBI while hitting .320 for Washington. Chad Campbell is batting .200. He doubled twice, has four hits, and one RBI. Andy Moore leads the team in batting .357. Moore has three doubles, five hits, and four RBIs. Brian Rush has pitched most frequently for the Sho'men (15 1/3 innings) and has a 1 record on the mound. His ERA is 4.10, having given up seven earned runs, and he's struck out 21. Scott Quinn has a 1-1 record, with 15 innings pitched, an ERA of 6.6, and strikeouts.

Pitching 8 1/3 innings Andy Moore is 0-1, with five strikeouts and a 2.16 ERA. Jarrett Pasko has been on the mound for Washington for seven innings. With a 1-0 record, he has struck out three and has an ERA of 1.28.

Tomorrow the Sho'men take on Dickinson away. On Tuesday Washington travels to play Haverford, and a week from today (April 22) Washington takes on Haverford at home at 3:30 p.m. Ω

POW

Washington College's Player of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an athlete displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

Hoyas savage Warthogs

Paul Small

The Warthogs did their best to thwart the Georgetown University onslaught, but in the end it simply was not enough as the Hoyas chalked up three tries and a conversion for a score of 17-0. Thrilled at the prospect of playing a Division I rugby team, the squad had quite a bit of vigor as they entered into last Saturday's match.

With the whistle the two teams clashed head on, Georgetown playing a decidedly offensive game. W.C. held its own for the most part, but the rucks took their toll as Georgetown muscled in to score tries as the Warthogs caught their breath.

Washington continued to play with style and grace; Giles Beale and Paul Bayne made stunning runs in the second half, breaking away from the Georgetown forwards, only to be alas foiled by the markedly quick Hoya backs. Tim Hoffacker also had a remarkable run well into Georgetown territory even after having been trampled in a sloppy ruck. Andre Taylor notably earned his first cap as hooker for the Washington side, playing an aggressive, top rate game.

On the defensive, congratulations must go to the forwards as they robbed Georgetown of tries on several occasions, as well as Greg Walker whose quick thinking at full-back often became Washington's salvation with his well placed kicks for touch.

The Warthogs have demonstrated quite a passion for the game of rugby, and if they matched that passion with discipline and hard work they could definitely make a good showing against any rival college team. But as any fan knows, it's a hard road to Murrayfield. Ω on scenic Swan Creek near Rock Hall offers a full care event horse facility with a private atmosphere. We have two stalls available at reasonable rates. Also TB event horses for lease and for sale. Instruction, trailering.

Humphrey's Point Farm

639-2832

Baseball may not draw the crowds like women's lacrosse, but one player in particular could not go unrecognized. Sophomore Jarrett Pasko of Bowie, Maryland has turned in one solid performance after another from the mound, and this week he has earned Player of the Week.

Pasko recently had a phenomenal game against Gettysburg. He pitched a perfect second game, giving up no earned runs. Pasko played while attending Bowie High School. A flexible player, Jarrett sees time as both shortstop and pitcher.

When not on the playing field, Pasko is working towards an International Studies degree with a minor in Spanish. He has strengthened the team greatly with his knowledge and experience of the game.

Against Gettysburg, the Sho'men lost the first game 1-7 and with Pasko pitching, fought back in the second game to win 5-3.

Also on the mound this week, Centennial Conference Honors went to Softball pitcher Emily Kessler, a freshman from Glenelg, Maryland. She was allowed 5 hits, 2 unearned runs and 2 walks. She hung tough to strike out people.

Although attendance would be nice at Sho'women lacrosse games, be sure to support the Baseball and Softball teams. They are doing the school good this season.

Washington College's competitive tennis teams rock the Centennial Conference

Men's tennis wins last three

Erika Ford

Swinging their rackets at home and on the road, Washington men's tennis has won the last three matches. The Sho'men's record now towers at a mighty 10-2. They are 4-0 in the Centennial Conference.

Against Gettysburg on Saturday, five Sho'men players won their matches. Washington won 6-1 overall. Damian Polla, Michael Kember, Buba Soysa, Andrew King, and Andrew Moffat all won singles handily. The three doubles match-ups were captured by Washington as well. Polla teamed up with Miro Beran to win 8-4. Kember and King also combined to win 8-2. Moffat and Soysa played doubles also and beat a Gettysburg duo by a score of 8-1.

Last Friday, the men's team traveled to Haverford, where they whipped the Fords 7-0. Robin Sander, Polla, Beran, Soysa, and King each won their singles matches. All doubles matches were grabbed by the Sho'men as well. Sander and Polla teamed up for an 8-4 win. Kember and King won their doubles by an 8-2 margin. Soysa and Moffat combined once more to win 8-4.

And, in their third game played in four busy days last week, Washington beat Franklin & Marshall 7-0. Sander, Polla, Kember, Soysa, King, and Moffat again magnificently handled the little yellow ball to cruise to wins over gasping F&M players. Robin Sander and Damian Polla changed for an 8-2 victory. Michael Kember and Andrew King slid past F&M to an 8-2 score. Buba Soysa and Andrew Moffat captured a solid 8-3 win.

Today the men's tennis team takes on the University of Pennsylvania away. Tomorrow they'll face Western Maryland away. The next home game for Sho'men tennis is Wednesday, when they invite Johns Hopkins to their home courts at 3:30 p.m. Ω

Sho'men Tennis Conference Record

Men's Tennis	Singles	Doubles	Conference
Sander	6-2	7-2	2-0
Polla	8-3	10-2	4-0
Beran	6-1	4-1	1-0
Kember	9-3	7-5	4-0
Soysa	9-3	9-3	4-0
King	8-4	7-5	4-0
Moffat	4-4	5-2	3-0

Leading Doubles	Overall	Conference
Sander/Polla	7-2	2-0
Kember/King	7-4	3-0
Soysa/Beran	4-1	0-0
Soysa/Moffat	3-1	3-0

Women's Tennis	Singles	Doubles
Flores	6-2	6-2
Sierra	6-2	6-2
Rizzitello	3-5	4-3
Roth	2-5	4-3
Prettyman	4-3	1-0
Ellwanger	1-0	4-3
Clausen	5-2	3-2

Leading Doubles	Overall	Conference
Flores/Sierra	6-2	4-0
Clausen/Rizzitello	3-3	2-1
Roth/Ellwanger	4-3	2-2

Women's tennis wins one, loses one

Erika Ford

In Centennial away matches against Bryn Mawr and Gettysburg last week, Washington women's tennis played well and played hard.

On Saturday the Sho'women traveled to Gettysburg and came up just shy of a win with a close 5-4 score. Anabel Flores won her singles games 6-3, 6-1. Paulina Sierra also handily won 6-0, 6-2. Diana Clausen beat her opponent 6-4, 6-1. Amy Rizzitello, Vicky Roth, and Fern Prettyman also played singles sets, and though they showed strong efforts, were unable to win. One game of doubles was won by W.C., 8-4, with Flores and Sierra on the court. This tight match against Gettysburg was a tough loss for the Sho'women, who last Thursday had a spectacular victory over Bryn Mawr.

Washington's 9-0 win sent the Mawrters racing off the tennis court. All six singles match-ups were captured by Washington, as were the three doubles games. Anabel Flores won 6-4, 6-3 while Paulina Sierra came away with a 6-1, 6-0 score. Amy Rizzitello sent her opponent away in shame with a crafty 6-1, 6-1 win. Vicky Roth won 6-2, lost 3-6, and ultimately won 7-6 to pull away with a victory. Kim Prettyman won her games 7-5, 6-3. Melissa Ellwanger easily won her first, 6-1, and then managed a 7-6 score in the second game. Flores and Sierra (numbers 1 and 2) teamed up for doubles with an 8-3 win. No. 3 Rizzitello and no. #5 Prettyman paired for a definitive 8-2 win. No. 6 Ellwanger and no. 4 Roth also combined to win 8-4 in doubles. No. 7 Ann-Marie Malena and no. 8 Meghan Brumby also won the fourth game of doubles, 8-1.

Tomorrow Washington women's tennis hosts Western Maryland in a conference match at 1 p.m. Next Tuesday they travel to Ursinus for their seventh conference match of the season. Ω

Sho'men lacrosse: What you've been missing

Peggy Busker

Have you been looking for a men's lacrosse article? Well here it is at long last, a catch up article due to circumstances out of the editors control.

Under direction of new coach, John Haus and assistant coaches Ted Greely, Todd Cavallaro and Rusty Pritzlaff, the team has made great strides this season in the Conference. Early losses to Division I foes, Navy and Johns Hopkins, did not get the Sho'men down. They lost several close, tough non-Conference games to Greensboro and Roanoke.

The offensive machine of Bart Jaeger, Greg Tomasso, Christian Soune, Andy Van Ogtrop and Matt Tanko fired many times and accumulated early goals for the Sho'men. On the other end of the field, co-captain Jesse Cook and senior Greg Miller took control of their defense, combining their size and skills to put fear in any opposing team. In the goal was a place of excitement early on as Junior Jon Lundberg (Lumpy) and freshman Andy Taibl split time in the goal. Taibl turned in a fantastic game against Dickinson and Denison to earn the starting goal position. He continued to improve and step up every game. Taibl has a goals against age of .595 and 72 saves thus far this season. Lundberg is not far behind with .547 percent saves and 35 saves. Lundberg has improved this season as he settles into the game.

Leading scorers so far this season for the Sho'men are Bart Jaeger and Greg Tomasso tied at 13 a piece. Andy Van Ogtrop is behind with 12 goals. Preshman scorers are so far, Mike Wilson, leading the pack with 4 and Brian King with 3. Howie Kronthal has found the back of the net twice and Chris McGlone once. Sophomore Marc Taylor-Cox leads in ground ball controls with 30, winning 50 face-offs, .532 percentage.

Most recently the men took on nationally ranked, conference rival Franklin & Marshall. The game was well paced for the Sho'men and they played with confidence and poise. Co-captain Christian Boone led the offense again as they scored 9 goals. Andy Taibl had a fantastic performance in goal to only give up 10 goals. The Sho'men went on to lose the game, their first conference loss. The final score was 10-9.

Overall, the Sho'men record is 3-6 and 2-1 in the Conference. They have many tough opponents yet to play this season as they hope to go to the Division finals this year. Be sure not to miss them as the travel to Salisbury April 22 for the grudge match of the year. Ω

Sho'women continue to fight

Beth Moser

The women's lacrosse team lost to Western Maryland on April 5 by a score of 23-4 and a second time to Gettysburg on April 8th by a score of 23-5. It is also saddening to report that on April 11th, Hopkins, the number four team in the country, beat W.C. 18-1.

Coach Sarah Feyerherm firmly maintains the attitude that the team is improving noticeably and that the school shouldn't doubt their talents. Most, if not all of the players share this outlook and agree that things are feeling better. In the game against Western Maryland, Feyerherm noted that, "we are starting to put the ball in the goal and the improvement has been apparent." The drive shown throughout this game proved once again that no one has given up. Coach Feyerherm gives the impression that she is happy with the progress of the team and is not extremely daunted by the season's scoring record.

The Washington College Women's Lacrosse team plays a close game against Widner.

Photo by Donna Spence

The Gettysburg game definitely restored her faith in the team and Feyerherm feels that the Sho'women "have probably played their best so far." A high aggression level was held until the very end. Again the desire and dedication of the women's team is displayed with pride.

The midfield welcomed the return of Amy Scarlett to help with their transition. Carrying the ball over the halfway point is one of the more important parts of the game. Defense also plays a major role and Jill Schultz at third man "has been playing better and better every game" according to Feyerherm. The combination found on the field is one of the saving points of the team, teamwork makes all the difference and this team is definitely focused and gaining ground on the overall goal of winning.

In the Hopkins game, things improved all around. The Sho'women forced the BlueJays to 10 turnovers in the first half and in the second part held the opposition to only six goals. Giving every team member a chance is important and this includes the goalies who were switched in the second half. Both of the goalies contributed to the success of the team leaving impressions on the players such as, "Peggy Busker played out of her mind." As the season is progressing the women's lacrosse team is improving noticeably and the players are some of the first ones to notice it. Sophomore Elizabeth Moga believes that if, "from here on out if we played as hard as we did today and keep on doing the things we are doing well, we will have a much better chance against the competition ahead."

Feyerherm also holds this opinion because, the team is "playing as a unit, not as individuals which is why their improvement is so noticeable." Individuals do make up the team and the defense wings, Amy Hartsock and Liz Mangano, both contributed to the success of the team. In the Hopkins game, Amy took control on several draws and Liz had smart defense throughout the game. With all these separate players coming together to form a whole the Sho'women managed to get off more shots and create more offense than they had in the previous games.

Continue to support the team and attend their upcoming games. The next three games are W.C. versus Widener on April 13, W.C. at Haverford on April 15, and W.C. at Goucher on April 18. Ω

Photo by Debra Spence

Brigid Kolish attempts to scoop up the ball.

Scores

Baseball

Washington 5
Johns Hopkins 3

Washington 5
Johns Hopkins 11

Washington 1
Gettysburg 7

Washington 5
Gettysburg 3

Softball

Washington 7
Western Maryland 8

Washington 1
Western Maryland 11

Washington 1
Muhlenberg 4

Washington 14
Muhlenberg 8

Washington 10
F&M 7

Washington 12
F&M 4

Men's Tennis

Washington 7
Georgetown 0

Washington 6
Gettysburg 1

Washington 7
Haverford 0

Women's Tennis

Washington 6
Haverford 3

Washington 4
Gettysburg 5

Men's Lax

Washington 11
Swarthmore 3

Washington 9
F&M 10

Women's Lax

Washington 4
Western Maryland 23

Washington 5
Gettysburg 23

Washington 1
Johns Hopkins 18

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Saturday, April 15
Softball vs. Ursinus, 1 p.m.
Women's Tennis vs. W. Maryland, 1 p.m.
Rowing at Philadelphia
Women's Lax at Haverford, 11 a.m.
Baseball at Dickinson, 1 p.m.
Men's Tennis at W. Maryland, 1 p.m.
Men's Lax at Gettysburg, 1 p.m.

Tuesday, April 18
Women's Tennis at Ursinus
Baseball at Haverford, 3:30 p.m.
Women's Lax at Goucher, 4 p.m.

Wednesday, April 19
Men's Tennis vs. Johns Hopkins, 3:30 p.m.

Thursday, April 20
Softball at Gallaudet, 3 p.m.
Women's Lax vs. St. Mary's, 4:30 p.m.

The Washington College

ELM

Volume 66, Number Twenty-four

Serving the College Community Since 1930

W.C. establishes Richard Harwood Journalism Endowment Fund

To honor the distinguished career of Washington Post columnist Richard Harwood, a lecturer in journalism at Washington College since 1991, school officials have established an endowment fund in his name. The creation of the Richard Harwood Endowment Fund was announced at a surprise celebration of his 70th birthday last weekend as friends, family, and colleagues of Harwood gathered at the college to pay tribute to the man who has distinguished himself as one of America's foremost journalists over the course of nearly five decades as a reporter, columnist, editor, ombudsman, and teacher.

With Julian Scheer, a public relations consultant in Washington, acting as master of ceremonies, tributes were presented from such dignitaries as John Womack, the chair of the history department at Harvard University; Senator Eugene McCarthy; Sander Vanocur, a broadcasting executive with ABC News; and Washington Post publisher Katharine Graham.

The Richard L. Harwood Journalism Endowment Fund will support two programs: student fellowships in journalism and an annual lecture series. The Harwood Fellowships in Journalism will be awarded annually to the editor-elect of the Washington College student newspaper, The Elm, and other editors-elect as funds permit. The Fellowship will help underwrite summer internships for student editors at a community newspaper of their choice. The Harwood Lecture in American Journalism honors Richard Harwood's lifelong interest in the history of American journalism. Funds will provide both the lecturer's honorarium and costs related to publishing the lecture by the Literary House Press of Washington College. The first lecturer will be Washington Post columnist Haynes Johnson, a colleague of Harwood's who has won several awards for his work, including a Pulitzer Prize for national reporting in 1966.

Harwood began his career as a reporter for the Nashville Tennessean in 1947. In 1952 he moved to the Louisville Times, becoming, in 1961, the Washington correspondent for the Louisville Times and the Courier-Journal. In 1966 Harwood began a long association with the Washington Post serving at various times as a national correspondent, a national editor and assistant managing editor, and the editor of a Post subsidiary, deputy managing editor, ombudsman, and columnist. He still serves as an editorial columnist there.

During his long stint at The Post, Harwood covered major political campaigns, including those of Bobby Kennedy and Eugene McCarthy, and major conflicts, including the Vietnam war, the civil wars in Lebanon, Angola, Zimbabwe, Nicaragua, and El Salvador, and the British-Argentine war in the Falklands.

Richard Harwood, Washington Post columnist and Washington College professor

Harwood has authored and co-authored books, articles, essays, and an original screenplay, including Lyndon, a biography of Lyndon Johnson, Tinian: The Perfect Landing, Guyana Massacre, and "Under Siege" (with Bob Woodward). His works have been nominated three times for a Pulitzer Prize.

Though Harwood has been associated with many institutions of higher learning, Washington College feels a particular claim on him. He was named a Washington College Senior Fellow in 1990 and was appointed to the Board of Visitors and Governors in 1994. Since 1991 he has taught journalism courses for the Department of American Studies and has served as adviser to The Washington College Elm. Most recently, Harwood helped found Washington College's Literary House Press, a small book publishing venture for which he serves as executive editor.

Proposed modern languages department changes to go to Board

William Denton III

Pending approval of the Board of Visitors and Governors, Washington College's Modern Languages Department will undergo a sweeping transition which will change the department's curriculum beginning in the fall semester. The proposal has already passed the Academic Council, the Humanities Department, and the Faculty at large.

First of all, the department has been renamed the Department of Foreign Languages, Literature, and Cultures. According to Dr. George Shivers, chair of the Humanities department, "the new name better reflects the kinds of changes we're in the process of making."

Three majors are currently offered: French, Spanish, and German. Under the new plan, the names of the three existing majors will be changed to French Studies, Hispanic Studies, and German Studies. A fourth major, Interdisciplinary Culture Studies, will be added as well.

The Interdisciplinary Culture Studies major will be highly individualized and diverse. Majors will select eight classes (the same number as in single language studies majors) from among the upper-division offerings of the Department itself or related offerings of other departments. Proficiency in one of the foreign languages is a central requirement of the major; successful completion of upper-level courses in the language will be required. The Interdisciplinary Culture Studies major will have a unifying focus or concentration of courses, such as a particular theme (e.g. gender, ethnicity, national culture), historical period, or a particular cultural genre (e.g. literature or film). The senior project required for the major can be conducted in either English or the foreign language. In either case, research for the project will require use of the foreign language. According to Shivers, "The basic purpose of the major is to address the needs of students who might want to do a more interdisciplin-

see "Changes" on 7

Two W.C. poets accepted into Bucknell Poetry Seminar

Scott Koon

Poets Katie Degentesh and Jennifer Reddish have been accepted into the prestigious Bucknell Seminar for Younger Poets. The seminar, which will take place this June, admits ten poets each year from an applicant pool of about seventy-five.

According to the students' thesis advisor Professor Bob Day, the only three students from Washington College who have ever applied to the program have all been accepted. The other student who was accepted into the seminar is Tanya Allen '94, who attended the seminar last summer.

The Bucknell Seminar for Younger Poets is in its eleventh year, and is run by Bucknell's Stadler Center for Poetry. According to Stadler Center Director John Wheatcroft, the only criterion for acceptance into the seminar is "the strength of the student's poetry." The eight other poets accepted this year come from Bates College, Tulane University, Western Michigan University, the University of Texas, Loyola University, New York University, Southern Illinois University and the University of Chicago. According to Day, "That's the Centennial Conference of the poetry league, if not better."

According to Professor Day, the fact that the only three Washington College poets ever to apply to the Bucknell seminar were all accepted reveals the true strength of the poetry program at Washington College: "Walt Whitman said that in order to have great poets you have to have a great audience. That's the watchword of our program here. It means that the literary community works. Occasionally a rose blooms in the desert, but usually you need better soil than that."

While the Bucknell seminar draws its attendees from the ranks of American undergraduate poets, it purports to be a program for younger poets, not student poets. As Professor Day likes to point out, the phrase "stu-

see "Poets" on 3

Inside This Week's Elm

Thinking through... the District's dilemma, Paul discusses D.C.'s serious budgetary crisis. 3

"Fascist Blues"
Writers display their talents at the Sophomore-Junior reading 5

Hamlet
Dale Daigle directs cast of dozens in Shakespeare's classic tragedy. 7

Killing Time
Kevin explores the phenomenon of Broadcasting with Tennesseans. 10

In defense of TAFFY

It seems that there is some controversy over the courses listed under "Community, Nation, World" in the packet of fall course listings. Comments have been made with regard to the quality of the courses. There is concern now about something that was within the students' power to change only months ago.

This reaction helps to illustrate that people are willing to create an uproar about student input, but when they have the opportunity to have a say in curricular decisions, they are not willing to make the effort. Students will whine, but they won't work.

This newspaper has run articles throughout the year in an effort to supply the Washington College community with updated information on the progress of the Task Force for the First-year Experience and Distribution. Students were given the opportunity to remain informed, and the genuinely concerned ones took advantage of this. Each article noted that the members of the task force were soliciting the suggestions of all concerned members of the Washington College community, including students' suggestions. Where were the concerned students then? Not at TAFFY's student forum, that's certain. Turnout was meager, though suggestions were noted and support was shown both by the members of TAFFY for the suggestions and by the members of the student body for TAFFY's plans.

In a letter to the editor run in The Elm last week, Katherine Degentesh wrote, "I fail to see the strength in courses with titles as vague and ridiculous as 'Living With An Ocean' and 'Crisis in the Arts in America.'" The strength of a course lies not in its title, but in the course itself. Having never taken the courses, no one can be sufficiently knowledgeable on the issue to pass judgment.

The CNW course titles may detract from their image as serious courses, but judging a course on its name is not wise. Take it from one who thought "Modern Government" would be interesting.

The professors who will take part in the new curriculum do so voluntarily. Each is teaching a course in an area of special interest to him or her. The professors are excited about what they will teach. This seems the ideal situation for a learning experience. Professors will not feel pressed into duty, as they might when teaching intro. classes. These are topics of interest to both the professor and the student. Again, what better environment for education is there?

The professors taking part in the CNW courses are some of the College's best. Their participation supports the idea that the classes are not mere fluff.

The CNW courses, it was explained at the student forum, are designed to interest students in an area which they might not have considered before. A student interested in psychology might decide to take Dr. McKillop's "Psychology of Gender" course and be inspired to choose a gender studies minor. This is the kind of growth one would hope for when entering an institution of higher learning. The lack of growth currently encouraged by Distribution is contributing to the attrition rate. Perhaps with the CNW courses, students will learn and grow from their required courses, and decide to stay at Washington College for a while.

Sophie Kerr Prize

The Sophie Kerr Prize is awarded at Commencement to the senior deemed by the Sophie Kerr Committee to have "the best ability and promise for future fulfillment in the field of literary endeavor." Students wishing to submit samples of their writing are invited to do so. All submissions must be in the hands ofx the committee by the last day of classes and may be brought to the office of the Chairman of English Department for convenience and safe-keeping. Manuscripts will be returned to their owners after Commencement.

All graduating seniors are eligible for the award.

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Kathleen E. Meagher

News Editor
William Denton, III
Features Co-Editors
Mindie J. Kaplan and Sarah Bell
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Erika Ford

Advertising Manager
Joshua T. Lawrence, IV
Office Manager
Scott Ross Koon
Photo Editor
Debra Spence

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and cmvd do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p. m. for the week's paper.
Correspondence can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or queued over BlitzMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8585.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

To the Editor:

Reactions to new honor society

When reading last week's Elm I was dismayed at the proposal for incoming freshmen. The Silver Pentagon has its advantages in attracting bright, gifted and desired freshman to Washington College.

This is a nice thing to those fortunate incoming freshman, but what about the other half of the incoming students. When coming to college one wants a fresh start, not to be placed above or below anyone else from the first day. When I say first day, that is exactly what it is. Does having a 3.8 GPA really grant a student first choice of housing and orientation activities? And how do you explain students coming from different backgrounds. It is not really a myth that some high schools are harder than others. A 3.7 at one school may really be equivalent to a 3.9 at another, and thus this particular youth would be excluded from the gifted Silver Pentagon.

What are parents of those lesser children supposed to think when their child gets bumped from a room because their high school GPA was high enough to get accepted at Washington but not high enough to be considered brilliant.

The freshman year is often a scary time for students, they often are away from home for the first time and are insecure about their choices and friends among other things. This is not an opportune time to tell a freshman that what they did in high school still follows them and they cannot go to a particular activity nor have that room with the view of the lawn because the Silver Pentagon student was more worthy.

I am letting not to sound bitter, but my Quaker education has influenced me greatly and I think that when coming to college one should be given a fresh start and not be so blatantly placed below their peers. I understand too that the college is trying to attract a higher level of student, but I think a better way can be found. Maybe TAFFY can come up with something that will go over with the student body a little better than this and the Community Nation World courses.

Peggy Busker, Junior

As an alumni, I would like to express a few thoughts that came to mind upon reading of the newly created Silver Pentagon Society. In my eyes, this newly created honor society represents a resurrection of Hitler's ideology of establishing an elitist society, in this case, merely a microcosm of nerd extrordinaires on the WAC campus.

A major part of the freshman college experience is the opportunity for the incoming freshmen to let go of all stereotyping and make a fresh start. The freshman experience forces new students to take their lives into their own hands, quite possibly for the first time in their lives.

Might I ask WHY we feel the need to pamper the gifted? Likewise, why should we repress the average WAC freshmen by granting our fledgling elit-

See "Honor Society" on

Election complaints

This letter is being written in response to the perversion of democracy which was passed off on the students as the Washington College class officer elections.

The elections were poorly handled and mismanaged on a number of different fronts. It seems the SGA once again underestimated the apathy of the Washington College student body. In some instances there was only one candidate running for key positions in the student government, and in many cases there were no candidates at all. The speeches were either canceled or poorly attended (I've heard one or the other from various sources within the SGA) due to lack of interest. Either way, they were horrendously underpublicized. Then it came time for the elections, and when word was leaked that the positions were basically up for grabs, a horde of new write-ins appeared seemingly out of thin air. This set the stage for the travesty that eventually evolved into the elections.

This much is evident from the attempt at damage control released by the SGA on BlitzMail shortly after it was discovered that a large portion of the election, if not the entire ordeal, was invalid due to voter fraud. I applaud the SGA for making the controversy known and taking steps to correct the problem, but I must question why they didn't act sooner. They knew

See "Election" on

This Week on Campus

April 21 - 27

Film Series

Interview With A Vampire

Norman James Theatre, Fr., Sun., Mon.,7:30 p.m.

Friday 21

Hamlet
Tawes Theatre
8 p.m.

Saturday 22

Board of Visitors and Governors on campus

Hamlet
Tawes, 8 p.m.

Sunday 23

Early Music Consort
Norman James Theatre, 4 p.m.

Monday 24

Tuesday 25

Wednesday 26

A Student Recital
Norman James Theatre, 7:30 p.m.

Thursday 27

Lee Upton
reads from her poetry
Sophie Kerr Room,
8 p.m.

Thinking through ...

the District's dilemma

by Paul Briggs

My original plan was to do a column on nationalism, nativism and anti-immigration sentiment in the United States. Unfortunately, I was unable to find a crucial source. To be honest, I also find myself with neither the time nor the energy for such a large project this week. Instead, I am going to write about the District of Columbia, and the new "financial control board" which is being appointed to resolve the city's financial crisis. I apologize to anyone who is disappointed.

As you may know, the nation's capital has a little problem regarding money. It is running a $722 million deficit, to be precise. President Clinton recently signed a bill mandating the creation of a financial control board which will essentially take over the city's spending authority. For the most part, reaction to this has been positive. D.C. Mayor Marion Barry, for instance, described it as "good news," despite the fact that it will take away much of his current authority.

Not everyone is happy, however. There appeared a strange item by Blaine Harden in the Sunday edition of Tuesday's Washington Post. It is hard to tell if it was actually meant as journalism - it reads as much like editorializing as anything else - but it is say that Congress is described as "peeved," "asserting dominance," "paternal," "ordaining disheartening locals," "poking its nose into local affairs" and "the fatherly dander is once again upon all in the short term.

A city government of such monstrous size cannot be very efficient, but this does not mean that drastically reducing its size will produce immediate improvements. Quite the contrary, for at least the next twelve months the civil service is likely to be in a state of utter chaos. Eventually the city will emerge the better for it, of course, but in the meantime anyone who wishes to contest a parking ticket or file a complaint on the condition of a road will be in for a much larger headache than usual. Finally, of course, there is the fact that the federal government is itself not exactly a paragon of fiscal policy.

When the control board assumes its duties, it will immediately confront the basic paradoxes of the District. Although it contains an enormous amount of prime real estate, the largest landowner in the city - the federal government - pays no property taxes. (Just as well - if the government paid local taxes on all the property it owns, including wildlife preserves, weapons testing grounds, etc., it would go bankrupt almost immediately.) A more serious problem, however, is that even though the city's work force is one of the wealthiest on earth, its tax base is terribly small (and will become smaller still when the board is finished firing bureaucrats). Most of the wealthiest people in Washington commute from Prince George's County, Montgomery County, Fairfax County and so on. These suburban counties possess wealth comparable to that of Persian Gulf oil sheikhdoms. Of course, this sort of thing is a chronic problem for most U.S. cities. Many of them solve it by taxing commuters who work in the city. Would it surprise you to learn, then, that the District is forbidden by federal law to do this? It certainly surprised me.

Loosening this restrictive federal regulation would be one commonsense way to fill a small part of the District's financial hole. For the foreseeble future, it's not going to happen. Instead, the board will borrow some money from Congress, fire bureaucrats and eventually bring the city's budget back within bounds. This will not even come close to solving Washington's problems ¤

"Poets" from 1

dent poet" can be misleading: "About ten years ago Gwendolyn Brooks was here and I introduced her to a group of students, who I presented to her as student poets. She had read their work, and said 'Bob, they're not student poets, they're poets.'

Senior Katie Degentesh is currently editor of Broadsides, and was the editor of the Review last year. She holds a Sophie Kerr Scholarship and is writing a thesis in poetry. Day describes her as "spectacular in her use of form and in the quickness of her lines and images." Last year some of her work was published in Amelia's 97SM & H, a California literary magazine. She said the seminar "Sounds like a really good opportunity. I'm looking forward to dedicating a month to writing." The work she submitted to the Stadler Center was primarily older poetry, along with some new offerings. "I like for poetry to have an element of humor in it," Degentesh said of her writing "even though I take it pretty seriously."

Jennifer Reddish is a graduating senior who earned honors on her poetry thesis last year. Professor Day characterizes her as "remarkably gifted at creating dramatic monologues and voices in poetry." Reddish said she was "kind of surprised at getting in. The program's really tough to get into. I'm just glad that the whole process is over." The work she submitted for the program was poetry from her thesis, along with some new work. Reddish said she was glad that she and Degentesh were accepted into the program: "I feel good. We're very different people with very different styles of poetry. I think it says a lot about the English Department at Washington College."

Both poets will attend the poetry seminar, which runs from June 5 to July 1. ¤

"Honor Society" from 2

ists "first choice of orientation programs, and first choice of housing...???? Call me ignorant, but didn't we go through something similar in the United States which ended up in a Supreme Court ruling? A little refresher??? How about dear old Rosa Parks and the City of Montgomery, Alabama? Anything come to mind? Oh, yeah, weren't we trying to single out the white man as an elitist in this time period, granting him preference in bus seating? Hmmm...

Perhaps the "not-so-elite" students should walk around "goose stepping" and shouting "Heil Nevf" as they pass a member of the WAC elite!

And Dean McIntire, I am personally appalled at your comment "It's our hope that students will identify themselves with other good students..." According to the article, this new elitist society "will consist of the top ten percent of admitted freshmen." That is quite bold, labeling 90% of the incoming student body as BAD students! You are a brave woman!

- G.L. Donahue '93

"Elections" from 2

that there was a decided lack of candidates on the ballot, and they knew that the system had gone awry. The entire election appeared ruined at the outset, so why didn't they take steps to correct the problem before the fateful election day? They had many options. If they had better publicized the election events, perhaps they would have had a better showing at their speeches, and had more candidates decide to run for office ahead of time. Regardless of whether the speeches actually took place or not (which is still under dispute), one thing is certain: it was a failure because no one knew about it. I was very interested in attending the speeches, and yet I could not find a single person who could tell me exactly when or where the events were to take place. I scoured copies of The Elm to no avail, looked around campus for posters but saw none bearing the time, and even asked members of the SGA, but even they didn't know. How do they expect the student body to get involved in the electoral process if they make it all but inaccessible even to people who vigorously want to take part in the event?

As I said before, I am glad that the SGA has taken steps to correct the problem, but I don't think their actions are enough. In an effort to correct the problem of illegal write-in ballots, they have decided to re-run the elections, but only for certain positions. I think this is too little, too late. They should re-run all of the elections and do it the right way this time. Many of the "officially" elected candidates were the only candidates running, and the wave of fake write-in votes might have jeopardized the campaigns of serious write-in candidates. I believe that if half the election is invalid due to fraud, that the entire election should be rendered null and void. The illegalities which took place very well might have affected the rest of the election indirectly. Those students who participated in the election being rewarded with extra time to campaign and the chance to have their names on the ballot. Meanwhile, legitimate write-in candidates who chose not to use underhanded means are being punished. The entire election was affected by the poor planning of the SGA and general apathy of the student body, and the only possible correction I can see is to start from ground zero. Publicize the new election, solicit petitions, hold speeches, and give the students the information they need to make a reliable choice. Otherwise, the entire democratic process of the Washington College community has been seriously threatened, and the election will go down in history as a complete and utter sham. We should not be forced to elect candidates because they have no competition, as competition is the basis of democratic elections, and we should not be put in this position due to the poor publicity skills of the SGA. I sincerely hope the SGA will reconsider their position on the elections and make serious efforts to restore our faith in the democratic process and the power of the students' opinions. The only way this can be done is by holding the entire elections over. This time I hope steps will be made to do it right.

- Kevin Hoffman

Election Results

Senior Class:
President: Mark Reyero (76)
VP: Mike McDermott (72)
Secretary: Steve Dashiell (76)
Treasurer: Joe D'Urso (72)

Junior Class:
President: Dani Heath (114)

Sophomore Class:
President: Brigid Kolish (82)
VP: Tara McKee (116)

Due to the excessive vacancies on the ballots for the Sophomore Class positions of Treasurer and Secretary and the Junior Class positions of Vice-President, Treasurer, and Secretary, the Election Committee was faced with illegal write-ins on the ballots. The committee discovered a numerous amount of ballots that had write-in candidates written on them before they were used by the voters. Because of this, the committee has decided to rehold the election for the following positions: Sophomore Class Treasurer and Secretary and Junior Class: Vice-President, Treasurer, and Secretary Petitions for these positions will be available in the Student Affairs office on Thursday, April 20. They will be due on Tuesday, April 25 and elections will be held on Wednesday, April 26. Please take these elections seriously.
We will not tolerate tampering with ballots.

BLOOD DRIVE

TUESDAY, APRIL 25

Those who wish to donate blood can sign up in the dining hall.

If you have any questions or would like to help, please contact Chris Chiarchiaro through BlitzMail or at x. 8677.

EUROPE $169 o/w
CARIBBEAN/MEXICO
189 r/t

If you can beat these prices start your own damn airline!

Air-Tech Ltd.

(212) 219-7000
info@aerotech.com

The Sacrament of Civil Disobedience

Rachael Fink

John Dear describes himself as a Jesuit priest and a convicted felon. ("I don't know which is worse," he says jokingly.) Also an author of several books on peace and non-violence, Dear visited Washington College on Thursday, April 20 to discuss "the sacrament of civil disobedience." After spending several months in jail for participating in a plowshare demonstration at the Semor Johnson Air Force Base in Goldberg, N.C., Dear is taking his insights into the philosophy of civil disobedience, disarmament, the judicial system and the meaning of being a Christian and human on the road.

As a way of explaining the action that resulted in the imprisonment and trial of Dear, two college students and a long time peace activist, Dear started his discussion of non-violent civil disobedience with a quotation from The Bible, Isaac 2:4. Using this passage which describes God's message as being one of non-violence, urging people to "beat their swords into plowshares," as justification the protesters entered the Air Force Base in North Carolina and struck one of the 75 F15 fighting bombers with hammers. For this "ridiculous symbolic act" the protesters faced 20 years in jail. In the mean time, Dear spoke of the giant military institution which in the face of the fall of the Berlin Wall and the end of the Cold War is "quietly barreling on."

Dear spent much of the lecture on his impressions of the judicial system and its tendency to "legalize and define all these weapons of mass destruction." After many months of trial, Dear was sentenced to 2 weeks in jail, and six months of house arrest to be followed by supervised probation. Dear noted that house arrest, while uncommon in the United States, is a familiar sentence for those in South Africa. Dear said the time spent in jail was for him, "a profound experience of suffering and ... a profound experience of grace."

From there, Dear explained he believes that it is "sacrifice and suffering that makes a difference." For Dear, civil disobedience is simply when "good people break bad laws and accept the consequences." Dear estimated that he has been arrested 75 times in the past 15 years.

Commenting on the public nature of his actions, Dear explained that "sacraments have to be social," and he described a sacrament as something that brings one closer to God. Dear expanded on this by indicating that to be a Christian, in fact to be human, is to be actively working against violence and for disarmament. Ω

Financial aid cuts my hit home

W.C. prepares for House proposal

William Denton III

At the time this article went to press, the United States House of Representatives was about to vote on the most extensive college financial aid cuts in history. In an effort to curtail Congressional spending, House Republicans, under the leadership of Newt Gingrich, have proposed, as part of their "Contract With America" plan, cuts in the following federal financial aid programs:

The Student Interest Exemption, which allows students exemption from paying interest on federal loans while still attending school. Currently, the federal government pays monthly interest for loan recipients, but without the exemption, students would have to pay interest on all outstanding loan money both during and after their college career. According to Jean Narcum, Director of Financial Aid, "During the freshman year, the dollar amount is not that much per month, but by the time you're a senior, and you're borrowing each year, and paying interest on the unpaid balance every month, you're looking at some hefty sums of money each month that you'll be putting out for interest."

College Work Study, which offers part-time employment to college students in need of money. 21% of Washington College students are currently involved in work study, with the government providing a total of $184, 046 for the work study program.

Supplemental Education Opportunity Grants (SEOG), which are funds designated for students with exceptional financial need. Financial Aid Administrative Assistant Sandy Brown stated that, contrary to what some may believe, there are students at Washington College who receive these grants.

Perkins Loans, which are low-interest federal college loans. Currently, 20% of Washington College students receive Perkins Loans. The Federal Government currently provides $184,046 in loan money to Washington College students.

Both Narcum and Brown talked of the effects of the proposed cuts on the Federal Stafford Loan program. W.C. students are heavily dependent on these loans; 59% of students at this campus receive them. Almost 1.75 million dollars in federal loans are used by Washington College students in the Stafford program. The Interest Exemption would potentially affect this plan the most drastically, as it is so widely used.

Although the "Action Alert" e-mailed to all students states that "Congress will move forward with these cuts unless they hear from American families who are struggling with financing a college education," it is widely speculated that the proposal will not clear the Senate, let alone be signed into law by President Clinton. The proposed cuts, if enacted, would financially hurt millions of college student constituents. In addition, the Republicans have only a slim majority in the Senate, and they are not expected to vote on party lines. Strict partisan voting is generally a rarity, and, with an issue as controversial as this, it is not anticipated. Said Narcum, "I don't think it will come to pass ... I hope not ... it doesn't make sense to cut [federal aid]."

W.C.'s Financial Aid department encourages students to show their support for the ongoing organized efforts against the proposed aid cuts. Regarding the "Action Alert" call for action, which included a sample letter to a member of the House of Representatives, Narcum said, "We don't know how many students actually responded or sent a letter." The letter also included information on other ways to voice an opinion:

The Save Student Aid Hotline, 1-800-574-AAID, allows callers to contact their district's congressional office personally. Each call costs $3.65.

The internet can also be used to access more information as well as to send a message to Congress.

Electronic mail address: student-aid@whmail.ed.gov

Gopher: student-aid.nche.edu

World Wide Web: http/student-aid.nche.edu

As of now, the situation appears hopeful for college students, but students across the country are nevertheless sending a message of discontent with Congress. A vote will be taken on the proposal in the House today, and The Elm will continue to cover the events concerning the proposal. Ω

Depression and Goldfish:

Cheap solutions for expensive problems

Mindie Kaplan

Many college students suffer from depression. Exercise, hobbies, and expensive drugs are often proposed as solutions, but people tend to overlook the easiest solution of all: goldfish. Actually, any pet will help, but goldfish tend to be among the least expensive and easiest to care for. At the Pet Shop (just a short walk from campus in the direction of Rosex), they offer beautiful Bettas (Japanese Fighting Fish) for only $5 – bowl, gravel, and several months supply of food included (See this week's "We Get You Discounts" for more information about The Pet Shop).

It always helps to have life in a dorm room – particularly life that doesn't talk back or make messes. It's nice to have something to care for that doesn't take too much effort. Fish can help even severe moments of depression. If you're too depressed to get out of bed and reach for food, you can still manage to lift your eyes to the fishbowl. The movements of fish are soothing and repetitive; they lull you into a calm and contented state. Let's face it: fish are always okay. It doesn't matter what's going on in the outside world, they're going to keep on swimming, completely untouched by everything around them. And if your fish are going to survive, you know the world's not coming to an end. It's not that much of a leap of faith to say "I'm going to survive too."

One conversation with the staff at Health Services yielded the information that I am not alone with my use of fish for therapeutic purposes. Apparently, even some of the poorest families in the area maintain fish tanks as a piece of stability and tranquility in an otherwise harsh and unfriendly world. The benefits of pets are becoming more recognizable to health care providers. The nursing home in which my grandmother resides has fishtanks scattered along the halls as well as a "pet room" that contains birds, rabbits, and lizards. Right outside the pet room is, you guessed it, another fish tank. Many other health care facilities have programs where pets are brought in to cheer up patients. In many ways, the tranquility of a fish is equal to the appealing fuzziness of cats and dogs. Not to mention the added benefits of keeping fish instead of mammals – they don't run away, get fussy with their food, or fill the dorm with fleas. Carol Thornton, a nurse at Health Services, even went so far as to say that it wouldn't be a bad idea for every dorm room to come equipped with a small fish bowl. Fish, accompanied by a good dose of "sunlight therapy" or "plant therapy" (which also have documented benefits to those who suffer from depression), can be a wonderful pick-me-up for stressed college students. Ω

GRADUATION VIDEO

$25, including shipping and handling in the U.S. You can pay with check (payable to Abstract Video) or cash, directly to Abstract Video or through student mail by May 1 to Alicia Carberry. If you send it directly to the company, make sure you say you are from Washington College.

Abstract Video
9919 Road Island Ave.
College Park, MD 20740

Roberts Brothers Circus

Rock Hall Civic Center
Sponsor: Rock Hall Lions Club
Sunday April 30, 3 p.m.

Interested in a job at The Cove in the fall?

Stop by and see Jerome Lindsey by May 12 for an application. Please have a tentative schedule of hours you can work. You will be notified over the summer if accepted for a position.

The Honor Board is seeking 3 students to replace two full time members and an alternate position.

Full Time members are voting participants in Honor Board hearings. Alternates are available should a full time member be unable to attend. Both positions will be expected to attend bi-weekly meetings.

For futher information, read the section of our Student Handbook that pertains to the Honor Board or contact Reuben Stump ASAP.

If you would like to apply, please send a statement as to why you wish to be on the Honor Board. All three positions will be selected by a vote of the SGA

Distinguished poet to read Thursday

Lee Upton, one of America's most talented young writers, will be attending Professor Wagner's 20th Century Women's Poetry Class to speak about Louise Bogan on Thursday, April 27th. Afterwards, at 8 p.m., she will hold a poetry reading in the Sophie Kerr Room of Miller Library.

Lee Upton

Lee Upton's second collection, No Mercy, was selected by James Tate in the 1988 National Poetry Series competition. As Tate writes, "Lee Upton's poems, while they seem as natural and warm as a Tupperware party, also push linguistic invention to the edge of common madness. The poems are intimate in such peculiar ways that they make us savor our fragile humanity. She's an original and a pure delight."

Upton's main subject is the imperfect connection between memory and fact, hope and event. In a clear voice she calls our attention to their meeting places, the edge of the frame where the real runs into the magical. She catches birds of paradise on the wing. When she spots a dragon's egg in Chinatown— "hand-painted with gold veins" — she conjures up the dragon behind it. And Upton's eye for the passage of time and the pressures of love make the poems scrupulous barometers to how we live now. She studies different kinds of human travel in "New Year's Eve on a Train," where "the woman beside me/ puts down the novel/ that promises to thrill her/ its glossy little figure/ running off..."

Upton has an unforced and disciplined command of form, and uses images from Salome in her dancing clothes to rows of pigs' feet in the grocery stores. With an almost conversational ease, she translates the code of a garden, a father's purchase for his daughter, a wife's good-bye. These poems are marvels of eccentric exactness, and they prove Upton more than worthy of the honors she has won.

Upton's poems have appeared in Poetry, American Poetry Review, Yale Review, and other magazines. Her first collection, The Invention of Kindness, was published in 1984. A winner of the Pushcart Prize in poetry, she is an associate professor of English at Lafayette College in Easton, Pennsylvania. Ω

The quest for orange lilacs singing the blues

A look at the Sophomore-Junior Reading

Sarah Bell

Last Tuesday night, a diverse group of talented writers came together at the Lit. House to read some of their work. The writers included: Junior Jen Waldych, Junior Erin Rowe, Sophomore Jodie Clark, Junior Mindie Kaplan, Sophomore Ryan Walker, and Sophomore Aaron Pierce. Gee, could this have been a Sophomore-Junior reading?

Erin Rowe was the first of the six to read. Her prose piece, entitled "Lilacs," was a rich and beautiful story about a confused girl who associates death with the smell of lilacs. At the end, she comes to the realization that it is not death that she is smelling but life.

Jen Waldych read next, choosing a couple of her poems to read. She started out by telling the audience about her tragic experience in high school that has marred her for life.

"I won't use the podium because of an incident that occurred in high school. I was in the Optimists' Club and went up to give a speech and knocked the podium down. I was disqualified," Jen remarked.

So, Jen sat on the table and read to us about "Oranges and Spain" and how the simple act of peeling an orange can awaken the senses to past memories. Her second poem was based upon her experience with the dissection of a clam, Maya Arenaria, in her Chesapeake Bay lab. She remembers fishing with her father and noticing how beautiful Maya was. But now, in the lab, with the dissecting of Maya, she can no longer see her beauty. Her poignant question, "Am I learning Maya?" lingered at the end.

Mindie Kaplan read a short story called "Another Christmas Story" which describes her hellish day working at the local convenience store. A lot of it was stream of consciousness. We were taken inside of Mindie's mind, listening to her thoughts and complaints of the day. The story ended with her befriending a woman customer whom she loathed, the woman having brought in rolls of pennies instead of cash.

Aaron Pierce started his reading with a clip from "The Church of the Subgenius," concluding that "the world is a turkey and Bob has the carving knife." From there, he read a piece of poetry called "The Automatic Blues," which was broken down into sections such as "Buddha Blues" and "Fascist Blues." "Automatic Blues" was mesmerizing. Aaron slowly built up his poem, drawing you slowly in and not letting go until the slamming of his hand on the table jerked you back.

Jodie Clark's story "Gunther's Quest" included a character based on a woman that Jodie met when she worked at a camp for the mentally and physically challenged. Jodie's story was full of wit and humor, describing a boy named Gunther's search for that perfect girl ... or any girl.

Ryan Walker's collection of poems was different. Some of them just flew right over my head. I don't know if it was Ryan's superb ability to capture the abstract or the fact that some of his poems were about two lines long. Ryan was definitely the amusing one, reading poems titled "Thirteen Things That I Didn't Do Today" and "It's True What You Heard About The Zoo."

Chris Watkins was the last to read his story, "Ed Berenger Is A Werewolf." The audience's attention was captured, intrigued by the character of Ed. The story was different and seemed to take a fresh approach to the average "man turns into wolf" story.

The turnout for the reading was only fair but I think that those of us who did attend were impressed by each of the writers' stories and poems. I look forward to hearing more from them. Ω

Washington College Staff Profile

This week I traveled to the third floor of the CAC to the Admissions office to meet with the Assistant Director of Admissions, Deborah Lynn Smethurst. I sat and waited for her on that same couch that I nervously sat on a year ago, waiting for my interview with admissions. This is Ms. Smethurst's third year working at admissions. She graduated from Washington College in '91, majoring in sociology and minoring in psychology. Also in '91, she took the Ed. Block to receive her teaching certificate in social studies. This semester she hopes to complete all of her course work and receive her masters in psychology.

Ms. Smethurst's days are filled with interviews with prospective students and their parents. She is also responsible for recruiting some of the freshman students in the areas of New York and New Jersey. Once a prospective applies, she reviews their file for admissions.

"I think that the most challenging part of my job is bringing in a freshman class of both quality and quantity. Professors want to see strong students while The Board of Visitors wants a large freshman class," Ms. Smethurst said.

The Assistant Director of Admissions has a very busy schedule, handling work and school. In the free time that she does have, she likes spending time outdoors. She loves mountain biking, camping and traveling. "Just this past spring break, I went to Greece," said Smethurst. "It was incredible since it was my first trip abroad. I also do a lot of traveling to Baltimore, where some of my friends that I graduated with live."

Smethurst finds that she works in a very supportive community and loves not only Chestertown but the Eastern Shore. She grew up not too far from New York City and says that she is "experiencing the best of both worlds."

"I think of myself as a people person," Smethurst added, "With my age, I find it easier to relate to the students, having been in their shoes not too long ago."

Tanya Krupat is visiting campus to discuss her work as an HIV/AIDS educator at "The Door," a health care and educational center for at-risk teenagers in NYC. She will discuss her educational and professional background and will give insight into what it takes to succeed in the social service field. Tanya will provide useful information for anyone who is planning on pursuing a career in human services.
The talk is co-sponsored by the Career Development Center, the Department of Sociology, and the International House.

Friday, April 21, 3:30 p.m.

in the Student Study Lounge in Hodson Hall (it has been moved from the CAC Commons room).

Hamlet wore Khakis.
April 20th, 21st, 22nd.
8:00 PM, Tawes Theatre

Dropped a Whole Degree

Aaron Pierce

Once Again, the Scene Shifts ... Just Read!

All right, first off I'd like to give a big Ranger Rick welcome to the new editor of this here paper, Mademoiselle Kate. Good luck with it, and may this experience leave you better than when you started.

Yep, just two papers away from freedom, and I think that myself and the other contributors to this column (especially A. Blake ... he gets a biiiiiig round of applause) have done a good job of exposing you, the reader, to a wide and interesting variety of music. If you don't agree, then write it yourself next year.

And that's it. No more music reviews. The way I see it, I stuck to the topic fairly well for the year. Sure I missed a few deadlines, and maybe I rambled a bit at times, but overall a good effort. Well now it's time to be rewarded for that effort. From this moment on, this column will be about whatever the hell I want it to be about. If I feel like going on for 5000 characters about stuff that's cool in my apartment, then I'm going to do it. If I feel like writing fluffy rants about Dead Rock Stars, then I'm going to do it. Basically, I'm done with writing about music. I'm going to have some fun.

It is, after all, the special right of the columnist to indulge him or herself in the creative freedom necessary to produce informative prose of an entertaining nature. Often, I have to indulge more than once in a sitting just to get this column written. But those are the hazards of such an occupation. It's what They pay us for, and what They expect. (By the way, when do I get my paycheck for all this?)

So sometimes a columnist is forced into an ugly situation. After all, when you get down to it, there's not much to write about, and it's a hard task to face at the end of a long day. Things start getting weird. The words don't come like they once did. You start thinking about all the other work that you have to do, and how it would be so much more fun to be avoiding that than to be doing this. That's when that devious little part of your mind takes over, the one that lurks in the back of your head and has a tendency to say things like, "You don't need to KNOW what you're talking about, just as long as you talk." Ahhh yes, this voice and I are goooood friends. Next thing you know, you've got a column. It's mainly gibberish, but it gets the job done. You send the damned thing in and forget about it until the next week when you've got to go through the whole painful process all over again.

You see, I don't think that the average newspaper reader understands the particular brand of stress under which a newspaper office functions. Hell, I know I don't understand it. All I had to do was worry about one article a week. Any more than that, and I would have been forced to quit just on general principles.

And that's why, at least every once in a while, you've got to forgive us for an occasional weird article. Just imagine the feeling of power that you get when you're sitting in front of a keyboard not even making an attempt to make sense, yet you know that, yes, what you've written will indeed be printed, simply because the editor needs it to fill space. The temptation is too great, and I am a mere sinner, just like the rest of you.

And that, my friends, is why I am not doing any more Music Reviews. Essentially, this is still the same column, just without so much talk of music. Who knows, perhaps this will work out. Maybe next year I'll be doing this on a weekly basis. In fact, does anybody want to buy a used column? Like new! Only two semesters old! The last owner was an old lady who only used it to put out a newsletter for her church ... no, really, trust me ... Ω

Notes

by Andrea Nolan

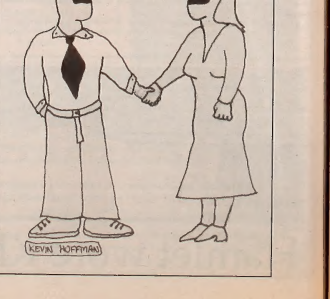
Way back in September, when the weather was a lot like it is now, when summer was on its way out instead of in, I wrote my very first Earth Notes. That Notes was written as a sort of personal welcome to all the incoming freshman, introducing them to the Chester River and Chesapeake Bay watersheds. Over my past four years, I have discovered a side of Maryland that I had never known existed. I discovered that there still were places in Maryland where rush hour doesn't start at three and end at eight, and where silence is not that difficult to find. After expressing a life-long loathing of Maryland, I have spent much of my summers working in the salt marshes of the lower Bay, and listened to myself express a desire to stay in Maryland to continue working in and around the Bay. When I welcomed the freshman, I was attempting to pass on an idea of how greatly this place can affect a person.

Now, a week after I graduate, I will be shipping off to take a job with the Forest Service in Wisconsin. The position is seasonal, and I will very likely return to the Chesapeake — but, then again, I may not. The point is, while I may not spend my life amongst the salt marshes of the Bay, the connection that I have established with the Chesapeake will not go to waste —and I will certainly not have to leave everything behind. I will be bring with me a intimate and passionate love of a place — which is something greater than anything that I could have learned within the walls of this esteemed institution. Over these four years I have established roots and ties to this place that run far deeper than any connection I had ever established with the suburban town in which I was raised.

By having such a strong tie with the place, I will always have a way, a home. Much of Edward Abbey's life was spent in Hoboken, New Jersey. However, he sustained strong ties with the Southwest throughout his life, as is evidenced through his literature. Furthermore, he always returned, like a magnet was drawing him. The environment in which a person lives will affect that person regardless of whether or not they are aware of the influence. However, if you seek that connection, and delve into the world in which you are living, you will come away far richer.

I will bring this skill of connection with me to Wisconsin. Over the three months that I will work there, I plan on getting to know the "cheese state" well. Wisconsin will not be entirely new, for it is my birthplace, and the origin and home state of most of my relatives. I have visited many times, and have always felt an inkling of a connection with the state. However, now I will be bringing with me this skill of establishing a connection. I will deliberately lose myself on back-country roads, in order to find myself. I will wander around the woods and learn the native species. I will, in essence, introduce myself to my new environment, and except the same in return. Most likely I will travel quite a bit over my life, however, I don't view the nomadic life as necessarily ruling out a connection with a place, or places. Rather, roaming will open me up to new places, and further expand my catalogue of memories and ties.

On a more global level, this sort of connection with place far transcends the mere personal gratification one may feel. When people are connected to a place, there exists a sense of stewardship of the land. People aren't overly prone to trashing their own backyard. This is the entire point behind the bioregionalism movement; this is what all those "Think Globally, Act Locally" bumper stickers are talking about. In order to act, you must care, in order to care, you must understand, and in order to understand you must get out there. So I ask you underclassmen one small favor — go out and splash in the marshes. Feel the muck sucking at your legs as you strain your neck to look at the geese flying overhead. Go swimming out at Eastern Neck Island when the bioluminescence is running strong. And for God's sake, eat steamed crabs. If you eat one for me, I promise to eat a chunk of cheese for you as I set up shop in the heartland. Ω



Safe Sex Dance
sponsored by the Peer Educators

Student Center
Saturday, April 22, 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.

A DJ from MC Services in Baltimore will be playing all of your favorite songs. There will be prizes. Come and try to win some. The cost is $2 per person. We hope to see you all there.

Andy's

Friday, April 21
Sam Anderson and the Rev. Blind Dog Jazzbo on their yearly tour up from Key West.
One of the best acoustic blues acts we've seen.
Saturday, April 22
The Wicmicos
A favorite new group...original, soulful, urban folk / rock...strong melodies.
Thursday, April 27
Billy Breslin
Solo weasel returns to entertain and amuse. No cover.

Daigle directs Shakespeare's Hamlet

Large cast assembles for final production of semester

Beth Moser

Starting at the end of January, roughly 25 actors came together to produce William Shakespeare's Hamlet. Dale Daigle receives directing assistance from Kelli Youngblood, and Steve Fuchs contributes as the talented master electrician. The cast is also honored by the presence of Polly Summerfeld, a professional actress and Dale's wife.

A different approach is being taken by having two Prince Hamlets. Throughout the soliloquies Richard McKee, the lead Hamlet, is affected by the prescence of his alter ego, Greg Gibson, who also takes on the role of young Fortinbras, the conquering warrior. The idea of two Hamlets originated in the drama class when Richard and Greg divided the lines of the famous "To be or not to be" speech for an exercise. The ending result is a better understanding of the internal argument held in Hamlet's mind and a powerful performance which highlights the talents of both actors.

The entire play is enhanced by several technical achievements. First is the masterful set designed by Jason Rubin and built by the members of the cast. The basic layout is simple, yet a complex view is created. Second, the costumes, rented from Pierre in southern NJ, helps relay the status of the characters to the audience. Third, an excellent selection of music completes the mood felt within each scene. Also, the unearthly prescence of the dead King Hamlet, through the voice of Paul Briggs, holds the listener's attention with little difficulty. Last but not least, the lighting is effective. Controlled by Steve Fuchs, the shadows and spots assist the understanding of the play as a whole.

These technical achievements are nothing without the dedicated performances given by Claire Pitt as Gertrude the queen and Robert Bull as Claudius the king. Dave Johnson as Polonius. Cleo Patterson as Laertes, and Emily Grush as Ophelia work together to represent their little family to the audience. Graduate student Steve Brown joins the cast as Horatio, Prince Hamlet's confidant.

For those of you who were here last year, Dale Daigle delivered a wonderful production of Athol Fugard's My Children! My Africa!. He continues with Hamlet this year to furthur the education of the students of W.C. He also has wanted to do this for a long time and felt that the time, place, and people were finally right.

Support your fellow students and attend the performances held on April 20, 21, and 22 with the curtain going up at 8 p.m. on all nights. The play is being held in Tawes Theater. Ω

"Changes" from 1

nary kind of major that has foreign language at its center. It involves applying the language to the study of another discipline or disciplines ... I think it's intended to encourage interdisciplinary study with a focus on the Humanities. We continue to believe that this is not meant to replace or compete with the currently existing International Studies major."

The reorganization was brought about by a number of factors. An external review of the department, which endorsed changes like the aforementioned, was conducted in February. There has also been much of what Shivers referred to as "self-study," examination of the curriculum by the Department itself, occurring within the Department within the last two years. Also, some newer faculty members have areas of expertise not adequately suited by the current curriculum. In addition, students, especially majors, have been showing increased interest in having more courses which are focused more on foreign culture than simply literature. Said Shivers, "[The new program] is more reflective of, I think, the direction in which foreign language programs are going across the country."

In addition to the more unilateral changes, some logical changes of details have been made as well, especially those concerning course numbering and organization. For example, French 391 and 392, composition and conversation courses, have been renumbered as French 301 and 302, thereby placed numerically below the Introduction to French Literature courses, currently numbered 301 and 302. The Literature courses will be numbered 303 and 304.

Foreign Language courses have also been reconfigured, especially in the Spanish Department. The subject matter covered in the current courses will be reorganized into four new courses: Spain and the New World, Modern and Contemporary Spain, Theater and Poetry in Spain, and The Novel and Short Story in Spain.

Two more culturally based courses, conducted in English, have also been added. The list of such courses increased this semester with additions such as French 306 (Contemporary France), and, in the fall, the 400-level courses on The Film in Spain and Latin America and Special Topics in International Literature and Culture will join them, pending Board approval.

According to Dr. Shivers, the departmental restructuring will require no changes in the faculty. The new Foreign Languages, Literature, and Culture Department will nevertheless have to deal with faculty changes at its outset which are not caused by the restructuring. Assuming no further restructuring, at least one adjunct professor will have to be hired to cover the classes formerly taught be professor Jefford Vahlbusch. In addition, a second adjunct will have to be added to take over the classes currently taught by Dr. Colin Dickson, who will be on subbatical in the fall. An additional adjunct may have to be hired in the spring to cover the FLS 200 course, Introduction to Language (linguistics), a class which has traditionally been taught by Vahlbusch. The department has been issued a promise that this situation is only temporary.

The Board of Visitors and Governors meets April 21 and 22. With their approval, the proposal stands to gear W.C.'s language department more toward familiarity with foreign culture than simply proficiency with foreign language. Ω

The Peer Educators are sponsoring two young speakers who will speak about their lives and being infected with the HIV disease. The discussion will be held on Saturday, April 22, from 7 to 8 p.m. in the Student Center. They will tell their stories and you can ask questions.

HOROSCOPES

Aries (3/21-4/19) You slovenly, lazy, procrastinating, dillweed! Get off your fat butt and do your fraggin' work, for chrissakes!

Taurus (4/20-5/20) Don't think for a minute that anyone has been fooled by your guise. We all know you're a crypto-fascist. Why don't you take a long goose-step off a short pier, you jack-booted, shave-pated, Nazi pus-nodule.

Gemini (5/21-6/21) Stop being a group-thinking, elitist, J Crew-wearin', herd animal, jerko.

Cancer (6/22-7/22) Do fries come with that shake? Do us all a favor and start wearing more clothing.

Leo (7/23-8/22) If incoherence is a virtue, then you are a saint.

Virgo (8/23-9/23) This is the week to give in to your lust for power. Eventual world domination is a possibility.

Libra (9/24-10/23) The Ayatollah of Rock 'n Rollah says that you are a tool.

Scorpio (10/24-11/22) If you included more fiber in your diet on a regular basis, you would rectify that little flatulence problem.

Sagittarius (11/23-12/21) You stink and draw flies. Try washing your feet every now and then.

Capricorn (12/22-1/20) Shape up, dorko!

Aquarius (1/21-2/28) You think you're so tough; what will you do when you meet up with a real badass who is intent on tearing your limbs off and putting them back on in new and intersting ways? Do what you always do: run crying to mommy.

Pisces (2/19-3/20) Think of your own horoscope; I've got some kind of gastrointestinal problem I have to go take care of.

by Shade, the Deep Spawn, and the Ayatollah of Rock 'n Rollah.

Two summer positions are available to work with housekeeping for the whole summer. Call Lynne at x 7851 or pick up an application from housekeeping.

Friday night
7 p.m.

VELCRO WALL AND BUNGEE RUN EXTRAVANGANZA

Prizes will go to the top three participants in each event.

Karaoke in the Student Center until 1 a.m.
Come on out to the Kent Circle for a night of fun and then karaoke 'til you drop.
No charge

COVE SPECIALS

April 21 – 30

- 16 oz. Gatorade & Snapple $17.50 / case
- Healthy Choice Turkey & Roast beef $4.99 lb.
- 32 oz. Gatorade $16.50 / case
- 4" Kaiser Rolls $2.45 / doz.
- 20 oz. sodas $14.50 / case
- 8" Sub Rolls $1.95 a 1/2 doz.
- 2 liter sodas by the case $9.50 / case
- Croissants $2.25 a 1/2 doz.
- Healthy Choice Ham $3.99 lb.
- Bagels $2.50 a doz.

REMINDER: LAST DAY TO CHARGE IS APRIL 30!
STOCK UP NOW FOR EXAM WEEK!

We Get You Discounts!

The Dynamic Discount Duo, Kevin and Jeff, roam Chestertown in search of bargains for students.

Kevin: Can you tell us the name of the store.
Susan: The Pet Shop.
K: What kind of stuff do you sell here?
S: Mostly aquariums, fish, and a few pet supplies.
K: Have you noticed how a lot of pets come into season? Like during Easter, a lot of people have rabbits and they want a lot of rabbit stuff? Does that happen?
S: A lot of people wanted rabbits, little baby ducks, and little baby chicks for Easter, but they couldn't get them.
K: You don't sell any kinds of mammals, do you? You just sell fish?
S: We take orders. If people want a hamster, gerbil, rabbit, any kind of bird, you let us know what sex you want, the color, some description of it and we can get it for you.
K: What about a dog or a cat? Can you order those?
S: No, we refer everybody to the humane society. If somebody has puppies for sale or kittens for sale, we put signs up.
K: So you don't believe you should sell animals like that since there's so many of them out there?
S: I don't think you should sell any like that. You should give them away. Get yours neutered or spayed. There's so many of them that don't have homes now.
K: Do you get a lot of students here who want to buy supplies for their animals? Or for themselves for that matter?
S: A lot of the college students want the little Betas in a bowl or these little lizards we have or a frog or a small aquarium. They come over quite often for them. We give them discounts.
K: Wait a minute! You give them discounts?
S: You can get a student discount if you bring your ID card from the college. I really haven't gotten [illegible] in! and I could really use a chew toy.
K: How well do you think animals can adapt to college life? There's a lot of students that are thinking about getting animals but aren't sure how well they'll do in a dorm room.
S: You have to check with your dorm supervisor first. Most of them only allow aquariums, or anything you can keep in an aquarium. I know a few of them keep snakes over there, I don't know if anyone knows they have them, but there are quite a few snakes. We sell a lot of mice to feed them with.
K: That's not a pleasant thought. I don't know if you keep track of music videos or anything, but there's a semi-new music video out by a group named Weezer, and they get a bunch of dogs to just run through the video. Do you ever get students in here that want to re-enact that themselves, and just want to borrow twenty dogs or something?
S: Never had anybody ask.
K: Is there any way to rent a dog for two weeks to see if that dog will be okay? And if it doesn't work out, they'll be able to return it?
S: You'd have to check with the humane society. They take care of all the dogs.
K: Do you sell that horse hair shampoo that a lot of people actually use on themselves these days? Have you heard about this?
S: No, but we have hoof cream, for hand cream.
K: Can you explain what happens with that? I know a lot of people might think it's a joke when I say that people wear dog collars, but it's true. And people also use this stuff.
S: It smells good, it's real soft, it makes their hands real smooth and nice.
K: Human beings put this on their hands and skin?
S: Yes.
K: And it says 'hoof'. Hoofs! For God's sakes, hoofs, Jeff!
J: Hoofs.
K: Jeff, do you have hoofs?
J: No.
K: And this is originally made for horses?
S: Yes.
K: And then some genius was putting it on a horse, and he realized that he really liked it, and started selling it to people.
S: Yes, a lot of people use it.
K: Do you get a lot of people in here that buy this for their horses, or do you think that most people buy this for themselves?
S: They buy it for themselves.
K: Do you use it?
S: No.
K: Why not?
S: I like what I use, so I just haven't tried it.
K: Jeff, are you gonna use this stuff?
J: Hoofs.
K: I'm not really into the hoof thing. What else do a lot of people seem to buy?
S: People buy the little lizards, then they come back and buy a lot of crickets. We sell crickets to feed them with.
K: How much is a cricket?
S: Twelve for a dollar.
K: So what's that? Less than ten cents each? If I wanted to get a pet cricket, it'd cost me a measly dime?
S: That's right. It wouldn't live very long, though.
K: Do you have any leashes small enough to be put on a cricket?
S: No, but we do have food for them.
K: Food for crickets? What's the lifespan of a cricket?
S: About eight weeks.
K: Nice little pet to have for about two months. Do you ever have any wacky human rights activists come in here and say: 'How would you like to be put underwater, sealed up in a plastic bag, and given a plastic diver?'
S: No, people get real fanatic about their fish, though. If they lose a ten cent fish, they bury them, they cry over them. They'll come in and buy five dollars worth of medicine to take care of it.
K: Do they sell little coffins for the fish or anything? Have you ever been asked to do a memorial service for a fish or anything? Our fish who art in heaven?
S: No, not yet.
K: Would you sell any kind of animal? Like, say I put Jeff in a cage. Do you think you could sell him?
S: If it's legal, and someone wants him, we'll sell him.
K: You think you could sell Jeff?
S: I don't think I'd have too many requests. Too big.
K: Are you insulting him or something?
S: No, it'd take a lot to feed him, though.
K: Jeff, how much does it take to feed you?
J: Not very much.
K: Would you like to be somebody's pet?
J: Okay.
K: Do you have any questions?
J: Has anyone tried to market a leash for fish? Like an aquarium on wheels, and you put a leash around it, and take the fish for walks?
S: No, but we do have portable little aquariums with handles on top, that children can take with only a couple fish in it.
K: Like an aquarium lunchbox?
S: Yes. A traveling aquarium.
K: Take it anywhere? That'd be fun.
S: You can put your lizards in it, take them around.
K: You got that Cuban Tree Frog there, that thing is fat! That's a bad man right there. They eat the crickets?
S: They love the crickets.
K: If you put a cricket in there, you'd just watch them go to town on it?
S: Yes, they'd all chase him.
K: Can you race them? Like put a cricket at the end of it, and get the two Cuban Tree Frogs to race?
S: One would go hungry.
K: But one would get the cricket. How fast do those things run?
S: The lizards go pretty fast. You wouldn't be able to catch them if they got loose, unless they stopped to eat. The frogs are pretty slow.
K: Could those lizards damage a human being? Could they bite your finger off or anything?
S: No, they're very harmless. No teeth, won't bite.
K: No teeth?
S: No.
K: How do they eat?
S: They have a lip. A hard lip. They just stick their tongue out, and grab it, and pull it in.
K: Jeff's got a lip, Jeff, you don't have any teeth, do you?
J: No. That's how I eat Cheerios, though.
K: There's a student discount here. That's ten percent. Bring your ID card. You would encorage the students to come here and fall in love with the animals.
S: If there's anything you want, and you don't see it, we'll order it for you.

During final exam week, the Bookstore will have a

Used Book Buyback

It will run from Tuesday, May 9th until Friday, May 12th. A representative of the used book company will be at the Bookstore from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. on those days. Your ID will be required.
Unfortunately, it has become necessary for us to caution all students at this time: DO NOT leave your texts unattended and WRITE your name clearly inside the front cover of all your books. Should you have any books taken, immediately contact the Bookstore and the Public Safety office.

c.r.u.d.

creative ranting under duress. by Pete Torigoe

Ah, the joys of living in Kent ouse! Really, it's a wonderful experi- ce: everybody should try it! That y I can get out.

I mean, look at all the #$%* they t us through over here! Take today, ursday, April 20, as an example. We struck by the first of God's plagues! n not sure why He sent that massive arm of bees...we don't have THAT ny slaves trapped in the stairwells and if we could get access to the sement or roof, they wouldn't have sleep piled on top of each other like st! We give them all plenty of work each morning there's a new pile of r bottles and cans and the occa- nal Mad Dog bottle to go out to the cycling bins.

Boy that one paragraph has lot of le issues for me to %$#*& about . here should I begin...?

How about the quarantine? I an, I came back to my room after gh and expected to find some chalk dline outside of my window! And en they don't let any of us leave for few hours...oh well, I didn't need to to class, anyway. But still, it was t as &% in here with all the win- ws and doors shut! They didn't need armed guards and dogs patrolling keep us in here. And the chemical owers were a bit extreme...

And to top it all off, even with the nic sprays that turned all of our fur- ture and clothing completely white, ni bees are back! And they're #*@%ed ff Now they've probably mutated nd formed this communal mind or mething...maybe they'll be elected r secretary of the sophomore class ext year...I wonder how they'd fit in President Hoffman's Cabinet...or ri desk drawer...

Well, at least the bees helped everybody get their minds off the alco- l ban in Kent. Of course, because ost of us are under 21, we don't drink ny alcohol, so it doesn't really affect u... but still, for those 4 or 5 people n the dorm who can drink legally (not ut they do, either, nobody in Kent would ever jeopardize their school-work by being intoxicated), the ban is a bit extreme! $25 for an empty bottle?!?!? I mean, doesn't everyone keep the first bottle of Absolut they finish? Oh, not that anyone here would know anything about that....And it's not even the residents of Kent who are really the problems! It's really people from other dorms who drink here! They come over and drink in the first floor lounges while the rest of us are trying to study! Wait, we don't have lounges on the first floor...um, they drink in the stairwells! No, we don't give the slaves beer, no one deserves to be forced to drink Beast...not that I would know that it tastes like %$#* or anything...

Now on a more personal level of complaining. My room must have more people pass through it than the CAC and Smith combined! Most of the time we don't mind at all, but when it's three in the morning and you're just starting to write a paper (not that I would ever procrastinate that much) it's kind of annoying to hear someone banging their head repeatedly into the window trying to get through because they don't realize there's glass there!

OK, the rest of the dorm residents are threatening me now, so I have to take back everything I just said. Kent's not that bad, honest! I mean, we have plenty of space to throw frisbees and kick around hacky sacks outside...and there's that wonderful porch to watch sunsets from...except for all the broken bottles...not beer, of course! Did I mention nobody in Kent would drink? Ω

Campus Voices

Question by Sarah Bell

Photos by Debra Spence

This week's question: If you were Sarah Bell and needed to come up with a question for "Campus Voices," what question would you ask?

Why aren't there more bars or clubs in Chestertown? Why doesn't the Washington College student body rage and take over Chestertown?

Edmund Hicks
Junior

Why are you torturing people with these questions?

Amy Peterson
Sophomore

Why do plants have to reproduce asexually? And why am I so damned allergic to it?

Dawn Simms
Junior

What time are you gonna start drinking when your thesis is officially accepted or you pass comps, and where will you do it?

Luther Dudich
Senior

Which counts more – A wish on a birthday cake or a wish on a dandelion? And is it the nature of wishing, if you wish for one wish more than once, for the wishes to cancel each other out?

Jen Ward
Freshman

Who would you fire first from Washington College, and why?

Keith Morgan
Senior

laundry drycleaning
Park
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD 21620
ROOM SIZE CARPETS
NEXT TO THE COURT HOUSE

Loyola
Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at
Mornec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

We Proudly Serve STARBUCKS COFFEE
SPRING FLINGS!
• Amaretto & Cream Soda
• Amaretto Orange Italian Soda
• Boston Gold
• Cherry Cooler
• Chocolate Mint Cream
• Cranberry Cooler
• Banana Orange Cream Soda
8 AM to 5 PM - Mon. Sat.
10 AM to 3 PM - Sunday
10% discount with W.C. ID
the Cellar
coffee bar & bakery

Stroll down WINE ALLEY
All Wines Discounted Every Day!
DeLoach - Sonoma
White Zinfandel $7.50
Gewurtraminer $7.50
Pume Blanc $8.50
Cabernet Sauvignon $11.50
Chardonnay $14.00
Domaine Chandon - Napa
Carneros Blanc de Noir $12.00
Napa Valley Brut $12.00
Chandon Reserve $17.75
Sonoma Cutrer Chardonnay $12.00
Pine Ridge Chenin Blanc $6.00
Far Niente - Napa
Chardonnay $24.75
Cabernet $32.50
ADDITIONAL DISCOUNTS FOR CASE ORDERS AND WINE SOCIETY MEMBERS
DOWNSTAIRS AT THE IMPERIAL HOTEL 778-5600

Killing Time: The Broadcast connection between W.C. and Sewanee

Kevin Hoffman

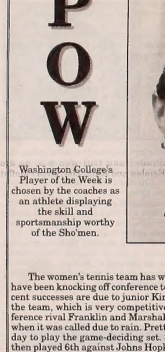
When students are frustrated by boredom and can't find anyone interesting to talk to, help is usually only as far away as their computer. Broadcast has become an interesting pastime on the campus of Washington college. It is a semi-real time communications program that was inititated on campus in 1992 and has been active ever since. An interesting quirk of the system is the connection between Washington College and the University of the South in Sewanee, Tennessee. The connection was established as a result of a mutual deal between the colleges and Apple computers, the company that makes Macintosh, the standard computers on both campuses. The Elm did a random poll of students at both colleges to find out their opinions of Broadcast in hopes of gaining a better understanding of what makes the system so popular.

One aspect of Broadcast that students seem to particularly enjoy is the anonymity. This gives shy people the chance to cut loose and be social without the pressures of a face to face encounter. One of the students I talked to, who usually goes by the alias "High Plains Drifter" in Caroline, said he likes Broadcast because "You can talk to people who otherwise would never talk to you."

Of course, the fact that your real name isn't on your messages also means that generally you don't have to take any real-world responsibilty for you actions on the system. High Plains Drifter addressed this phenomenon by saying with typical broadcast straight-talk, "It's more interesting. I insult them. They get mad. They hang up. So I insult somebody else." People are allowed to try on different personalities. If someone gets a bad reputation under one phony name, they can just change it and take on a radically different personality. This gives rise to some of the negative aspects of this new technology.

Beyond general insults, Broadcast also tends to be used as a tool for getting hook-ups, or sometimes, in the case of people communicating between Sewanee and Washington College, as a sort of high-tech version of phone sex. "Bittersweet" in Reid Hall was polled about her discussions with students at Sewanee and said, "I don't really talk to them, I know that when they do write me messages, they are pretty crude, and I rarely respond." Of course, it's not all Sewanee, and it's also not just men. Plenty of people, men and women alike, engage in this sort of activity at both schools, and probably at schools around the country. When both people involved are looking for that, it is generally well received, but random acts of obscenity are usually frowned upon by Broadcast users.

People are often very secretive about their identity, and in many cases will not reveal their real names even when asked. Bittersweet wouldn't give her real name and said, "I don't want anybody that reads The Elm to know my name on Broadcast, or that I actually talk to friends on this..." This seems to imply that there is somewhat of a social stigma among her group of friends regarding Broadcast. Another reason people typically will not reveal their true name is because it would prevent them from participating in the aforementioned Broadcast games (name-calling and dirty talk).



Broadcast is not all negative though, and many people have found it to be a fun social tool and general stress reliever. "For Your Eyes Only" at Comptel Center at Sewanee said, "Well ... I usually talk to the same one person at Washington College, which is fun because you can be anything you want on it. We send email too." So it is possible to make friends over the network, despite the insensitive shenanigans of a few Broadcast-abusers. "Jim Creecy Is Not My Father" at Cleveland Dorm in Tennessee said, "I think that it is neat how we can communicate with people from other colleges to find o about their experiences."

In fact, some people find that th friends from over the computer c serve a different function than th usual everyday pals. "Sweet n Cts/Trz/Shop at Sewanee said, like it a lot because if there is som thing I want to talk about, but n with anyone here, I have my own vate friend." In this way, t anonymity and long distance betwe colleges helps to breed a sense of in macy. People are free to discuss an thing they want without fear of getting back the wrong people.

The sense of distance an anonymity has occasionally be bridged by students at the scho "The Poet" in Cardinal Residence sai "I think it's cool to be able to talk [students] from other schools... an you're able to get to know them... yo can call them and I know some peop have gone to visit them ...."

Occasional visitation between co leges, despite the ten hour road tr has become a fun excuse for studen to get away from the college for a lo weekend. Matt Kory, a student wh would reveal his real name but not h Broadcast identity, said, "It was a lo trip, but it was fun because I we with friends. We just hung around an met people. It was kind of strange in sense that you're actually meet these people face to face, and you don have to wait two minutes to get a rep from them. You can actually have real conversation."

Still others seem completely obli ious to the whole Broadcast phenom non. "Suzy Greenburg" in Benedic Dorm said, "Where is Washingto College anyway? I had no idea w were hooked up with you." Ω

Washington College's Player of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an athlete displaying the skill and sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

The women's tennis team has won seven of their last eight matches. They have been knocking off conference team after conference team. Their most recent successes are due to junior Kim Prettyman. Prettyman is seated 6th on the team, which is very competitive this year. The Shorewomen played conference rival Franklin and Marshall early last week, and the match was tied when it was called due to rain. Prettyman had to return to the courts the next day to play the game-deciding set. She played their number 6 and won. She then played 6th against Johns Hopkins the following day and won again. She was on a roll. Two days later, Prettyman played number 5 against conference Western Maryland. She again held strong on the courts, winning both sets 6-2 and 6-4. She held her ground and gave up nothing to get the wins for the Shorewomen. Prettyman is a Junior at Washington She comes to W.C. from Delsware where she played tennis. This is her third season on the team and despite injury to her wrist, causing her to sit out during the fall season, has made her place on the Shorewomen squad.

Prettyman was not alone however, The wonder duo of Paulina Sierra and Anabel Flores has yet to lose a match alone or in doubles. Against Western Maryland they beat out the number one doubles, 8-1. They have been a force to be reckoned with on the courts, gaining recognition from the conference and the school.

The Conference also honored Jill Shultz recently. Despite a difficult season and many hardships for the entire team, Shultz has played solid d-fense and shaken things up on offense. Against Western Maryland and nationally ranked Gettysburg she picked up 12 ground balls and scored off a free position on the eight meter for her first goal of the season.

Washington College baseball hits Dickinson out of the ballpark

Team advances to 6-5 in Centennial Conference

Erika K. Ford

A road trip on Tuesday to Pennsylvania resulted in an easy win for the Shoremen, who whipped the Haverford Fords. Outhitting and outscoring their opponents in a decisive victory, the baseball team improved its record to 9-9.

In the Centennial Conference, Washington is 6-5. Since returning from Florida for spring break games in mid-March, the Shoremen have gone 8-5.

Andy Moore and Jarrett Pasko each took a turn on the pitcher's mound to allow just five hits in the game. The Fords could manage just five hits off the slants of the two Shoremen hurlers.

Leading a fifteen hit attack for Washington was third baseman Scott Quinn, who collected five hits and an additional walk for a perfect day at the plate. Among his hits were two doubles and a grand slam home run. Quinn also had five RBI.

Last Saturday, Washington split a doubleheader with Dickinson. Losing the first game by a close 4-3 score, the guest Shoremen were able to salvage the second game, 5-4.

Pitching for the locals, Scott Quinn was the victim of some shoddy fielding, and Dickinson scored four unearned runs, just enough to defeat Washington, 4-3. The first game in the doubleheader went eight innings.

Sean Tyzsko led the Shoremen offense with two doubles at bat.

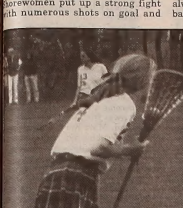
Despite walking 12, pitcher Brian Rush allowed just four hits and struck out 10 in the 5-4 victory in the second game. Key hits in the 5th inning by Rush and Andy Moore let Washington to a 5-1 lead. A three-run rally by Dickinson in the 6th was not enough to overcome the Shoremen and Rush held on for the 5-4 win.

In a busy upcoming week, the baseball team will travel to play Western Maryland tomorrow afternoon.

On Tuesday, the Shoremen will host Swarthmore at 3 p.m. On Wednesday, they will come out swinging at 2 p.m. against Gallaudet at home. Ω

5K run/walk for MDA
Saturday, April 22, 10 a.m.
Meet at the dock at the end of High Street between 9:30 and 10 on Saturday morning.
The cost for running is $10 and the first 50 to sign up will receive a free T-shirt. All proceeds go to MDA. If you have any questions, call Matt Murray at ext. 8784.

DISCOUNTS INCREASED HEAVILY
15% To 40% OFF
Atlantis
patagonia
Columbia
Comfort Walking Canes
Old Towne® Canoes & Kayaks
Whole Earth® Outback Felt Hats
BAY TO BAY TRADERS
207 Cross St., Chestertown, MD (410) 778-3442



Future looking bright for lacrosse teams

Shorewomen are moving on up

Beth Moser

The women's lacrosse team had another tough week, but their improvements continue to show. In their game against Widener on Thursday, April 13, the ladies of W.C. held their opponents to a score of 9-6. Unfortunately, the game against Haverford on Saturday, April 15, wasn't quite as pretty on the scoreboard, ending with a loss of 17-3.

In the Widener game, the Shorewomen put up a strong fight with numerous shots on goal and great defense. Defensive players Jill Schulte and Liz Mangano tore up and down the field with speed that left the Widener attack wings in the dust. Marcia Filoon and Elizabeth Moga badgered the opposing goalie with shots from above, behind, and the sides. Many of the Shorewomen, including Brigid Kolish, Becky Stephens, and Amy Scarlett, participated in well organized drives to move the ball through the midfield and near the goal. The team worked well together and showed the talent they are still bringing about. The dedication and effort put forth by our women lacrosse players is certainly impressive.

Brigid Kolish prepares to take a penalty shot as Elizabeth Moga looks on.

The Haverford game was a different story. Freshman defense wing Amy Hartsock felt that "we just weren't coming together for us, [but] we certainly have the determination and ability to come out better than we did." Coach Feyerherm shared a similar outlook stating that "we came out flat and weren't able to dig ourselves out of the hole." It is very discouraging to start a game off badly and it is not always possible for the team to fight back effectively. However, sophomore attack Elizabeth Moga feels that the second half went off better than the first.

The other team was a worthy opponent, but as Moga commented, "we still made some of their girls look a little better than they were." This offensive player did her fair share to push Haverford down though; Moga ended up scoring all three goals for W.C. The rest of the team tried to make the goals go further, but the connections in the midfield were poor and series of complete passes were few and far between.

Impressively, the team still maintains their positive outlook, a hard task when looking specifically at their record. Coach Feyerherm has often expressed her belief and confidence in the team and she feels that the Shorewomen have the ability to play with skill and heart. Freshman Amy Hartsock thinks that "we are definitely going to pull it all together soon."

Continue to show support for the dedicated women lacrosse players by attending their games and cheering loudly. Appreciation is due to Paul O'Hearn, Paul Bayne, Brett Gaba, Nikki Santelli, and Liz Mangano's mom for their support. Ω

Shorewomen tennis beats Johns Hopkins and Western Maryland

Erika K. Ford

Against two Centennial Conference opponents last week, Washington's women's tennis team had two strong wins. The women are now 7-3.

Playing Western Maryland at home on Saturday, the Shorewomen won 8-0. At the no. 1 position, Anabel Flores beat her opponent Amie Chilcoat by 7-5, 6-2 scores. Paulina Guerra, Washington's no. 2 singles player, beat Anne Plunkett 6-2, 6-1. Diana Clausen played no. 3 and had 6-2, 6-1 wins over Karen Fulton. Amy Rizzitello stepped onto the court at no. 4 and shut out Carrie Frith, 6-0, 6-0. At no. 5, Kim Prettyman beat Callie Thompson 6-2, 6-4. Melissa Ellwanger played no. 6 for the Shorewomen and beat Becky Dult, 6-3, 7-6.

In doubles against Western Maryland, Flores and Sierra combined for an 8-1 win, as did Clausen and Prettyman. Ellwanger and Rizzitello played the third set of doubles and won 8-6.

Against Johns Hopkins last Thursday, Washington sent the visiting team away with an 8-1 loss. All singles matches were captured by the Shorewomen. Flores played singles against Zeena Abdi and beat her 6-2, 6-0. Sierra won 6-3, 6-0 against Jackie Frey. Clausen was victorious over Amy Schuster 6-4, 6-0. Rizzitello won 6-0, 6-3 over Melissa Arees. Vicky Roth, at no. 5, beat Amanda Smith, with scores of 3-6, 6-3, and 7-6. Prettyman won her singles match 6-2, 7-5.

In doubles against Hopkins, Washington won two out of three.

Flores and Sierra combined to win 8-1. The Rizzitello and Prettyman duo beat their opponents 8-4. Roth and Ellwanger fell to Hopkins in doubles, 8-3.

As this article was going to press, the Shorewomen were away playing on Ursinus courts. On Saturday afternoon, the women take on Dickinson away. As the regular season draws to a close, Washington's final home match will be a conference competition against Swarthmore on Wednesday at 3:00 p.m. On Thursday they'll travel to play Trenton State. Ω

The last day to charge at The Cove is April 30, 1995 per request of the Business Office.

W.C. spirit lives through rough season

Ken Pipkin

For the Washington College Lacrosse team, it has been a rough season so far. With a record of three wins and nine losses, it looks to be the first team in a long while to have a losing record. The team lost members due to campus violations, and they had to start almost brand new. The pre-season ranking left us with high hopes that were not fulfilled.

The Shoremen lacrosse team has given its all, though. Even with all of their rough games , they have pulled out some wins, evoking old-style W.C. lax at its best. Don't be bandwagon fans. Go out to the games, scream, holler, no matter what the score. Just like all the sports on W.C.'s campus, these guys are giving it their all. We also can't forget to say thanks to the graduating seniors who've shown us what it means to be true sportsmen in giving 110% all four years. Those men are Matt Zarinko, Jerry Davis, Greg Miller, and co-captains Christian Boone and Jesse Cook. These guys have given it their all this year and congratulations are due to them and the rest of W.C.'s senior athletes for a great job.

No matter the sport, the game is what its all about, and for the lacrosse team, it is found on Kibler field. There is magic out on Kibler field; there is something in the air that you just can't find anywhere else. It's not the air, it's not the grass or the field. It's the love of sports. It's the fans of the past that cheer on today. It is games won in the last second, or even lost in the last second. The voices never leave, because here at W.C., we don't know what the words "give up" mean. It is the endless drums that every one of us sees at every sporting event on campus.

So, let's recap what the Washington College Lacrosse team looks like. We have 10 freshmen, 7 sophomores, and 8 juniors coming back next year. We're losing five graduating seniors. The potential is there and it must be remembered that today's loss is a lesson toward tomorrow's victory. And don't forget to congratulate coach Haus on his first year. He entered a school of Lacrosse and took over a dismantled team. With all that has happened, he did a great job. One year can make a difference.

But don't forget there are two home games left: one next week and one the following week. You can never count the team out, because sometimes the voices come back. And with those voices come the memories, and with those, the legacy to achieve success. Washington College, there is something in the air and it has your name all over it. It's called the love of the game. Ω

Washington men's tennis rules Centennial Conference courts
Shoremen have won last six matches

Erika K. Ford

Much like last year's stellar season on the courts, the W.C. Shoremen's tennis team is once again reaching for the stars and actually taking hold of them.

The team is 13-2 overall, 6-0 in the conference.

The reigning Division III national tennis champions, coached by Tim Gray, have won their last six matches. With the regular season drawing to a close next week, a spot in the Centennial playoffs and beyond is quite secure.

Against Western Maryland on Saturday, the Shoremen buried their hosts with a 9-0 win.

In singles, Miroslav Beran played the number 1 position, crushing Western Maryland's Kevin Bernhardt 6-0, 6-0. At number 2, Michael Kember also was victorious, 6-0, 6-0, over Colin Clark. Buba Soysa stepped into the number 3 spot and beat Craig Eckard, 6-0, 6-1. Andrew King, at number 4, showed Mark Rohme the door with 6-0, 6-0 scores. Number 5 Andrew Moffat again personified the Shoreman spirit with a 6-0, 6-0 win against Rick Estes. Mike Gill, at number 6, solidly defeated opponent Jay Junkins 6-1, 6-2.

In doubles against Western Maryland, three Washington teams won relatively easily. While Kember and King combined to win 8-1, Beran and Soysa beat their opponents 8-2, and Moffat and Gill teamed up to win 8-0.

At Ursinus last Thursday, Washington again won 7-0 and shut out their opponents: Robin Sander, at number 1, won 6-1, 6-1 over Frank Quilley. Number 2 Michael Kember beat Joel Levitas, 6-0, 6-1. Buba Soysa, playing number 3, beat Matt Ung 6-0, 6-0. Number 4 Andrew King beat Josh Hantle 6-1, 6-2. Playing number 5, Andrew Moffat had a 6-0, 6-4 win over Mike Gamble. Number 6 Mike Gill had a 6-1, 6-1 win over his opponent Nirav Pandya. Playing at the number 7 spot, Washington Shoreman Ryan Keppler took on Ursinus's Pete Evanchic.

In doubles versus Ursinus, Sander and Gill won 8-3, as did Kember and King. The Soysa / Moffat combo won 8-0.

Last Tuesday, the Shoremen hosted Georgetown and won, sending the Hoyas away emptyhanded: Robin Sander won 6-2, 6-0 at number 1 against Chris DiCarlo. Damian Polla beat JonJon Chang, 6-1, 6-3. Number 3 Miro Beran beat Kevin Levy 6-1, 7-5. At number 4, Michael Kember beat Georgetown's Mark Bittles, 6-2, 6-2. Number 5 Buba Soysa beat Derek Spotswood, 6-1, 6-0. Shoreman Andrew King at number 6 overtook Jeff Brecy, 6-3, 6-2.

In doubles, Sander and Polla won 8-6, Kember and King beat Georgetown's duo 8-2, and Beran and Soysa earned an 8-3 victory.

As this issue was going to press, the Shoremen were hosting Conference opponent Johns Hopkins in an afternoon home match. Tomorrow, Washington travels to New York State to take on SUNY-Binghamton at noon.

After a week off to rest and polish their skills, the tennis team's regular season ends next Saturday, April 29, when they take on Washington & Lee at home at 11 a.m. Ω on scenic Swan Creek near Rock Hall offers a full care event horse facility with a private atmosphere. We have two stalls available at reasonable rates. Also TB event horses for lease and for sale. Instruction, trailering.

Humphrey's Point Farm

639-2832

W.C.'s women's tennis team
Back row, left to right: Anabel Flores, Kim Prettyman, AnnMarie Malena, Meghan Brumby, and Melissa Ellwanger
Front row, left to right: Diana Clausen, Paulina Sierra, Vicki Roth, and Amy Rizzitello

Scores

Baseball

Washington 3
Dickinson 4

Washington 5
Dickinson 4

Washington 11
Haverford 4

Softball

Washington 0
Ursinus 4

Washington 2
Ursinus 4

Men's Tennis

Washington 7
Ursinus 0

Washington 9
Western Maryland 0

Washington 7
Dickinson 0

Women's Tennis

Washington 7
Western Maryland 3

Washington 8
Ursinus 1

Men's Lax

Washington 6
Gettysburg 21

Women's Lax

Washington 3
Haverford 17

Washington 0
Goucher 25

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Friday, April 21
Baseball vs. Haverford, 3:30 p.m.

Saturday, April 22
Baseball @ Western Maryland, 1 p.m.
Women's Lax vs. Bryn Mawr, 1 p.m.
Softball @ Dickinson, 1p.m.
Women's Tennis @ Dickinson, 1 p.m.
Men's Tennis @ SUNY-Binghamton, 12 p.m.
Men's Lax @ Salisbury State, 1 p.m.
Crew - Murphy Cup

Tuesday, April 25
Softball @ Lebanon Valley, 2:30 p.m.
Baseball vs. Swarthmore, 3 p.m.

Wednesday, April 26
Women's Lax @ Salisbury, 4:30 p.m.
Men's Lacrosse vs. Haverford, 4 p.m.
Women's Tennis vs. Swarthmore, 3 p.m.
Baseball vs. Gallaudet, 2 p.m.

The Washington College

Elm

Volume 66, Number Twenty-five

Serving the College Community Since 1930

Maryland Governor Parris Glendening to be keynote speaker at Commencement

Maryland Governor Parris N. Glendening and his wife, Frances Hughes Glendening, will be honored jointly at the 218th commencement of Maryland's oldest chartered college in Chestertown on Sunday, May 21st, along with William C. Richardson, President of the Johns Hopkins University, who will soon head up one of the largest philanthropic organizations, the W. K. Kellogg Foundation. Governor Glendening will deliver the keynote address at Washington College, which expects to graduate approximately 160 undergraduates and 20 master's degree candidates.

Other honorees include Lynn Margulis, a distinguished biologist who first proposed the symbiotic theory of the origin of the cell, and Admiral Henry P. Laughlin, a distinguished psychiatrist.

Glendening, the 59th Governor of Maryland, and his wife, Frances Hughes Glendening, an attorney with the Federal Elections Commission, both will receive the honorary Doctor of Public Service in recognition of their professional achievements and community service activities.

Mr. Glendening began public service in 1973 as City Councilman and Police Commissioner in Hyattsville, MD. He was elected to the Prince George's County Council in 1974, serving twice as Council Chair. From 1982 until 1994, he served as County Executive of Prince George's County, the only county executive in Maryland history to serve three terms. In 1986, the National Civic League named Prince George's County the "All American City" in recognition of innovative education initiatives, enhanced public safety programs, and an extensive citizen involvement program. In 1990, City and State Magazine named Glendening the "Most Valuable County Official" in the nation.

Among his priorities as Governor of the State of Maryland are education, jobs, public safety, the environment, and a common-sense, practical approach to government. Within his first 100 days in office, Governor Glendening passed the toughest anti-smoking legislation in the nation.

For the past 17 years, Frances Glendening has been active with the Maryland Federation of Business and Professional Women's Organizations, as well as several other community organizations. She is on the boards of Hospice for Prince George's County and Prince George's Suicide Prevention Center and Hotline, and serves as Activities Committee Chair for the University of Maryland Colonnade Society. She is also involved with the Prince George's County Parks and Recreation Foundation, Historic and Cultural Trust, Media and Film Office, and Commission for Families, Children, and Youth. In 1993, she took on the additional challenge of chairing and directing the "Women of Achievement in Prince George's County History" project.

Dr. Richardson came in 1990 to Johns Hopkins, one of the nation's

See "Commencement" on 9

Photo by Alette Walsheck, Courtesy of Kent County Chamber of Commerce

A scene from last year's re-enactment of the Chestertown Tea Party. See related story on page 8.

Board visits for last meeting of year, passes faculty committee restructuring

Rachael Fink

During their last meeting of the year, Washington College's Board of Visitors and Governors set out to accomplish a number of things, including the acceptance of the bequest of the Customs House and the restructuring of the faculty committees.

In a report from the Legal Affairs Committee, chair of the committee Alexander Jones indicated that the estate has agreed not to appeal the Orphans' Court decision which stated that the Customs House and the surrounding property were legally the property of the College. The Board accepted the bequest which includes the Customs House and $200,000 for the upkeep of the property. Further discussion concerning the possible uses for and upkeep of the Customs House followed. See the related story in this issue for more details.

The Board approved the restructuring of the faculty committees, which will allow the faculty to spend less time in committee meetings. Also brought to the Board by the Academic Affairs Committee was a proposal to grant Dr. Robert Janson-La Palme, chair of the Art Department, the position of Professor Emeritus following his retirement. This proposal passed with no discussion and no dissent.

Christian Havemeyer, chair of the Building and Grounds committee, moved that the Board start accepting bid packages for the construction of Daly Hall, the planned academic building, as of June 1. An ad hoc committee including members of the Buildings & Grounds and Finance committees was suggested and approved.

Following the report by Havemeyer, Jones urged the Board members to "stop and smell the roses. This campus has never been lovelier." Jones attributed this to the hard work the members of the Buildings and Grounds committee.

Joyce Huber-Cafritz reported for the Development Committee that given to the Annual Fund is up 50% over this time last year. The College has received $1.5 million in gifts and $1.7 million in pledges. Huber-Cafritz indicated that alumni giving is up 10%, Board giving 75%, parent giving 29% and foundation giving 38% from this time last year. She went on to say that the 1782 Society has expanded from 254 members last year to 285 members this year.

The committee on Admissions and Financial Aid indicated that the freshman applicant pool has increased only slightly from last year. Chair of the committee Mark Schulman said that Admissions has "cut a little bit deeper into the applicant pool this year," but

See "Board" on 9

Board approves '95-96 budget

William Denton, III

At the meeting of the Washington College Board of Visitors and Governors last Friday and Saturday, the budget for the upcoming academic year was approved. The budget, submitted by President John Toll, was approved by a sizable majority of the Board.

This budget, like each year's, was approved after a lengthy process. According to Dr. Steven Cades, Chair of the Faculty Finance Committee, the process begins when all the College's funding requests and all the projected revenues are compiled into a list of estimates for all expected elements of revenue and expenditure for the upcoming year, which is listed on a computer printout about two inches thick. This list is then narrowed into a budget by grouping the revenues and expenditures into a nine-page budget, which summarizes them by categories. Then, a one-page summary of the nine-page budget is drawn up. When the budget is brought into a rough balance by the officials in charge of it (including the Provost, the Dean, and the Vice-President of Finance and Administration), it is brought to the Board's Finance Committee, which may propose changes necessary for the budget to be acceptable. The President then takes control of the budget and revises it. The President submits the final budget to the Board of Visitors and Governors for approval.

Concerning this year's budgeting process, Vice-president of Finance and Administration Dr. Louis Stettler said that it was the decision of the administration to set high goals for revenues. As an example of this, Dr. Stettler cited Washington College's federal funding situation. According to Stettler, Washington College has enjoyed very little federal support recently, whereas the University of Maryland (the school from which Toll came to W.C.) has enjoyed very much. Stettler further said that "[Toll] knows how a school goes about generating increased federal assistance, and he felt it was very reasonable for Washington College to expect... more federal aid." Still, even with the expected increase, the College will not be heavily dependent on federal funding. Said Stettler, "Somewhere in the neighborhood of maybe $300,000... in a budget of $23 million, that's not a lot." The college is not completely dependent on federal aid, though. "There's a contingency in case we don't get that kind of money," said Stettler.

There are several signs which indicate that net tuition revenue, the largest source of income for the College, will see an increase next year. Said Stettler, "The Board of Visitors and Governors has raised tuition...

See "Budget" on 9

Inside This Week's Elm

Thinking through...
In Paul's final column, he considers the Oklahoma City bombing. 3

Faculty departures
Faculty members bid farewell to Washington College. 4

We Fail to Get You Tuition Discounts!
The discount boys try valiantly, tho'. 6

Net Surfing
How to use email over the summer, with the help of a modem. 6

One final note...

The final Elm of the year is now in the hands of the members of the Washington College community. It's been a long year, but we've muddled through... through the issue that never came into existence... through the issue with half of Anita Gottlieb's face in place of Kareem's in Campus Voices... through the issue without page numbers on the inside box... through the issue without the tree...

On the whole, we are proud of the results of our work. We put out 25 papers with no casualties. But it would have been easier if people were willing to write for the paper.

Whether they are readers of Net Surfing or they only look for their friends in Campus Voices, everyone has an opinion on the state of The Elm.

There has been a small staff of writers and editors working on the newspaper this year. Pleas for assistance have been met with, "Well, I would if I had time," or "I don't feel like it."

If you don't like what you see, either get involved or let the Elm staff know what you don't like. We don't know what you don't like unless you tell us. We're holed up here in our office with little contact with the outside world, so we don't really know how you feel about the state of The Elm. Tell us what you like and what you don't like. You can send BlitzMail to "The Elm." We would appreciate any suggestions.

The Elm will need writers next year. If you've considered writing, consider it again. We've found the time to spend 20 hours in this office every week, and we feel confident that the average student can spend a couple of hours writing an article.

To the Editor:

Clarification of curriculum changes

I would like to thank The Elm and William Denton III, who wrote the article, for the extensive coverage you gave the curricular initiatives of the Modern Language Department in last week's edition. It is very encouraging that The Elm is giving such in-depth coverage to curricular changes such as those in our Department as well as the new first-year courses. There were, however, a few points in your article which I feel need to be clarified or corrected.

First with regard to Board approval. Because our Department was proposing a new major, a substantive change, this part of the proposal does need Board approval. Our proposal also included routine course and numbering changes, however, which are not matters of Board concern as I understand it.

Secondly, your article suggested that the Department as a result of these changes is placing less emphasis upon language proficiency. I want to stress that such is not the case. To the contrary, proficiency in a foreign language remains the primary objective of our program, whether a student pursues the more traditional majors or the new Interdisciplinary Culture Studies major. I would also like to point out that the study of a foreign literature is a major component of culture studies and that courses in foreign literature, both in the original language and in translation, continue to be a substantial part of our Department's offerings.

The change in numbering of our advanced language sequences in French, German and Spanish (i.e. 302 to 301, 302 to 301, 302 (which then results in a change in numbering of the Introduction to Literature courses from 301,302, to 303, 304) responds to a perceived need for symmetry in the language offerings (following sequentially from the elementary language courses, 101-102, and the intermediate courses, 201-202). This change was not intended in any way to imply that priority is being given to one over the other. The Department considers both the advanced language sequences and the Introduction to Literature sequences as appropriate entry-level courses into the major. They are taught at the same level, as third-year college courses in the language.

The French 306 course, now numbered 310, (Contemporary France and the Francophone World) is not a new course. It has existed for some time, but this year for the first time was taught in English, thus making it available to more students. It will continue to be taught in this format in the future.

Finally, it is true that adjunct professors will need to be hired to fill an intermediate German course next year, and possibly to teach Introduction to Language in the spring of 1996.

The latter course has been taught in the past at different times by both Professor Vahlbusch and myself. At the present time the Department is interviewing candidates for a position as full-time replacement for Professor Colin Dickson, who will be on sabbatical leave next year. This is not an adjunct position as the article states.

Thank you again for your coverage and for the opportunity to respond to these concerns.

- George R. Shivers,
Chair

The Washington College Elm
Established 1930

Editor-in-Chief
Kathleen E. Meagher
News Editor
William Denton, III
Features Co-Editors
Mindie J. Kaplan and Sarah Bell
Sports Co-Editors
Peggy Busker and Erika Ford

Circulation Manager
Charles K. Bucknor, Jr.
Advertising Manager
Joshua T. Lawrence, IV
Office Manager
Scott Ross Koon
Photo Editor
Debra Spence

The Washington College Elm is the official student newspaper of the College. It is published every Friday of the academic year, excepting holidays and exams.
Editorials are the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief. The opinions expressed in letters to the Editor, Campus Voices and grad do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Elm staff.
The Editor reserves the right to edit all letters to the Editor for length and clarity. Deadlines for letters are Tuesday night at 5 p.m. for the week's paper.
Correspondance can be delivered to the Elm office in the basement of Reid Hall, sent through campus mail or opened over BlitzMail. Newsworthy items should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff.
Phone calls are accepted at 778-8585.
The Elm does not discriminate on any basis.

Thanks for the times, and for the future that is!!

Hey W.C., here is a little something I wanted to leave for all the seniors and the rest of the WC community. It's a thank you as well as a little overview of four years, to all my friends and the people who got me where I am today – Fourteen thousand dollars in debt. Just kidding! Everyone who visits W.C. says "why did you go to Washington College?" Well the reason is this: for the times we had and the times we will have. I'd like to thank all of my Brothers at Kappa Alpha Order and all the rest of my friends who have changed me from the quiet freshman into the senior who always has something to say. I guess that's a good thing. A special thanks to my little brother Matt Murray who puts up with me and make sure that everythings going all right. You're the greatest little brother. But also the school for giving me the chance to be me.

A great man once told me early in my life that there are three things in existence that we will face that are unavoidable; circumstances that we will encounter and grow from, leading us to better lives. I want to share them with you because it makes life a lot simpler and easier to handle.

The first is the weather. There are days when we will need a friend's help or when we will feel alone, but in time the weather will break and with it the sun will shine through, helping us find happiness. All of us have our share of good and bad weather, but even with all the rain, the sun seems to shine brightly through, along with our achievements. Around W.C. there are people with all talents and those are things we need to remember and celebrate. But most of all, people must realize that we need to care for one another in the community we call Washington College. With all of the rain we experience Washington shines on, with the help of those around us and the dreams we share.

This brings me to the second point that you need to remember: the presence of critics. These people will find faults with those things that you do in life, no matter how hard you try to please them. They will not appreciate the effort that you give. But at the same time there will be others who will appreciate you for the attributes you hold and express throughout your life. At Washington College, whether on the playing field or in the classroom all of us find these critics and with diligent effort we find the way to delight them. Washington gives us the time and ability to communicate with these people and with that the critics become not only our mentors but our friends. Thanks to all of those critics.

In life we will find critics that will not change like we hope but with Washington College we realize that out there, there is someone who finds what we do to be important, and with our abilities we will succeed no matter what. In associating ourselves with these respected people, however, we can learn to live with poor critics because they will only give us the strength to achieve higher goals.

And last but not least there is nothing we can do about time, which all of us seniors are running out of, but time is the most precious commodity of them all. Time is that which we spend together getting to know one another, time is something we spend sharing our hopes and dreams with each other. Time is something we spend driving to Denny's at three in the morning just to order Moons over My Hammy. It was times hitting fungos on the hill in front of Middle Hall at three in the morning; or tray boarding down that same hill in the winter. And times when we called our friends at four in the morning when we ran out of gas and we needed to be picked up. Thanks little brother. These were things we did at Washington College. IT IS WHAT WE ARE.

We all give a lot to Washington in our own way, whether through academics, extra-curriculars, sports, community service or other activities. The last four years together for me have been a time in which I have grown and learned more about myself and those around me. That is what W.C. is all about. With all of these things in our memory we all will be students of life, always learning after our time at Washington College. Oh yeah, the great man who taught me these things was my father, who I thank for those words of wisdom. I hope they will help us all in our journey in life and I thank you for this time allowing me to share with you what I think has been the perfect WEATHER, CRITIC FREE, and TIMELESS experience of my life. God Bless.

- Kenneth Pipkin

This Week on Campus
April 28-May 4

Friday 28
Student Art Exhibit
Lobby of Tawes Theatre
8 p.m.

Saturday 29

Sunday 30
Senior Reading
O'Neill Literary House, 2:30 p.m.
Jazz Band Concert
Norman James Theatre
4 p.m.

Monday 1

Tuesday 2

Wednesday 3

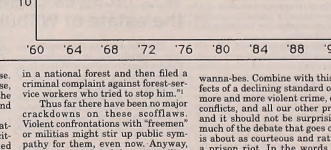
Thursday 4

Thinking through ...

one last column

by Paul Briggs

irst of all, I think the FBI defi- deserves a round of applause. bomb went off on Wednesday, no known suspects or motive be- it, and they had the two main cts in custody by the end of the . That has to be some sort of rd. It is also strangely refreshing d that, unlike Colin Ferguson, ch Goldstein, the Menendez hers or various "pro-life" assas- Terry Nichols and Timothy ch have no apologies.



If there is a lesson to be learned the horror in Oklahoma City, it is there is no such thing as "the tem" or "the Establishment." re are only individuals, as human u and I, working with varying de- of competence and success. ness within institutions they lly did not help create. It is a y that it took something like this ake us realize that.

The most frightening thing about terrorists who planted the bomb is they turned out to represent no eal Islamic fundamentalism, nor e weird cult like the Branch idians or Aum Supreme Truth, a nightmarish parody of a dis- ly American ideal - the "rugged idual," self-reliant and answer- to no one. Some have already nt to wonder if anything said mainstream politicians or lic figures - or simply "talk- o" of public discourse," in the rds of one White House esperson - may have con- ibuted to their state of mind. sident Clinton has recently ounced those whom he called "loud and angry voices" and purveyors of hatred and di- n" for "leaving the impres- n that... violence is eptable." He also suggested t public figures speak less dessly, on the grounds that e dangerously disturbed in- idual might be listening, dy to go over the edge. Much same argument has been e about pornography - that a arbed individual could be oked into committing rape me other sex crime by an un- ally graphic issue of Penthouse. own opinion is that in either case, me should be asked to become the nal guardian of every monster and ine in America.

The bombing has also focused at- tion on the many paramilitary "cit- ot militias" which have formed ss the country in the past few rs. These strange groups arm mselves, dress in camouflage and ct military training to defend mselves against anticipated on- ights by the "tyrannical" federal ernment and the United Nations. re are a number of reasons why movement has spread so rapidly, ng them the passage of federal ntrol legislation and the bloody e to the standoff in Waco two years (which some claim was deliberate ion murder by the authorities). hough they all of course condemn bombing of innocent children, etheless these pretend guerrillas look forward to the day when they ll be provoked into engaging in med revolt. Some of them, naturally, already come to the conclusion t the blast was actually the work of F agents or U.N. peacekeepers, and t this is all part of a larger conspiracy to declare martial law and estab- lish a dictatorship.

Extreme antigovernment senti- ment is by no means confined to these "patriots." Out west, where the gov- ernment owns the lion's share of the land, there have been countless inci- dents of federal law-enforcement offi- cials, forest rangers, tax collectors and other federal agents being harassed, threatened and detained by local au- thorities, militias, and self-styled "freemen." Nye County, Nevada has tried to assert control over federal lands within its boundaries. According to Time Magazine, "Last July 4, Nye County Commissioner Richard Carver, flouting federal law, used a bulldozer to break open a road in a national forest and then filed a criminal complaint against forest-ser- vice workers who tried to stop him.").

Thus far there have been no major crackdowns on these scofflaws. Violent confrontations with "freemen" or militias might stir up public sym- pathy for them, even now. Anyway, when all is said and done, patrolling the back roads of America's national parks is still a lot safer than patrolling the back streets of America's inner cities. Meanwhile, in Montana the lower house of the state legislature tried to require federal agents to warn local authorities 24 hours in advance before taking action against residents. Rep. Helen Chenoweth, a freshman Republican from Idaho (who distin- guished herself during her campaign by declaring that the only endangered species she knew of was the "white Anglo-Saxon male") would go further; she wants federal agents to need writ- ten permission from local sheriffs in order to act within their jurisdictions. In a broadcast on property rights ear- lier this year, Rush Limbaugh was heard to say that "the second violent American revolution is just about - I got my fingers about a quarter of an inch apart - is just about that far away." Because these people are sick and tired of a bunch of bureaucrats in Washington driving into town and telling them what they can and can't do..."

These things don't happen in a vacuum. Even if the bombing had never occured, the administration would have been right to call attention to "the tenor of public discourse." (Of course, then no one would have lis- tened.) It cannot be denied that per- sonal attacks and public buffoonery have become staples in American pol- itics, far more so than has been the case within living memory. This is fu- eled by the relentless cynicism of the news media, as well as the anti- Washington rhetoric (sampled above) of Rush Limbaugh and his myriad wanna-bes. Combine with this the ef- fects of a declining standard of living, more and more violent crime, cultural conflicts, and all our other problems, and it should not be surprising that much of the debate that goes on today is about as courteous and rational as a prison riot. In the words of Pete Hamill: "The most effective politicians - Sam Rayburn, Everett Dirksen, Lyndon Johnson, Robert Taft - em- ployed a basic courtesy in dealing with their opponents. They disagreed on things. They were capable of immense vanity. They knew that, in the end, politics was about power. But they didn't think it necessary to destroy the enemy... The tougher men who truly changed the country, who moved it along, who made it better, did so with clarity of vision and a certain amount of grace... They were always willing to settle for half a loaf. And they each in their own way did think about what was best for the country. They were, after all, Americans before they were Texans or Ohioans or Democrats or Republicans. They respected the con- tract. They respected the presidency. That era is behind us, perhaps for- ever."[1]

Four months into the GOP revolu- tion, the public is as dissatisfied with the government as ever. I'm not sure how many people have a specific quar- rel with a specific government policy, or how they have responded to the "Contract with America" or the National Performance Review. My suspicion is, given the level of public inattention, that neither of these has had much of an impact. For some, this may seem fit revenge on Newt Gingrich and his ilk. To me, it raises the question of how the government, however much it improves, can ever satisfy the demands of the electorate.

This has been building for a long time, and has had an effect on voter turnout, causing it to go from disap- pointing to disgraceful. Most political analysts discount non-voters, whether motivated by contentment (most un- likely) or despair, as politically irrel- vant. Today, however, it would be more realistic to say that they and American politics are irrelevant to each other. Recently I recalculated the percentage of the vote received by the winner in the last nine presidential elections, taking into account those who did not vote at all. The results are shown in the graph below. As you can see, there is a slow, fluctuating, but unmistakable downward trend. The totals in congressional races turn out to be considerably lower (sometimes to bear in mind when discussing the "voter revolution" of 1994). State and local elec- tions, which one might expect to be enjoying higher turnouts, are in fact faring worse still. (I can still remember casting what turned out to be the deciding vote in one local race.)

It was about this time last year that South Africa held its first free elections. At the time I wrote, "If the people of South Africa can pull themselves out of the hole that history has dug for them, then no other people on earth... have any excuse to do otherwise." A year has gone by since then, and of South Africa I can only say: so far, so good. Tribal demagogues have been ei- ther marginalized or de-radical- ized and co-opted. Despite vast cultural differences, a terrible history, and crime and poverty worse than ours, the former last bastion of colo- nial white supremacy is becoming a multicultural showcase that puts us to shame. Part of the reason for that country's miraculous ability to hold it- self together must be the sheer deter- mination of citizens of all races to maintain the cohesion of the society even as they correct its injustices. If we Americans have the same determi- nation, then it can happen here.

This is my last column for The Elm - I graduate this semester, leav- ing a struggling campus for an in- creasingly frightening world. I leave you with this thought from writer Norman Spinrad:

> "There is justice inherent in the universe... except what we put there. All the justice that exists, is what we make. So let us show compassion and sense and courage..."[2] ❑

1Christopher John Farley, "The West is Wild Again," Time, 3/20/95, p.46

2Pete Hamill, "Endgame," Esquire, December '94, p.90.

Candidates for president of the College to visit, students invited to attend forums

On Friday May 5, and Saturday May 6, a number of candidates for the position of president of Washington College will be on campus. An one hour forum will be held for each individual candidate, and you are invited to attend these forums. Because seating is limited, we ask that you RSVP by FRIDAY, APRIL 28. If you do not RSVP, you will not be able to attend. We do not want to eliminate any students but due to logistics, we need to know the exact num- ber of attendants.

In fairness to the candidates, and as a demonstration of your commitment, I strongly urge that you RSVP for all three meetings.

Due to the fact that Seniors will be taking their comps on Friday, there are no scheduled classes. Following is the time of each forum. I will contact those who have responded to let them know of the location.

Please RSVP by blitzmail or call Elizabeth Likens at x8682 (please do the same for any questions). Thank you for your interest.

Friday, May 5
10:30 a.m.
11:30 a.m.
12:30 p.m.

Saturday, May 6
12:30 p.m.
1:30 p.m

More Faculty members to join Fessler, Vahlbusch in leaving W.C.

William Denton, III

The Elm has spent much time and newsprint tracking the departures of Audrey Fessler and Jeff Vahlbusch during the past year. Now, as the academic year draws to a close, several other professors have decided to leave Washington College. Still others are about to see their temporary stay at W.C. draw to a close.

Professor of English Beth McCoy will not be returning in the fall. McCoy, who has been teaching at W.C. for three years, has accepted a full-time tenure-track position at Wichita State University. Said McCoy, "I'm leaving not because I'm unhappy here, with the students of Washington College, but because a full-time job is important... it's very tough for professors, particularly English professors, to get full-time jobs right now." Professor McCoy was one of 600 applicants for the position at Wichita State. About her new position, McCoy said, "It's a good job; I'm very happy with it. It's going to be strange for me because I've been on the east coast all my life... I don't know what I'm going to find."

When asked what has impressed her during her term at Washington College, McCoy said, "the amazing amount of work that my students over the years have done in class... a lot of the real work gets done in class... discussions, and even when you have a class full of silent people, you know that silence means something. One thing I've seen in the past three years that has been very encouraging... is that I think there's a real hunger here for people to actually get together and talk about things... that involve literature very heavily but sometimes aren't seen to. Of course, that sometimes involves people getting upset and bringing emotion into the classroom along with intellect. I've been very impressed with the general willingness of people to confront their own fears, and that's really important. That says a lot for you as you leave Washington College."

Assistant Professor of Mathematics Dr. Sam Smith, a tenure-track professor who has been at Washington College for two years, will also be teaching elsewhere starting in the fall. According to Smith, "I have a new position at Saint Joseph's University in Philadelphia." Dr. Smith said that his new position is "more suitable...to some aspects of [his] research" than his position here. Said Smith, "I certainly enjoyed being here. I think that what's unique about this college is its size and the intimacy between the students and faculty. I think the teaching experience here is different than anything I've had – I taught at the University of Minnesota, which is a huge campus, and coming here was a very big difference from that, and it taught me a lot. I have absolutely no regrets about being here."

Washington College will also be without the services of assistant professor of French Dr. Amy Smiley starting in the fall. Smiley, a tenure-track professor completing her second year at W.C., has opted for a position at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

W.C. is also losing three adjuncts hired to teach only this academic year in the English department: Katherine Varnes, Devon Miller-Duggan, and Melissa Mowry. The Elm was able to interview only one of the departing adjuncts (we were unable to contact two, interviewing the third availed this reporter the rare opportunity to harass his English professor during office hours).

Dr. Mowry, who obtained her graduate degree from the University of Delaware and teaches there as well, said, "Washington College was an interesting experience for me; by and large, my education has been at large universities." When asked about her memories of teaching at W.C., Mowry said, "I had some really wonderful students here... I pushed hard all year, and, at times that was really frustrating for people. But, this semester, I saw really impressive and amazing changes in people's intellectual skills and writing." Dr. Mowry has yet to land a job teaching next year, and, as far as the job market is concerned, she said, "The issue is really one of publication. That's the price of professional admission these days... because writing keeps you intellectually rigorous and publishing keeps you professionally active. I think it's a shame that, in some schools, people use tenure as, essentially, professional permission to be unproductive." Mowry summed up the job market for professors by saying, "it sucks."

Dr. Mowry further said, "People oftentimes draw a distinction between good teaching and good scholarship. It's been my experience that the two, in fact, go hand in hand."

Concerning replacements for the departing professors, Dean Joachim Scholz said that Professor McCoy will be replaced by another visiting instructor who will teach the same classes McCoy currently teaches. Dr. Smith and Dr. Smiley will be replaced by adjuncts for next year, as it is too late to commence a nationwide search for permanent replacements. A nationwide search to replace the adjuncts will be conducted next year. Varnes, Miller-Duggan, and Mowry will not be replaced. Ω

SGA seeks students for SAB

The Student Government Association is looking for Rising Juniors and Seniors to fill positions on the Student Academic Board. One of each for each major. There are 21 majors so we need a Junior and Senior for each major, that is 42 members in all. Once a year this Board submits the State of the Majors Reports.

It is designed to focus on the strengths and weaknesses of each of the college's academics departments. Members of the SAB survey students on their impressions on their major's curriculum, Faculty, Facilities, Internships and senior obligations as well as requesting recommendations and improvements.

The Student Government Association would like to have this report finished by the early spring semester 1996.

If you are an interested rising Junior or Senior and would like more info on the SAB feel free to call me or use BlitzMail.
Please respond before Monday May 3.

Douglas Beckworth
Vice President
Student Government Association

SGA Report

By William Denton, III

On Tuesday, April 25, the Washington College Student Government Association crowded into Casey seminar room #3 (locked out of the Forum) for its final meeting of academic year 1994-95. Only a few loose ends needed to be tied up, other than the development of Bob Brown's proposal for increased administrative student involvement.

The Senior class has settled on a commencement speaker, Maryland Governor Parris Glendening (see cover story, page 1).

The Freshman class has already begun preparation for a fund raiser for the American Cancer Society which will take place in the fall. The "Relay For Life" will consist of students running 30-minute shifts around the track at Kibler Field for a total of 24 hours.

All of the previously vacant positions in the Honor Board have been filled, according to Chair Reuben Stump. In terms of case reviews, however, the Honor Board has been quiet recently.

SGA Parliamentarian Corey Stottlemyer disclosed the Executive Board's decision to discard the recently devised SGA attendance policy. According to Stottlemyer, the SGA Constitution serves as enough of a basis to enforce attendance.

The Presidential Search Committee has narrowed the field of candidates to five. Each of the five candidates is scheduled for an open forum with students, faculty, and staff this weekend (see ad on page 3 for times and other information).

Wednesday morning, Bob B... and Elizabeth Likens met once ... with Dean Joachim Scholz concer... Brown's proposal for increased ... dent involvement in administ... affairs. Since the first meeting, D... Scholz has circulated the propos... several faculty members and ad... trators, including President Toll... Dr. Emilie Amt. According to Sch... the second meeting was ... ductive as the first, and the feed... he received from President Toll ... supportive of the process.

The annual State of the Majors ... ports are expected to become a ... component in the succession of ... plan. Currently, the reports come ... at the end of the academic year, ... that time, said Brown, "They don't ... dealt with because the committee ... done... they have adjourned for ... year." Next year, the Stud... Academic Board, represented in ... SGA by Douglas Beckworth, is ... to expect the reports to be filed by ... January or early February, accor... to Brown. Said Brown, "I think ... SAB, as well as the Curricu... Committee, are both going to play ... parts in a very dynamic year."

The college community is unli... to see the results of the plan next ... though. According to Brown, ... process will most likely require be... three years to be enacted. Brown ... concedes that reforms such as ... typically require an adjustment ... riod after their institution.

But, said Brown, "Liz [Likens] ... I have been very pleased with the ... these meetings have gone. D... Scholz has been very up front wit... he's been very helpful in guiding ... giving us advice, talking about ... ent things we need to address. ... very optimistic about what Liz a... can accomplish in our senior years."

W.C. receives Customs House from the estate of Wilbur Ross Hubbard

The Chestertown Customs House was transferred to Washington College from the estate of Wilbur Ross Hubbard today, Acting President of Washington College John S. Toll announced. The transfer followed an amicable agreement among personal representatives of the estate, Joan Hill and H. Arthur Brown, members of the Hubbard family, and the Washington College Board of Visitors and Governors.

"We are delighted to accept this wonderful gift," Dr. Toll said. "We are honored to recognize Mr. Hubbard's leadership in the field of historic preservation and his long years of service on the Board of Visitors and Governors as we accept this historically significant property."

Wilbur Ross Hubbard, who died December 23, 1993 at age 97, was believed to be the oldest Master of Foxhounds in the world. He was widely known for his historic preservation efforts and he spearheaded many local restoration projects, including the Customs House. A Baltimore businessman, attorney ... delegate from Kent County to ... Maryland House of Delegates in ... 1930s, he had a reputation eff... for the Buck-Bacchus Store, ... Geddes-Piper House, and the Hyn... Ringgold House in Chestertown.

"Mr. Hubbard's contributions ... Washington College were many," ... Dr. Toll. "In addition to his dedic... attendance to the affairs of ... College, first as a member of the Bo... of Visitors and Governors and the ... Visitor Emeritus, he was instrum... tal in the acquisition of the Hyn... Ringgold House to serve as the h... of the College President and he ... ated a charitable remainder trust ... the benefit of the College endowm... We are deeply grateful for his ca... stewardship of the College."

Dr. Toll said an endowment ... provided by the estate will help ... maintain the Customs House in k... ing with a Maryland Historical T... easement on the property. The h... ing will be used for educational p... poses. Ω

The Washington College Campus Christian Fellowship

meets every Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the fellowship room in the basement of Minta Martin.

EUROPE $169 o/w
CARIBBEAN/MEXICO
189 r/t

If you can beat these prices start your own damn airline!

Air-Tech Ltd.

(212) 219-7000
info@aerotech.com

Ask the Librarian: Professor Tubbs explains it all

Mindie Kaplan

What do you do during finals when you're sick of studying and nothing good is on TV? I always pick up a good book. Libraries are good places to find books, right? So why can't you pick up a good recreational novel (or videocassette, or CD) at the Miller Library? So, the first question to Professor Bill Tubbs, head of the library, concerned recreational uses of the library.

Unfortunately, the library can't take the place of the local video stores. Video cassettes don't leave the building and there's not much recreational material as the library doesn't have any room in the budget for it. However, if you like a good Shakespeare, you don't have to be a member of Tatum's class to take the movies upstairs and view them. As for audio cassettes, there are Shakespeare plays and poetry readings for one's listening pleasure. There is a list of them in the reserve readings notebook used in the library.

There are several wonderful plans in the works for the Miller Library. Professor Tubbs is hoping to expand the catalog so that it will allow students to call up the complete text of some articles. There used to be a demonstration of ProQuest at the college, a fantastic research tool that had online articles, but the cost was too high. While there are services that can be reached through the Gateway and allow students to fax articles in to the college, that cost goes directly to the student. "I begin to worry about the student who doesn't have a credit card— or can't afford to use it," Tubbs said sadly. He wants the library to eventually be able to provide these services free of charge to all.

The alternative to faxing in articles is, of course, interlibrary loan, so my next question concerned shipping books from other colleges. It's a lot more complicated than I thought. Many student requests are not free. Charges are often added to cover the cost of photocopying and mailing periodicals, for example. The library picks up these charges whenever possible so that students may feel free to ask for whatever materials they need without worrying about whether or not they can afford it. However, due to budget restraints, these costs are occasionally passed on to the student.

The library is also dependent on the speed of the lending source. The student request is put to the library which is most likely to have the book and lend it quickly. After either a negative reply or a waiting period of three days, the request will go to the second library on the list. This process will be repeated for up to five library systems. Should a request have to go through all five libraries, that could cause a delay of up to 15 days.

The library cuts down the wait by developing a personal relationship with several libraries. "We know who lends quickly," said Tubbs. Usually it takes a week to 10 days for students to receive interlibrary loan requests. The shortest time a request has taken is one day and the maximum recorded time was 25 days.

What all this means to the student is that one must plan ahead when a paper requires outside sources. "One of the frustrating things for us is to have students wait 'til the last minute and then expect [the requested books] here instantly," Tubbs said. "Faxing articles saps money, but you can't fax a book [even if you had the funds]." The delivery of books is a big problem as it is dependent on the often unreliable postal service. Ω

Campus Voices

Question by Jen Ward

Photos by Debra Spence

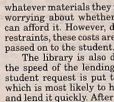
This week's question: Which counts more – a wish on a birthday cake or a wish on a dandelion? And if you wish for one wish more than once, do the wishes cancel each other out?

Birthday cakes. We've already got enough pollen in the air.
I have no idea.

Pete Torigoe
Freshman

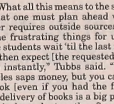
I think any wish is important and the more you wish for it, the more important it must be, so nothing can cancel it out. However your dreams should never be selfish.

Jen Friedman
Junior



A wish on a dandelion probably counts more, but I prefer to wish on 11:11. From personal experience, most wishes don't cancel themselves out if you wish for them more than once. Yay!

Lauren Levine
Sophomore



There are better ways to wish; they don't cancel either.

Jamie Baker
Senior

A dandelion. No, it doesn't cancel because you can wish for anything as often as you like. If you want it, wish for it as many times as you want.

Cary Kelly
Senior

Neither, because whenever I've wished for something by some superstition I never got it. You never get what you want because life sucks.

Scott Culpepper
Junior

laundry drycleaning
Park
RUG and DRY CLEANERS CORP.
107 N CROSS STREET
CHESTERTOWN, MD 21620
ROOM SIZE CARPETS
NEXT TO THE COURT HOUSE

Loyola
Loyola F.S.B.
Washington Ave. at Morgnec Road
Chestertown, MD 21620
410 / 778 - 0513

We Proudly Serve STARBUCKS COFFEE
SUMMER SENSATIONS
Ice Cold Italian Sodas - Taste A Whirl Of Cranberry, Banana and Strawberry Flavors
Hot and Cold Expresso Favorites: - Lattes - Cappuccino - Mochachinos - and Specialty Lattes
Or Try One of Our Honorable Mentions
Everyday Favorites - Croissants - Muffins - Tarts - Bread -Danish
10% discount with W.C. ID
the Cellar
coffee bar & bakery
DOWNSTAIRS AT THE IMPERIAL HOTEL 778-5600

Stroll down WINE ALLEY
All Wines Discounted Every Day!

DeLoach - Sonoma
White Zinfandel	$7.50
Gewurztraminer	$7.50
Fume Blanc	$8.50
Cabernet Sauvignon	$11.50
Chardonnay	$14.00
Domaine Chandon - Napa
Carneros Blanc de Noir	$12.00
Napa Valley Brut	$12.00
Chandon Reserve	$17.75
Sonoma Cutrer Chardonnay	$12.00
Pine Ridge Chenin Blanc	$6.00
Far Niente - Napa
Chardonnay	$24.75
Cabernet	$32.50

ADDITIONAL DISCOUNTS FOR CASE ORDERS AND WINE SOCIETY MEMBERS

Get You Discount!

The discount boys go on their last discount round-up to corral some free tuition.

Well, here it is, the last issue of The Elm and the last episode of We Get You Discounts. For quite some time we've been roaming the Chestertown area, harassing local merchants, and generally making clowns of ourselves at every opportunity. We had the noblest of goals: to save you poor kids a little cash. Yet, during all our hard work and many hours of intense discount-oriented thinking we somehow managed to neglect the obvious. So, for this very special last issue, we are proud to bring you, our finest and most ambitious quest yet... we get you discounts on tuition! We talked to Nancy Toy at the business office via phone, and here's what she had to say about the possibility of cheaper tuition.

Nancy: This is Mrs. Toy, may I help you?

Kevin: Yes, we're doing an article for the paper about tuition, and we were referred to you.

N: Okay, how can I help you?

K: We're doing an article for the paper about the rising cost of tuition. Is there any hope of maybe getting it lowered?

N: You are kidding, aren't you?

K: No, I'm not. Some of us are poor, and can barely afford it as it is. My mother is probably going to have to mortgage the house next year, so I'm thinking along the lines of a discount on tuition, maybe?

N: I think you need to talk to the Board. I think that's a little out of my realm of authority.

K: I was thinking of a literacy scholarship for people who read the paper. Maybe a discount for anybody who's been hooked on phonics? They know how to read. Maybe a ten percent discount? Maybe a two-for-one deal? Maybe buy one semester, get one semester free?

N: I don't think so.

Jeff: Coupons. In the paper. And you can get books free or maybe a semester free or something if you clip the coupon and turn it in?

N: It sounds like a great idea, but I don't think that'll fly either.

K: Is there any way we can speak to Trout? That guy seems to know what he's talking about. Maybe he can get us a break on tuition.

N: Trout hasn't been here since December.

K: Oh, he's out of here?

N: He's out of here.

K: Well, was he giving discounts, or was he not giving discounts?

N: No, he wasn't giving discounts.

K: That's why he's gone, I'll tell you that much.

N: Well, I believe in discounts and coupons and all that too.

K: Then you're the person I want to talk to then.

N: But I don't have the authority to do anything about it. All these decisions are made by our Board of Visitors and Governors.

After our chat with Nancy, we managed to track down Louis Stettler, the new Vice-President for Finance and Administration. We figured he would have the power to make our ultimate discount dream come true.

Kevin: What's this I hear about the tuition going up?

Louis: There's a substantial adjustment in tuition. Of course, there was last year, too.

K: Is there any way of that being reversed, where maybe tuition will go down?

L: I don't think so. Tuition usually doesn't go down.

Jeff: Is there any way we can arrange some sort of discount for students?

L: No, I don't think an institution would do that. Institutions have to be very careful about their published price. Some people won't even look at a college if the full price is too high. It's the sticker-price effect.

K: Like on a car? How about that. What if I washed your car for a discount on tuition? Or what if I got up after this interview and a five dollar bill just happened to drop out of my pocket, and you just happened to pick it up, and you conveniently forgot to return it? Do you think that might make a difference? I'm willing to go that extra mile. We'll keep it hush-hush.

L: I'm not sure we're looking for that type of approach. Clearly there are ways students can reduce the cost of tuition.

K: So in some sense everyone gets discounts? And while that discount may be different for each individual student, the discount is there nonetheless. And I guess that's all that matters.

L: You have to have a good education; that's what really matters.

K: Yeah, a good discounted education. That's what I'm talking about!

So there it is folks, the final frontier in discounts. We made a solemn promise to all of you in the beginning of the year. We told you that, yes, we would get you discounts. We've overcome all sorts of adversity in our reckless pursuit of discounts. We brought in our translator, Joseph, to handle Chinese and Italian restaurants. We went straight to the top and called the White House to get discounts on taxes. We split up and went our separate ways, still managed to get discounts, and then reunited to bring you this last and most triumphant of discounts... discount tuition! So now it's time to hang up our discount jerseys and retire our tape recorder. It's been fun folks. Hope you enjoyed the column. Remember: You never have to pay full price! Ω

Who is Dale Daigle?

Mary Hoffman

Dale Daigle is a name that you are probably familiar with if you often read this paper. He has been in here for everything from being named the chair of the Drama Department to being a Sig pledge. This time, however, he makes it in as one of the newest tenured professors at W.C. He is a director, an actor, the Chair of the Humanities Division, Chair of the Drama Department, a Faculty Advisor, and much more. As Richard McKee observed, "Dale is like [the] Techie king, if you couldn't tell." Dale retorted, "Not by choice," with a knowing smile because he can, as is true for most people in a field like theater, do whatever he must to have a successful show.

His terminal degree, from the university of Hawaii, is an MFA. Dale is trained in traditional Hawaiian and Japanese theater. Before going to Hawaii, he and a friend started and ran a theater company. They ran it for ten years and when he left, they had a half-million dollar budget.

"I found myself spending more and more time raising money and being nice to little old ladies and less and less time doing what I wanted to do. The academic world allowed me an avenue to reclaim some of the enthusiasm that had piddled away by practical necessities of running a theater company." His enthusiasm and directing skill was evident to the cast, crew, and audience of his most recent production, Hamlet.

All of this would be a big accomplishment for anyone, but it had even greater meaning for Dale, who considers himself more of a director than anything else. He says that, although he likes to act, he doesn't have the passion for acting that he feels is required to be an actor; he enjoys directing more than any other aspect of the theater. Dale likes directing because it is like one of his other loves, teaching. "As an artist in America in the second half of the twentieth century, I think that it is almost essential that you be able to bounce back and forth between the educational world and the academic world."

When asked how he felt about receiving tenure, he had a mixed reaction. Dale's feelings seemed to have a lot to do with the "Fessler Case" and some other recent executive decisions. He feels that it is a mixed blessing. He is flattered that the college is committed to him and somewhat relieved to no longer be a junior staff member, in light of what has been happening. The flip side is that he is now obligated to be committed to the college in spite of some of the unfavorable staffing decisions that have been recently made. Dale described the situation well when he said, "I think there are many faculty members who remain disturbed and upset about some of the personnel decisions that have been made in the last year or so. Mainly Andrea Hall [aka] Tex and the fact that Beverly (Dean Wolff) no longer teaches... it does not point the college in the direction I think we would like to see it. These are irreplaceable... who have been able to excite and motivate students." Dale also realizes that the college needs to coordinate with the rest of the world, and understands the give and take that is needed for overall success.

Dale is a sweet man who likes working with students, even if it means that, as he puts it, "most of the theater kids have a key to my office." When I came in to start my interview, he was wearing a fisherman's hat with strands of his long hair sticking out, a tan vest, and had already had a face. This is not to say that he is unkempt or unprofessional, but it yet again demonstrates his laid back, easygoing nature. Throughout the interview, he played with a bolt that had a washer and a nut on it. And when Richard McKee appeared at his door Dale invited him right in, to talk if he wished. Instead Richard got in on the article... But that was fine with Professor Daigle. Ω

The Computing Center * Macintosh PC * The Internet * Telnet * Bulletin Board * Dungeon * MUD * Address * Newsgroups * Gopher * Finger * Archie * Veronica * Pacer * Forum * BlitzMail * LegendMud * Broadcast

Net Surfing

by Mindie Kaplan

So, you want summer Email. It's a good thing to have. Suddenly, your best friend down the hall is five states away and how else are you going to stay in touch (without spending all your hard-earned cash on phone calls, that is)? You tried plugging your network connection into the phone jack and (guess what?) it didn't work. Now what do you do? If Chestertown is a local phone call, then the answer's easy. Get a modem (14.4 is the best speed) and go to the computing center for a dial-in account. You'll be able to use BlitzMail, just as before.

For most of us, however, it's not quite that easy. There are several commercial companies that are willing to provide mail and sometimes even Internet access for a fee such as Prodigy, America Online, Compuserve, and Delphi. The Computing Center has disks that contain the programs needed to sign on to some of these services.

Compuserve provides email, FTP, Telnet, and Usenet groups. Mike Mead, a computer technician working for Avalon Hill, believes that they may also have World Wide Web access (accessed on campus through Netscape), but if they don't have it currently, they will within a few months.

America Online offers the same services as Compuserve. While AOL is the least expensive of the commercial choices, costing around $10 a month, they also offer the least amount of free online time (5 hours). Additional time is charged by the minute.

Prodigy provides Email and WWW access, but may not provide FTP or Telnet. If they provide access to Usenet newsgroups, it is not in a very conventional way. Delphi has the best price per hour of access, costing $20 for 20 hours. Additional time is charged at a higher rate. Delphi, however, only provides email and Telnet. If you spend a great deal of time online and don't mind having to wait until after six in the evening, Delphi is probably the best way to go.

A less expensive way to obtain an email account is through a freenet. Freenet details vary locally; the best place to ask is your local computer store. According to Tim Kirk, the best freenets are in Chicago, while those in Maryland are possibly the worst. The Baltimore County Library system and the Enoch Pratt Free Library system both offer freenet access.

If you choose to continue using your email with one of these services, forward the email from your BlitzMail account to your new address. To do this, log onto your BlitzMail account and chose "edit DND Entry" from the "BlitzMail" pull down menu. Once there, put your new email address in the "host" box under "preferred email address" and be sure you change the "dot" from "BlitzMail" to "host." If you decide during the summer break to get commercial access, call the computing center (410-778-7760) and the summer lab assistant can change your BlitzMail to your new address for you.

If you do not choose to continue reading your email over the summer, please don't forget to set a "vacation message" so that people who send you mail will understand when you don't reply for three months. To do this, select "preferences" from the "Blitzmail" menu. Once you have done this, click on "automatic actions." Click on the "send vacation message" box and write a message. The message you write will then be sent to everyone who sends you mail, letting them know you're away and, if you wish, how they can get in touch with you. You can also forward your mail to another account, such as that of a friend with email access over the summer or a friend account, in this way.

Have a wonderful summer! Ω

This week, I'd like to address a bject that's been kickin' around for the past few days: May Day. ou see, I got in an email conversation urther this week with an alumnus of his fine institution about how I felt ke we were reliving the Reagan egime. What I meant was that the ocial atmosphere of our own Washington College reminded me of he pointlessness that seemed to mark ast time. Upon reflection, however, I ealized that the Reagan years were ctually kinda fun, if for no other rea- on than that we could feel genuinely righteous about hating our "boss." Not so in this supposed "Liberal Age." ou see, I plan on keeping the May Day tradition alive wherever I go, but I've got my reservations about lettin' it ly amongst all this here REPRES- SION that seems to have taken root in he hearts, minds, and souls of the ommunity. And if my message hasn't been written legibly enough, I'll put it in big ol' black and white letters so you an see: I DON'T WANT TO GET NAKED ON MAY DAY! That's the end, baby. They've even gotten to me. It's a sad fact, but one that must be dealt with if we are ever to understand hat most complex of creatures, Man- kind, I know, but there it is).

You see, it is my theory that peo- ple have evolved (or perhaps devolved) away from the aggression that is so very natural in the animal world. But in plain, we have become civilized. A man walks down the street and spies the female of the species, you get Repression number one: the urge to mate. It can't happen just like that. Our mating dances don't have the cer- tainty of those of our animal brethren. You go through the movements, you do the dance... sometimes it works, some- times it doesn't. In fact, despite a few notable exceptions, the majority of us experience crushing rejection much more often than stunning success.

And here, my friends, is where Repression number two comes into play: the urge to fight. No one can argue with the fact that frustration is, well, frustrating. All that blood rushin' around, trying to find the party, what do you think happens when it gets to the house and finds out that the party's been canceled? I'll tell you, what happens, it goes straight to that part of our brains that tells us it would be really fun to hit that guy over there having a good time.

And here, my friends, is where re- pression number three comes in: the grip of guilt. In the midst of all that frustration, blood, rejection, and frustra- tion, we realize that we are, unfortu- nately, civilized creatures. We can't just go off and hit someone because we didn't get what we wanted, if only be- cause of the possibility of Institutionalized Retribution (the hallmark of a civilized society).

So where do we turn in times such as these? After all, when you've got a fist, you've got a fight, right? Not true. The majority of us shrink away from actual physical expressions of our frustration in favor of a more subtle outlet. We stare. And this then, my friends, is what I'm talking about: the utilization of our favorite sense as a tool for the release of our repressed sexual frustrations.

Last May Day, a group of us gath- ered at the Lit. House, not to express some flaky idealistic claptrap about nudity and naturalness, but simply to get drunk and get naked. Unfortunately, there was a disap- pointing disparity in the ratio of males to females, and the atmosphere wasn't quite what was expected. However, in a show of brave hedonism, we tried our best to have a good time. Truth be told, we failed miserably in compari- son to other years (of course the argu- ment could be made that every generation "fails" in comparison to its predecessors, but that's not the point). The bottom line is that we tried, and some of us managed to have a good time despite our apparent lameness.

Well, to make a long story short, we got harassed... we had firecrackers thrown at us, we were gawked at, the whole bad scene. Why is this? Well my friends, the sad fact is we are living in a sexually repressed era. Every revo- lution sparks a counter-revolution, the sexual revolution included. Fear lurks in every corner of the contempo- rary mind: fear of failure, fear of suc- cess, fear of EXPOSURE. Occasionally someone conquers that fear, or at least musters up the gump- tion to confront it, and strips down in public. Well, when that happens, the Institutional Shame Machine churns to life, and its message is heard loud and clear across the land: YOUR SHOW IS NOT APPRECIATED. Eventually, our brave soul gives in to the onslaught of negativity and puts his or her clothes back on. Next thing you know, we're all staying indoors.

But that's not the scariest part. What really frightens me is that we are doing this TO OURSELVES! All of us here have experienced the cold stare of sexual repression at one time or another, and sadly enough, most of us give in to it. I'm even ready to give up. After all, there comes a time when we must step back and re-evaluate our efforts. Why continue the fight for a good time when it ceases to be a good time? Why not just give in now when it's easiest to do just that? Well, I'll tell you why.

As I said before, every revolution leads to a counter-revolution. Every push produces pull. Now is the time for the counter-revolution, my friends. Now is the time to fight back against the social quelch that has gripped our campus. This May Day, don't just hide out in your room and stare out the window. Go outside and enjoy the feel- ing of sun on your body. Everybody keeps raving about what great weather we've been having, well now's your chance to FULLY ENJOY the beauty of Mother Nature in full bloom. Give up being cool! Be a bunch of drunken naked dorks for once in your lives!

We are now standing at a cross- roads, my friends. We can either stay in the road that we are on, or we can cut loose and explore some new terri- tory. When you get down to it, it doesn't really matter whether or not it is this generation of students that reestablishes the choice social atmos- phere that once pervaded these hal- lowed halls. The cycle will continue to build until someone finally stands up and cries "Enough!" I sup- pose the real question is, do we really want to wait that long? I guess we'll find out. Ω

Dropped Whole Degree

Aaron Pierce

Some ruminations on repression...May Day's a'comin', boys and girls!

Life on campus in 1942

Three distinguished women receive honorary degrees

Mary Schrider

1942 was a memorable year for Washington College. It not only marked the fiftieth anniversary of co- education, but the school decided to honor three distinguished women with honorary degrees. The three women were Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Miss Adele Franze, and Mrs. Sophie Kerr Underwood.

Mrs. Roosevelt was not only the First Lady of the United States, but was an avid supporter of the education of young women. For both of these rea- sons, she was an ideal candidate for the honorary degree. The second woman, Miss Adele Franze, was a graduate of Washington College, the class of 1900. She went on to earn a Masters Degree from Washington College in 1902, and then later, in 1923, she earned a Masters Degree from Columbia University's Teachers College. She dedicated her life to edu- cation, eventually becoming principal of St. Mary's Seminary. The third woman to receive the honorary degree was Mrs. Sophie Kerr Underwood. She was a shining example to ambi- tious young women through her dis- tinguished writing career. She was the editor of women's magazines and pub- lished many successful novels and short stories. The presentation of the three honorary degrees to these ex- ceptional women proved to be the highlight of spring commencement, reinforcing the importance of women in the Washington College campus. (source: Dmschott, Fred W. The History of Washington College (Chestertown: Washington College, 1980.), 222-223) Ω

Andy's

Friday, April 28
Bitter Creek
Terrific Bluegrass!!!

Saturday, April 29
The Hix
A mix of bluegrass, traditional, and swing... fiddle, guitar, keyboard, banjo, bass, vocals.

Krupat helps youths through "The Door"

Carolyn Fuss

Last Friday in Hynson lounge, Tanya Krupat, a woman who works in New York City at a youth center called "The Door," came to speak about her experience in social work with inner city youth. She addressed such issues as how you can use any college major in the area of social work, and what is involved when working in social work.

Krupat graduated from Wesleyan College with an anthropology major. For her thesis she worked in a family planning center in Paris where she found an interest in issues of women and sexuality. After that she worked for a food and hunger hotline, as a food referrals administrative assistant, and helped run an independent living Life Skills course for pregnant teens who had little or no support from their families. While doing this she heard about "The Door" and began to volun- teer for them. Soon she was hired to work with adolescents there, teaching about ways to prevent HIV/AIDS.

All races and types of people show up at "The Door," but mostly inner-city and high risk adolescents. Most of the teens are referred by their high school guidance counselors. This multi-ser- vice youth center which was founded in 1972 offers many opportunities for adolescents ages 12-21. Free health care, counseling and testing, legal ser- vices, college preparation, dinner, drug treatment and prevention, GED classes, and AIDS/HIV prevention are some of the services that "The Door" offers. All services are confidential.

Krupat explained that her job was difficult not only because of the lack of funding, but because she's trying to address some rather serious issues with adolescents who, especially at that age, don't want to listen to any- body. She tries to work through that by using games, adolescent focused media and other fun and interactive exercises to keep their interest. Krupat also spoke on the importance of giving teens a sense of honesty, high expectations and respect as well as a sense of structure, often lacking in most of their lives. She teaches kids to become more comfortable with their bodies instead of sending the message that sex is negative. Krupat praises the holistic aspect of the program which enables the teens look at all facets of their lives.

Krupat intends to leave "The Door" to attend graduate school for so- cial work at the University of Michigan this fall. She's eager to learn more about her work, but knows how much "The Door" has taught her: she says, "This job has really challenged me to think a lot about myself." Ω

GRADUATION VIDEO

$25, including shipping and handling in the US. You can pay with check (payable to Abstract Video) or cash, directly to Abstract Video or through student mail by May 1 to Alicia Carberry.

Abstract Video
9919 Road Island Ave.
College Park, MD 20740

Students give W.C. a seven

Scott Koon

A survey conducted by Dr. Weissman's Empirical Political Research class found that 67 percent of Washington College students would recommend Washington College to a friend. The survey, which is conducted every year, is used as a tool to teach students polling methodology. A random sample of eighty-five students wasinterviewed by the POL 493 class to gather opinion and demographic data. This year marks the first time questions about Washington College have been asked.

One of the strongest findings of the survey shows that the majority of students do not approve of the way the Fessler case was handled. Fifty-three percent of the students disapproved of the way the case was handled, and only three (seven percent) of the eighty-five students approved of the way the case was handled. Thirty-one percent did not know whether they approved or disapproved.

Forty-seven percent of the students polled felt that Washington College is headed in the right direction: thirty-eight percent felt that the college has gotten off track. Fifty-three percent felt that the current administration is sensitive to their needs.

Students were also asked to rate the quality of various programs and services at the college on a scale from one to ten, with one being abysmal and ten being stupendous. Of the programs and facilities evaluated, students rated Food Services and dorm conditions the lowest, with mean ratings of 4.6 and 4.8 respectively. In a trend which is consistent with the other data available on student evaluations of Washington College, students rated the Lifetime Fitness Center and the Athletic program the highest, with mean ratings of 8.1 and 7.3.

Students were also asked questions about their political opinions. Forty-three percent identified themselves as Republicans, twenty-one percent identified themselves as Democrats and twenty-three percent identified themselves as independents. When asked if they approved or disapproved of President Clinton and House Speaker Gingrich, large numbers of students indicated that they did not know what their opinion was, or if they had one. Among those expressing an opinion, both the President and the Speaker got bad marks: thirty-nine percent of the students disapproved of President Clinton and thirty-six percent disapproved of Speaker Gingrich. Ω

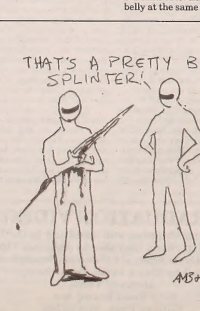
Students display art in Tawes today

Kevin Hoffman

This Friday, April 28, from 5-7 p.m. students will be given an introduction into the world of art on campus. The event takes place in the Tawes theatre and is made-up of work from students in beginning drawing, advanced drawing, visual design, and print making.

Halfway through the program, the Linette Neilson art award will be given to the senior with the best show. The various seniors competing for the award have created a wide-variety of different themes and styles to be represented at the show.

Becky Bryant, who finished last semester, will be displaying portraits of Mike Kaylor, Audrey Fessler, her grandparents, and herself. You've probably seen the subjects of her work around campus (with the exception of her grandparents of course) and it's a real treat to see one of your professors or friends immortalized in paint.



Laura Flynn, a humanities and psychology major with a concentration in art, is using abstract landcapes as the theme for her show. Her work is calm and serene, like floating on your back in a swimming pool and looking at the sky.

Alexandra Geller will be displaying her pottery. It is modeled after Native American and Puritan pottery and is unique as it is the only pottery on display in the show.

Renee Kuhnel is showing a series of paintings based around a local playground. Her paintings feature a lot of earthy colors and weird angles. They will turn you upside down and keep you confused until you can finally latch onto a familiar piece of architecture from your youth.

Sue Czechowski has been working on pop art with a heavy influence from Andy Warhol. Her work features silk screens of gum wrappers, paintings of fire engines, and a six foot replica of a Crayola crayon.

This is a special opportunity for the students of Washington College. It is rare to have art put on display at this college, and even more rare that the art would be created by the students. This show happens once a year and this is the only chance to see it. There's going to be a lot of hard work represented and a lot of different styles. This might be your only chance to see the more artistic side of Washington College. If that isn't enough, they're also going to have free refreshments! Enjoy art and fill your belly at the same time. Check it out. Ω premier research universities, from Pennsylvania State University, where he was a senior administrator. He is stepping down from the presidential post at Hopkins on June 15 to accept the leadership of one of the largest and most distinguished charitable organizations in the United States, the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, a wealthy philanthropic organization created by the cereal magnate. Richardson is succeeding Russell G. Mawby as president and chief executive officer of the foundation.

"Commencement" from 1

Along with the Ford Foundation and the J. Paul Getty Foundation, the Kellogg Foundation, with assets of more than $5 billion, ranks among the top three philanthropic organizations. Last year, the Michigan-based foundation gave out $264 million and has 2,700 active recipients. Its giving confines its grants to four general areas: education, agriculture, environment, and health.

Richardson will receive the honorary Doctorate of Humane Letters.

Lynn Margulis has made significant contributions to research on cell biology and on microbial evolution. From 1977 to 1989, she chaired the National Academy of Science's Space Science Board Committee on Planetary Biology and Chemical Evolution, aiding in the development of research strategies for NASA. She has participated in the development of science teaching materials at levels from elementary to graduate school. A Distinguished University Professor at the University of Massachusetts since 1988, she worked from 1966 until that time in the biology department at Boston University. She and her son and writing partner, Dorion Sagan, are awaiting publication of their book, What Is Life? Her current projects include studies of the bacterial symbionts of termites and researchers from microbial mat communities. She will receive the honorary Doctor of Science.

Henry E. Laughlin has had a distinguished career as a Naval physician, psychiatrist, educator, and author. After working at the U.S. Navy Hospital, the George Washington University Hospital, and the National Naval Medical Center in the early 1940s, he served briefly as director of the Federal Employee Mental Health Clinic, then concentrated on his private practice in psychotherapy and analysis in Washington, D.C. and elsewhere. A clinical professor of psychiatry and behavioral sciences at George Washington University Medical School, Laughlin has taught all over the world. He was an attending physician at George Washington University Hospital (1947-62), Walter Reed Hospital (1949-58), Suburban Hospital in Bethesda (1954-64, 1970-77), where he was chief of psychology and neurology for 10 years, and Frederick Memorial Hospital (since 1976). He is author of several professional volumes, including The Neuroses, The Depressions: Clinical Understanding and Management, and The Emotional Reactions to Trauma.

Commencement ceremonies begin at 10:30 a.m. In the event of rain, commencement will be held in the Johnson Lifetime Fitness Center.

Chestertown's own tea party

William Denton, III

In March, 1774, the British passed the Boston Port Act, closing the port of Boston until complete restitution had been made for the tea destroyed as a result of the Boston Tea party the previous December. This action caused a wave of anger in all the colonies.

The news of the Boston Port Act reached Chestertown in early April or early May and immediately caused anger and resentment amongst the local residents. On the heels of the news that the Port of Boston had been closed by the British, the Brigantine "Geddes" dropped anchor in Chestertown on May 13, 1774.

Word passed quickly that in the hold of the "Geddes" was a small amount of the hated tea, and on the very day the ship's arrival a plan went out for a public meeting to deal with the tea on board. Local residents at the meeting passed a set of "Resolves" which held that it would be unlawful and forbidden to bring in tea, sell it, consume it or in any way assist in its sale. Residents acting contrary to the above proscriptions were considered as "enemies to the liberties of America." The tea in the hold of the "Geddes" continued to anger residents. The anger reached a head on May 23, 1774, when local residents boarded the ship and jettisoned the supply of tea into the Chester River.

The Maryland Gazette reported the Chestertown Tea Party, but only briefly, telling the public little more than the fact that residents boarded the "Geddes" and dumped the tea into the water. This absence of detail is understandable, since if the names of the participants were disclosed, there would might have been swift punishment from angry Royal Officials.

Thus the Chestertown Tea Party has been the province of the historians and others until now. It again belongs to the present as a symbol of the travail that made the present possible.

A festival commemorating the original Chestertown Tea Party has taken place each of the past 21 years. This year's festival will take place May 26, 27, and 28, at various historic settings throughout Chestertown.

The three-day festival, which features approximately thirty events, begins at 6 p.m. on Friday, May 26 with a cocktail reception at Hynson Pavilion. The following day's festivities, which continue from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m., feature everything from a Colonial Parade to various types of music to boat tours of the Chester River to hunting and crafts demonstrations.

The reenactment will begin at 2 p.m. on High Street between Queen and Cross Streets and will continue with the landing at the end of High Street.

Sunday's festivities, from noon to 4 p.m., include a living history of the Golden soldier as a 50th anniversary commemoration of World War II, a puppet show, and a children's instrument-making demonstration.

Chestertown will celebrate a momentous event in its past in the tradition of its forbears next month, and efforts in coordinating the event will pay off in teaching residents about the tradition and history of this town. Ω

Traffic violation tickets need to be paid by May 8, 1995. If you have any outstanding tickets please pay at the Department of Public Safety. All outstanding tickets will be forwarded to the Business Office on Monday, May 8, and will appear on the billing being sent home.

The Oklahoma City bombing and the role of the militiamen

Scott Koon

My first reaction upon hearing of the bombing of the Federal building in Oklahoma City was one of sadness. Later, when Timothy McVeigh was arrested and identified as a militia member, I grew enraged. My anger is not so much at the militia movement itself – they're so far out of touch with reality it's hard not to pity them. No, the people I'm angry with are the FBI, the ATF and the other various government agencies which are lumped together under the umbrella of the "intelligence community."

For the past hundred years or so, the government has been obsessed with fighting the communist enemy within, and the intelligence community has concentrated its efforts on the investigation of leftist groups. They have done everything from running the offices of a group dedicated to ending the civil war in Nicaragua to the outright murder of leftist leaders. They have systematically inflitrated socialist organizations with provocateurs, spies and stoolies. Their excesses became so egregious that after the loss of a million-dollar lawsuit resulting from the COINTELPRO scandal, the FBI had to set its house in order and write stringent guidelines regarding the methods used in "domestic counterintelligence."

And during this entire period of outlandish excesses in the never-ending and entirely fruitless pursuit of the socialist enemy within, reactionary groups were allowed almost total freedom to pursue their repugnant ends. The end result of this policy was the Oklahoma City bombing, and it's perfectly obvious to me – and always has – that the mere existence of a well-trained reactionary army of lunatics out in the world with all of its vast weapons is a threat to our national security. I personally have spouted out about the danger of the incipient fascist movement in America for years, on this campus and elsewhere. And I – and some other few souls out there – have been ignored.

But this isn't a time for me to say "I told you so." This is a time when people are asking themselves why this horrible tragedy has come to pass. Why? Why would someone plant a bomb next to a building with so many innocent men, women and children in it? And why didn't the government do something about these militiamen before it was too late?

It is a lot easier to explain the government's inaction than it is to explain what screwball thoughts lurk in the minds of the (alleged) cryptofascist perpetrators. The reason why the militias have been able to operate so freely is because they are made up of exactly the kinds of people who enter into law enforcement. Both groups are largely composed of white male military veterans who own guns and espouse a conservative political ideology. Liberals with law degrees don't go into the FBI, they go into the ACLU. All government agencies have a veterans hiring preference. A large percentage of policemen begin their careers as MPs.

It is quite natural for people to think of others who are like themselves as benign. Most people feel more comfortable with other people who share the same interests and backgrounds. When we take into account the many similarities between the militia members and law enforcement officers, it is quite easy to see why your average cop wouldn't feel threatened by the militia movement, despite its revolutionary rhetoric.

Of course, that's a charitable interpretation. There are those who would say that the failure of the law enforcement community symptomize with the militias. Since most of the people I've been saying this are militia leaders, perhaps we should give this view some credence, as they're the only ones really in a position to know.

It is highly ironic that the Oklahoma City bombing took place just a week before the twenty-year anniversary of the end of the Vietnam War, because my theory is that the whole movement finds its roots in the way the war ended. At the end of the war, veterans found themselves received as unwelcome at best and as murderers at worst. War is traumatic enough without having to endure the insults of people who haven't had to go through it. People our age can only imagine what it must have been like to go to war, to see friends die, to have to kill the enemy, to see innocents suffer, and finally to have an unsympathetic public tell you, in no uncertain terms, that it was all for nothing!

Unless you're as dumb as Forrest Gump, you're probably not like him in one of three ways. The first way would be to drown your sorrows in drugs or alcohol. The second would be to fully accept the message of the counterculture and become an anti-war activist. The third way would be to try as hard as you could to convince yourself that Vietnam was a just war which would have been won if not for the fact that our boys in uniform were stabbed in the back by a conspiracy of weak-kneed generals, pinko politicians and long-haired Bolshevik cowards.

This last path which was taken, but not necessarily chosen, by many of those who have gone on to lead the militia movement. For them it only have been the only road which they were temperamentally capable of taking. The militia movement is a warrior subculture which has grown up around those who have taken this path, and if it doesn't remind you of the beginnings of fascism in Italy and Germany, you obviously need to do a bit of reading.

Like all truly conservative movements, the militiamen avow that the values they stand for are not new, but are the founding principles of this nation. They believe that the most fundamental right is the right to keep and bear arms, and that the gravest threat to America is the prospect of a disarmed populace.

The reasons given for why the government desires to confiscate their guns are varied. A militia supporter posted an article by Jim Shults from Modern Gun Magazine on the internet, and it contains the following Ayn Rand quote: "The only power any government has is the power to crack down on criminals. Well, when there aren't enough criminals, one makes them. One declares so many things to be a crime that it becomes impossible for men to live without breaking laws. Who wants a nation of law abiding citizens? What's there in that for anyone? But just pass the kinds of laws that can be neither observed nor enforced and objectively interpreted and you create a nation of law-breakers and then you can cash in on the guilt." This quote appeared in an article which was much less wacky than most of those which are posted to Internet sites catering to militia supporters. But even here, you have to wonder: how firm Mr. Shults' grasp on reality is: in the second sentence of his article he affirms that "the government is going socialist." Anyone who honestly believes that needs to get whacked with a clue stick.

Anyone interested in finding out what the militia movement is all about should use Netscape to access the "Conspiracy, Control & ?????" page, which has the most impressive list of militia related sites on the Internet.

I don't think that most of the militia members themselves are insane. In this country, we have a tendency to see people who hold unconventional views as nuts. And yet, the more material militia material you read, the more it all hangs together. Their political views, though rejected by the majority (I hope) are nonetheless afforded protection under the Constitution. At this time, the militiamen are spreading their message of paranoia. They claim that the government is in a declared state of emergency and that the government is planning on violating their rights.

Let's prove them wrong. The investigation of the individuals in the bombing is proceeding properly. We should not do as some have suggested and undue the legacy of prudent regulations which resulted from COINTELPRO. When the FBI was given greater latitude in investigating "suspicious" groups, it abused this power by pursuing their own anti communist agenda. We should try to keep government out of people's personal lives as much as possible: any decision made under the influence of outrage over the bombing could have an unintended chilling effect on freedom of expression decades from now. Ω

Student's experience at NAFAC

Karen Walker

On April 17-20, 1, along with two hundred other delegates representing colleges from across the nation, attended Model United Academy Foreign Affairs Conference (NAFAC). The purpose of this conference was to explore and discuss Ethics in International Relations. Our first speaker, Rushworth Kidder, is the President of the Institution of Global Ethics and a journalist for the Christian Science Monitor. The dilemma he brought forth was that in a situation of right vs. right – where there is not one party who can be wrong in their convictions, and there is not one group to fully support against another who is clearly at fault – it poses some difficult decisions in defining policy towards such a matter.

Dr. Paul D. Wolfowitz, dean of the Nitze School of Advanced International Studies at the Johns Hopkins University, spoke to us about the ethics of intervention. He focused on the various conditions that may be present to justify one country's intervention into another country's affairs. He concluded that intervention is based on national interest and not on moral and humanitarian issues.

U.S. Secretary of Defense William Perry explained how U.S. foreign policy making is influenced by the factors of terrorism, human rights, and nuclear proliferation. With concern for the human rights issue, Secretary of Defense Perry explained that it is almost impossible to construct a new policy for this issue without a clear definition of human rights. He also brought up the question point that in all cases of foreign policy making, his position must be to always act in the nation's best interest before taking on issues of human rights.

We heard from several other speakers, including the former CEO of Texaco, James Kinnear, who discussed the issue of ethics in business, and the Former Prime Minister of Poland, Hanna Suchocka, who spoke on the Ethics of International Relations.

My roundtable of about 16 delegates was given the task of answering the question, "Are the politics of human rights and international terrorism redefining international politics?" We concluded that human rights are relative to the country in which one resides. Since definitions of rights vary across cultures, there is no universal model for legitimate action be have. Thus, no nation-state has the authority to intervene in another nation-state solely on the basis of human rights violations. As a result, nations turn to the UN as a means of enforcing human rights operations. These actions, however, are complicated because the body is composed of nation-states whose interests dominate their actions. When individual nations' interests take precedence over human rights infractions, the UN takes no action.

My participation in the conference was made possible by The Goldstein Program in Public Affairs and The Department of Political Science and International Studies, with Dr. An and Dr. Premo serving as advisers. Ω

Also, according to Dr. Cades, academic approval/guidance see an increase next year, as do academic services to students. Cades seems satisfied with the budget's progress and needs. Said the Chair of the Faculty Finance Committee, "our views got respectful hearing, and many of our concerns have been reflected in the College's approved budget."

"We're keeping our fingers crossed that the expected revenues will come in come September," said Cades, "but we're looking for a very good start." Ω assured the Board that it was a "very strong pool." Admissions accepted 89% of the applicant pool this year, as opposed to 86% accepted last year. Schulman went on to say that Admissions has accepted "56 more than last year," and received 96 deposits to date. In addition to this, Schulman reported that the average size of financial aid awards is down this year due to fewer merit based discounts.

"Board" from

During the Chairman's Remarks, Louis Goldstein thanked the Board for "re-electing me for another term." Goldstein has served on the Board as Chairman since 1980. During his remarks to the Board, Dr. John Toll, acting president, said he has enjoyed working at Washington College "even more than I had anticipated." He attributed this to the involvement and commitment of the Board of Visitors and Governors as well as to the responsiveness of the faculty. Toll went on to say, "Students are in many ways the best thing about Washington College." This being Toll's last address to the Board as Acting President, he thanked the Board for the opportunity to serve Washington College. Goldstein responded, saying, "You haven't finished yet, in my opinion."

Dr. Louis Stettler was formally accepted by the Board as Vice-president of Finance and Administration. Toll indicated his wholehearted support of Stettler. Stettler thanked the Board, saying, "I look forward to working with you for 10 or 12 years, minimum." Ω

All library books are due back to Miller Library on May 4, 1995.

"Budget" from substantially." An increase in tuition (not inclusive of room and board or other fees) of approximately $1100 will take effect next semester. Increased tuition revenue is also expected due to a larger total number of students enrolled next year, as a comparatively small senior class will graduate next month. Said Stettler, "If the school is going to just maintain the existing revenue base, it has to replace the revenue it's losing because the seniors are leaving ... an average-sized freshman class will lead to a fairly substantial increase in net tuition revenue."

Next year's budget also provides for a good possibility for a raise for the faculty, which would be the first since 1992. According to Stettler, "The President intends to recommend money to be allocated for pay adjustments in the fall, provided we meet many of the revenue targets."

Tennis teams continue on road to playoffs

First-ranked Washington tennis remains undefeated in Conference

Erika K. Ford

The reigning national champs of Division III tennis continue their winning ways this season. Washington's men's tennis team has won its last nine matches and stands in first place in the Conference with an 8-0 record.

Overall, the men are 16-2 in all matches. Against SUNY-Binghamton last Saturday, Washington won 5-2.

A match against Johns Hopkins last week resulted in a 6-1 final score for the Shoremen. Playing number 1 at singles for Washington, Miro Bern beat his Hopkins opponent 6-2, 6-4. At number 2, Michael Kember won his games 6-2, 6-3.

In the third position, Buba Soysa won 6-4, 6-1. Playing number 4 at singles, Andrew King squashed Hopkins 6-1, 6-0. Andrew Moffat, number 5 for Washington, won 6-2, 6-4. At number 6 Mike Gill fell to his opponent 6-1, 6-2.

The Shoremen were victorious in all doubles matches. Kember and King combined to win 8-5. Beran and Soysa teamed up to shut out the Hopkins team 8-0. The Moffat and Gill duo also won 8-5.

The men will play their last regular season match tomorrow when they invite Washington & Lee to be the next victims of their extraordinary skill at 11 a.m. at home. Ω

Women win nine of last 10 matches, go to Championships this weekend

Erika K. Ford

As a remarkable spring season winds down, the women's tennis team has won their last five consecutive matches. Nine out of the last 10 matches have resulted in happy Washington faces as well.

The Shorewomen's season record is now 9-3.

Junior Kim Prettyman has won five games in a row and now ranks 8-1 at number 6 singles.

Last Saturday's match at Dickinson culminated in a 6-3 Washington victory. Anabel Flores, playing singles at number 1, won 4-6, 6-4, 6-0. At number 2, Paulina Sierra beat her opponent 6-3, 6-2. Playing the third position, Diana Clausen won 6-2, 6-1. At number 4, Amy Rizzitello fell to Dickinson 6-3, 6-0. Playing at number 5, Melissa Ellwanger lost to her singles opponent 6-2, 7-5. At number 6, Kim Prettyman won 6-3, 4-6, 7-6.

In doubles, the team of Flores and Sierra combined to beat Dickinson's Harrison and Doumer 8-1. Clausen and Prettyman teamed up but lost to Addams and Eukers by a close 9-8 score. Rizzitello and Ellwanger were victorious over Dickinson's Tones and DeNooyer, winning 8-6.

Against Ursinus last week, the Shorewomen won in by a decisive 8-1 score.

Yesterday the women traveled to play Trenton State.

This weekend they will play in the Centennial Conference Championships at Gettysburg, where undoubtedly their spirit and skills will overcome their rivals! Ω

Board of Visitors and Governors commends '93-'94 men's tennis team

WHEREAS, the 1993-94 Men's Tennis Team achieved national recognition as the 1994 Division III Tennis Champion with a 5-4 victory over fourth-seeded Claremont-Mudd-Scripps in Redlands, California last May, thus capturing the college's first national NCAA Division III title and bringing distinction to our institution of higher learning;

AND WHEREAS, the members of the defending championship team, having been victorious over each Division III team on its regular season schedule, have proven themselves to be worthy opponents who are likely to repeat their outstanding performance at the national tournament in May 1995;

AND WHEREAS, Head Tennis Coach Tim Gray '86, a former Washington College Tennis star in his own right, has through hard work and determination assembled a team of players who have embraced the ideals of a liberal arts education and have exemplified themselves as good ambassadors for Washington College;

AND WHEREAS, the student-athletes on the Men's Tennis Team have proven to be outstanding scholars as well as superior athletes, and have at all times displayed a positive sportsmanlike demeanor, a healthy competitive spirit, and a proper perspective regarding their academic studies;

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that the Board of Visitors and Governors of Washington College formally salutes the 1993-94 Men's Tennis Team in recognition of past performances and the great athletic prowess of this team, and sends best wishes as they approach this year's national tournament;

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that this Resolution be included in the minutes of the Board of Visitors and Governors of Washington College, this 22nd day of April, 1995.

John Toll
Acting President of the College

Louis Goldstein
Chairman of the Board of Visitors and Governors

Women's tennis stats

Pos.	Singles	Conference	Overall
#1	Flores	9-0	11-1
#2	Sierra	9-0	11-1
#3	Clausen	7-0	9-1
#4	Rizzitello	5-4	6-6
#5	Brumby	1-0	1-0
#6	Prettyman	8-1	9-2
	Ellwanger	2-1	2-2

Pos.	Doubles (Team)
#1	Flores/Sierra	9-0	11-1
#2	Clausen/Prettyman	1-1	1-1
#3	Rizzitello/Ellwanger	3-0	3-0
	Roth/Ellwanger	4-3	2-2

	Singles	Doubles
Flores	6-2	6-2
Sierra	6-2	6-2
Rizzitello	3-5	4-3
Roth	2-5	4-3
Prettyman	4-3	1-0
Ellwanger	1-0	4-3
Clausen	5-2	3-2

Leading Doubles	Overall	Conference
Flores/Sierra	6-2	4-0
Clausen/Rizzitello	3-3	2-1
Roth/Ellwanger	4-3	2-2

Interested in a job for the fall semester at The Cove? Stop by and see Jerome Lindsey by May 12 for an application. Please have a tentative schedule of hours you can work. You will be notified over the summer if accepted for a position.

Humphrey's Point Farm

on scenic Swan Creek near Rock Hall offers a full care event horse facility with a private atmosphere. We have two stalls available at reasonable rates. Also TB event horses for lease and for sale. Instruction, trailering.

639-2832

Shorewomen lacrosse drops three more games despite strong spirit

Beth Moser

Once again the women have a losing record although their playing is improving. The three games the team had last week were against Goucher (0-25), St. Mary's (5-17), and Bryn Mawr (4-9).

During the Goucher game the Sho'women fought a rather tough team made of strong athletes and shooters. Their team outshot us by roughly 40 shots for a total of 51 shots on goal. W.C. women were held to single digits on their shots on goal.

At home on Thursday, April 13, opposing St. Mary's there was an unbalanced game in the midfield. According to Peggy Busker, W.C. goalie, "St. Mary's came out ready to play and we didn't. Being prepared for the game on the mental level is often one of the deciding factors of a game. W.C. gave the Seahawks a good fight around the goal with sophomores Elizabeth Moga and Marcia Flinn taking numerous shots.

The most interesting game in this three game series was the one against Bryn Mawr. Sophomore Nikki Chmura felt that the "fact that we got control on the first draw really set the pace of the game." The Shorewomen were leading 3-2 before the 30 minute lightning rain delay. Unfortunately, the Bryn Mawr lacrosse team came back out from the break to score two goals and take the lead. Coach Feyerherm felt that the women "were playing very good, aggressive lacrosse and the players were starting to believe that they could win."

Many of the players shared this attitude with the coach. Sophomore Liz Mangano thought that, "we really came together as a team... we hustled to ground balls, and made some good connections which helped us take the lead in the first half." Chmura agrees that it was "definitely a superior effort on everyone's part."

The Shorewomen take notice of each other and appreciate the effort put forth. Peggy Busker noted that "Liz Mangano, Kyla Donovan, Jill Schultz, and Elizabeth Barlow play[ed] great defense... they have really played their hearts out."

The outlook for next year is positive, especially because none of the players will be leaving. After one season of working together, the Shorewomen should bring their game around and change the record. Continue to support the W.C. women this year and next. Ω

Women's crew in New Jersey

Lisa Brown

After the news that the Murphy Cup in Philadelphia had cancelled all four-person boat races, the varsity women's open four (bow to stern: Lisa Brown, coxswain, Laurel Harris, Jennifer Dougherty, Stacey Hammond, and Tonya Howell) had to look for a race somewhere else. They found The Georgetown Cup, held near Princeton, New Jersey, on April 23. Participating were Georgetown, Columbia, Trinity College and W.C. Though a much smaller race than the Murphy Cup on the Schuylkill River, the Georgetown Cup proved to be a competitive race for the women's open four. The race included three boats: Trinity, Washington and Georgetown. Trinity won the race, with W.C. taking second by a margin of 2.9 seconds. The winning time was 8:22.2, followed by Washington College's 8:25.13, and Georgetown's women with 8:42.18. Washington College's women's open four has been training hard this season and racing against tough competition. This Saturday they will be racing again at the W.C. Invitational, batting old rivals for a gold medal at their home regatta. Come out show them your support! Ω

Lacrosse team to wrap up slow season

eneth Pipkin

Well, W.C., this is the last article this sports fan, so let's look over the crosse team one more time. The st Saturday was a tad bit rough for Shoremen playing the number 1 m in the nation. The well anticid "War On The Shore" was a true d for the Shoremen. The team gave heir all but the Salisbury Gulls re just too much to handle with the al score being 21-8.

I was out at the game this past dnesday at 4 p.m. and well the ormen came out to win and that y did, by the score of 19-4, over nerford College. This game was a ll deserved win. All of the team rked together and everything ged to click on both sides of the ld. But this reporter left at half time his own softball game where his m won, but back to lacrosse. The m connected with goals by nasso, Boone, and defenseman Jesse Cook. It was a true show of how, even with a rough season, the team still holds together and wins a great game in the end.

The team has had its ups and downs as we all know from last week's article, but this was a house-cleaning year. Coach Haus has seen a year with a lot of new faces, on and off the field. Division III will see a new team out of W.C. next year. Their offense has changed considerably; it was a time to learn. Next year will be a year to teach. School was out but the Shoremen will call it back in session next fall. The time to reorganize is almost over but most of all the past year was a time to see who had what and if they could perform. Next year look out for the upcoming Sophomores to make some calls to the opposing team's goal more often. We again want to thank all of the graduating seniors for all the time and effort they have put in with this transition team. They have shown true sportsmanship.

The last game is here on Saturday at 1 p.m., against Washington & Lee, a great challenge for the Shoremen to see what they have learned this season and to give a taste of what to see next year. Ω

Greg Miller on the field (photo courtesy of Sports Information)

POW

Player of the Week is chosen by the coaches as an athlete displaying the ideal sportsmanship worthy of the Sho'men.

W.C.'s women's lacrosse has not been a victorious team on the scoreboard this season, as it is a rebuilding season. However, one player has stood out in every game as an excellent contributor to the team's smaller successes on the field. Junior Jill Schultz has earned POW this week for her perseverance over the entire season. The Bel Air native played lacrosse all four years in high school and while at W.C. She plays third mid (defense), and is still a threat to the opposing goal.

Schultz leads the team with 70 ground balls so far this season, and with two games remaining, could possibly improve enough to challenge the Shorewomen record. Schultz has played in every game, which is especially amazing considering that she had surgery over winter break. She has not slowed down at all. She has had 8 draw controls from her defensive position. On the offensive end she has a shooting percentage of 100 from the 8 meter free position: one shot, one goal.

She co-captains this year's team with Marcia Flinn, and together they are the team's Student Athlete Mentors (SAMs). She has been a main factor in keeping the spirit of the team up despite a tough season.

Schultz also is a member of ODK and ΣΤΑ on campus. She is also on the grievance committee and an RA in Worcester. She enjoys hanging with her friends on the team, her sisters and Tyler. As a Sociology major with sights set on Law School, Schultz has continually made Athletic Honor Roll and Dean's list. Her positive attitude and defensive skill have anchored the defense this season, resulting in many good things, including excellent games against nationally ranked teams such as Gettysburg and Johns Hopkins.

Men's crew at Murphy Cup, Princeton

Regis de Ramel

This past weekend the men's crew team competed against an impressive collection of crews such as Georgetown, Temple, Trinity and Drexel. Both the men's varsity and novice teams competed at the Murphy Cup up in Philadelphia on Saturday, while the men's varsity continued on to Princeton on Sunday for a chance to race against Georgetown and Trinity.

At the Murphy cup, the novice 8 qualified for their finals with a third place finish early in the afternoon. Unfortunately, they faced an extremely competitive final, with URI coming in first and Washington College finishing 6th out of 11 other teams. In the men's varsity 8 race, Temple and Drexel took first and second. Coming in third place was Washington's eight, finishing in front of Delaware, Ithaca, and Bucknell. On Sunday the men's varsity team traveled up to Princeton, NJ for yet another race, this time against Georgetown's A & B boats as well as Trinity's varsity boat. Georgetown's A boat finished with an impressive time of 6 minutes flat, followed by a close pack with Georgetown's B boat, Trinity and Washington.

Next weekend the men's crew team will race right here on the lonely Chester River against John Hopkins, Stockton, St. Johns, Franklin & Marshall and many others. We hope to see you all down there! Ω

Shoreman baseball beats Swarthmore 8-3

Erika K. Ford

Pitcher Brian Rush helped lead the Shoremen to an 8-3 win over Swarthmore on Tuesday, striking out 13 from the mound. Washington is now 11-11, and places in the middle of the Conference with an 8-7 record.

Scoring eight runs on 12 hits, the Shoremen took turns hitting singles, doubles, a triple, and a homer against the Swarthmore squad. Scoring one in the first inning, and two more in the top of the fourth, Swarthmore took a 3-0 lead going into the bottom of the fifth. Washington then made a determined comeback.

Mike Hinkle doubled at his turn at bat, and Chad Campbell tripled to bring him home, giving W.C. one run. Jarrett Pasko's fly ball out to left allowed Campbell to score, leaving the Shoremen down by just one, 3-2.

In the sixth, Scott Quinn walked and Andy Moore hit a home run to bring them both in, giving the Shoremen a 4-3 lead. In the seventh, Pasko walked, and Quinn singled on an infield hit. Rush was then walked, and so with the bases loaded and two outs, Andy Moore stepped to the plate. His single drove in Pasko and Quinn, and brought Washington to a 6-3 advantage at the bottom of the seventh.

As the eighth inning closed, Washington scored twice more. Hinkle singled, and Eaton doubled to right field. Chad Campbell's single drove the two home.

In a quick ninth inning, Rush finished up with two strikeouts, and the Shoremen were assured a victory.

Against Western Maryland on Saturday, the locals lost both games of a doubleheader away. In game one, Washington fell 9-2 and in game two they lost 6-1.

Against Haverford at home last Friday, the Shoremen showed up the Fords 8-5. Nate Tyler pitched 6 2/3 innings, striking out four. Paul Taylor then took over the mound for an inning, and Scott Quinn relieved for the save. Matt Flanagan, Chad Campbell, Chris Eaton, Sean Tzysko, and Toby Pilarski each hit a double. Eaton and Pilarski each had an RBI, and Paul Taylor had two, and Campbell had three.

Three Washington players ranked on last week's Centennial Conference Stats sheet. Andy Moore has five doubles for the season. Brian Rush has a 4-2 W-L pitching record. Scott Quinn has struck out 21.

Today the Shoremen travel to play Swarthmore once again, and tomorrow they play Ursinus at home in a doubleheader at 1 p.m. The final game (a doubleheader) in the regular season for the baseball team is Tuesday at 1 p.m. when they play Wesley College. Ω

An end-of-the-semester note from Athletic Director Brian Matthews

Upon looking over the past year at Washington athletics, first-year Athletic Director Bryan Matthews had the following to say:

1994-95 has been an excellent year for W.C. Athletics. We have enjoyed numerous successes, learned from our defeats, and watched our student-athletes represent Washington College with class and pride. For me personally this has been a most enjoyable year, as I am very happy to be back at my alma mater. I am proud to represent the Athletic Department and to be associated with the coaches, students, and athletic programs of this institution.

The highlights of this year are many, and I will try to recap a few in this short space. Soccer had its best season since 1979, and was quite competitive in a tough soccer conference. Volleyball was a factor in the Conference race for a long stretch of the season, and Field Hockey was in the top third of the Conference throughout their season, and did not graduate a senior. Men's basketball was a bit young this year, and yet still competitive and a threat in every game. Women's basketball had a marvelous season, and qualified for a Conference playoffs in only their second year of existence! They lost to Hopkins in a close game in the playoffs, and are clearly only a player or two away from the top of Conference. Men's and women's swimming were both outstanding this year. With only 2 weeks to go in the season, both teams were undefeated. Many school records were broken, and W.C. was a real contender in the Conference Championship. Men's tennis is not only the defending National Champion, but is realistically one of the best teams in the nation again this year! We look forward to supporting the team as they go to the NCAA's in May. The women's tennis team is much improved, and as of this printing will either be the Centennial Conference Champions or runner up. The baseball team is in the middle of the Conference and has shown the ability to beat any team on the right day. Both men's and women's lacrosse have worked their way through rebuilding seasons, which all programs must do from time to time. Both squads have stayed positive and given excellent efforts, and both programs will reap the rewards of this season in the years to come. Softball is a much improved team, with several outstanding freshman adding depth to a competitive squad. The Rowing program is powerful in quantity and quality. Both men and women boats are some of the best that W.C. has ever had, and some all-time firsts may be accomplished this year by these rowers.

Our student-athletes have excelled in the classroom, have been heavily involved in campus and community activities, and have given their best on the fields of competition. That is all we can ask of our people, and we are proud of them.

The sports editors of The Elm share this respect for W.C. athletes and would like to thank Bryan Matthews and the other coaches for their support and dedication this year.

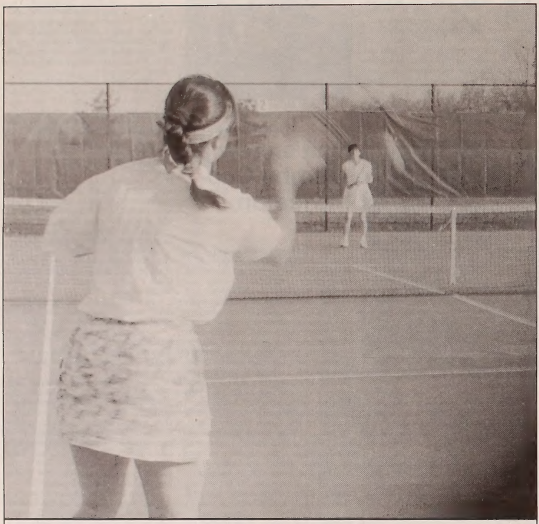

Photo by Dana Spicer

The women's tennis team will demonstrate its skill on Saturday at Gettysburg for Conference Championships.

Scores

Baseball

Washington 8
Haverford 5

Washington 1
Western Maryland 6

Washington 2
Western Maryland 9

Washington 6
Swarthmore 3

Softball

Washington 0
Dickinson 5

Washington 0
Dickinson 8

Washington 9
Gallaudet 1

Washington 11
Gallaudet 3

Men's Tennis

Washington 6
JHU 1

Women's Tennis

Washington 6
Dickinson 3

Men's Lacrosse

Washington 8
Salisbury 21

Women's Lacrosse

Washington 5
St. Mary's 17

Washington 4
Bryn Mawr 9

Where You Need To Be This Week!

Friday April 28
Baseball @ Swarthmore, 3 p.m.

Saturday April 29
Last Saturday home games of the year!
Baseball vs. Ursinus, 1 p.m.
Women's Lax vs. Muhlenberg, 1 p.m.
Softball @ Widener, 1 p.m.

Saturday April 29
Women's Tennis @ Gettysburg for CONFERENCE CHAMPIONSHIPS
Men's Tennis vs. Washington and Lee, 11 a.m.
Men's Lax vs. Washington and Lee, 1 p.m.
Crew hosts W.C. Invitational

Tuesday May 2
Baseball vs. Wesley 1 p.m.

7427 GD 839
5-05-96 4420A